The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. If the Chair is ready to rule, I do not care to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. The point of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is that this amendment is not germane. I question if the Chair has any doubt as to that proposition. The law establishes the payment of clerk hire to Members.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment changes the law.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman had refrained from interrupting me and had allowed me to follow my line of argument I would have gotten, later on, to that proposition. My friend is prone to criticize the gentleman from Missouri for interrupting and yet he himself interrupts. We should proceed in a parliamentary manner. However, I have no objection to the interruption.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition is germane. Why? Because we have here for consideration the subject matter of clerk hire to Members and Delegates already provided for by law. The manner in which it is paid is provided for by law. The original statute provides that the amount should be $100 per month during the sessions of Congress. The law was then amended so as to make it $1,200 a year, and afterwards, on an appropriation bill, it was provided that the amount should be $1,500 a year, and this bill contains a provision to pay $1,500 not authorized by law.

The original statute provides that each Member shall certify to the Clerk of the House that he has paid or contracted to pay for clerical services either a part of the amount or the full amount, and we sign that certificate, along with the receipts for our salaries, and the amounts are paid out in checks.

True, the amount is paid to the Member, but I presume each Member does as I do and follows the practice that I have followed since I have been receiving the amount, namely, of indorsing that check over to the person who does the work; and

I do not believe that there is any man in the House who does not properly dispose of that amount of money. But I do know that there are people, who are not familiar with the facts, who charge that Members of the House pay out only a certain amount of that money and then dispose of the rest in a way different from that contemplated by the statute.

Now the subject matter here is clerks and clerk hire to Members. The very provision reads, Mr. Chairman, that Representatives and Delegates to Congress whose credentials are in due form and have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House, in accordance with section 31 of the Revised Statutes, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation. Section 31 provides for a roll to be made up of the Members of the House, and the Members who go upon that roll are the men entitled to draw this money.

Now the proposition being to legislate in reference to clerk hire to Members and the law providing how it shall be disposed of and paid to the Members, this simply proposes to provide that it shall be paid by the Members to these people who are put upon the roll.

The Members still pay it, if they desire to do so, but the clerks go to the roll, to demonstrate to the House that the money of the Government appropriated for a certain purpose has been paid to the men who are entitled to receive it—it indicates to the House that the money has been paid to those who do the work as clerks to the Members, and who are as such clerks entitled to it, and the whole matter is made public, just as other persons who do service for the public as employees of the House are required to be placed on the rolls. It gives publicity and prevents criticism and disarms censure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to continue the discussion. The amendment is germane. We have engaged here in legislating about a proposition that is not authorized by law, so far as the amount is concerned. We have amended this provision of law by new legislation. I do not think this is such legislation as is forbidden by the rule. It simply provides the manner in which the money shall be spent; it limits the way in which it shall be paid out. I have offered it for the purpose of giving to this House an opportunity to do that which it ought to have done from the inception of this law, to wit, that the money shall be paid to the clerks, and thus insuring that these insinuations, innuendoes, and charges against the Members of the House, sometimes made, once and for all time may be met and dispelled. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, this bill as it now stands does not appropriate to pay any clerks. It appropriates to pay each Member for clerk hire necessarily employed by him.

Now, the only illegality in this provision in the bill is simply in the matter of the amount to be paid to each Member—$1,500—whereas the act of Congress says $1,200. The amendment offered proposes a new, distinct, substantive proposition of direct legislation, not upon the question of the amount involved. I will simply take the time of the Chair and of the committee to call attention to the language of a ruling made on the 29th of March, 1904, the Chairman at that time being THEODORE E. BURTON, of Ohio, now sitting in the body at the other end of the Capitol. He said:

> The Chair, though somewhat doubtful, thinks this is the best rule, that if a paragraph has been included in the bill which has in it a taint of illegality or of being contrary to existing law, that paragraph can be corrected or perfected by an amendment; but if the paragraph which is proposed as an amendment carries a further degree of illegality, affecting the whole paragraph as amended, then it is not in order.

At a subsequent time a similar question came before the House. I find it reported in section 3837 of Hinds' Precedents. Mr. Sherman, of New York, now Vice President of the United States, ruled to the contrary. An appeal was taken, and the decision of the Chair was overruled by a vote of 86 to 109. It seems to me, upon these authorities and upon the plain proposition that this amendment bears an added taint of illegality, the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia proposes that the money for clerk hire shall be paid directly to the clerks?

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. COOPER. Or does it direct that the money shall be paid to the Member, and that he shall pay it to the clerk whose name is on the roll? I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] to say that this was new legislation, because it would direct the payment of the money directly to the clerk instead of to the Member.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will permit, I do not desire to be understood as saying that exactly, but it does direct that the clerk shall be put upon the roll of the House. It is not a limitation upon the appropriation at all. It is a positive direction that the Members' clerks shall be put upon the roll of employees of the House.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, may I say one word as to that? It seems to me that this ought to be construed in such a way as will make the best law, if there is any doubt as to the proper construction, and the best law would be a law which would absolutely compel an honest payment of this money. Now, as I look at it, Mr. Chairman, the original proposition in the bill is that the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall receive for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official duties as Representative, $1,500 per annum; and the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] does not change that at all, except in the way of identifying positively the clerk who is to receive the money. That is all. It leaves it to the Member of the House to pay it to the man whom he hires, but simply puts in the law a method of identifying the payee. That is all. It ought to be in order upon grounds of the highest public policy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The law provides that each Member of Congress is entitled to receive $1,200 a year for clerk hire. The Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill, in conformity to the action of a number of Congresses that have preceded this one, has reported a provision allowing each Member of Congress and Delegate $1,500 a year for clerk hire. That provision is clearly contrary to existing law. It has no legal authority in the bill under the rules of the House. It is legislation on an appropriation bill not warranted by law and in violation of Rule XXI of this House.

But the provision having been read, and no Member of the House having made a point of order against it in the bill until an amendment was offered, under the rules and precedents of the House it is now not subject to a point of order, and it stands out independent of existing law. It does not come into this bill as a part of existing law, but stands out as an original amendment, offered by the committee–and it would be the same thing if it was offered by a Member on the floor of this House—that is, contrary to the rules of the House because it amends the existing law.

Now, two points are made against this amendment as it stands. One is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia seeks to change existing law, and therefore is not in order as an amendment to the provision offered by the committee. The other is that it is not germane to the provision offered by the committee.

As the provision offered by the committee itself is in violation of existing law, and stands before this House without warrant of law to sustain it, and can only stand here because a point of order is not made against it, it seems to the Chair clear that a point of order can not be made against the amendment to the provision that is in violation of existing law on the ground that the amendment is in violation of existing law, provided the amendment is germane to the provision offered by the committee, both being in violation of law, the point of order not having been made to it and it being too late to make it.

Then, the only other question is whether or not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is germane to the provision in the bill as amended by the gentleman from Illinois. That provision, as it now stands, reads:

> To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia provides that all clerks to Members and Delegates shall be placed on the rolls of the employees of the House, and be subject to removal at the will of the Member or Delegate by whom they are appointed, and any Member or Delegate may appoint one or more clerks who shall be placed on the rolls as the clerk of such Member or Delegate out of said appropriation.

Now, the original provision does not provide for the employment of clerks by the House, but it provides that appropriations shall be made from which Members of the House may employ clerks themselves. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia does not provide that these clerks shall be a part of the clerical force of the House; it merely provides that the Members appointing the clerks shall enroll them on the rolls of the House, clearly carrying the intention that those who are employed shall be known; and that intention is clearly demonstrated by the provision, because it does not designate how many clerks shall be employed by each Member. Under this provision one Member may employ one clerk at $2,000 a year and another Member may employ four clerks at $500 a year, clearly showing that the provision does not intend to make them a part of the clerical force of the House, but is merely intended to make the Member who receives this money designate who shall receive it on the rolls of the House.

It seems to the Chair that it is clearly in order [applause] to the original proposition to state how the Member shall designate who he is employing, and that he shall, on a fixed roll of the House, insert the names of the persons whom he has employed under this appropriation. [Applause.] The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to amend the amendment so as to include the Resident Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the Resident Commissioner. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House with any extended remarks. I think it is absolutely necessary and decent for us to adopt this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I thought when the amendment was read that the word "pay" was left out. Does the gentleman mean that the clerks that are put on the roll shall receive pay directly or that the money shall be paid to the Member?

Mr. BARTLETT. I hope that the construction will be that the money will be paid to the Member.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk report the last few words of the amendment in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the last part of the amendment, if there is no objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the rolls as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointment.

Mr. MANN. There was something said about pay in the amendment as read by the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair read the amendment into the original provision.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if the words "or clerks" ought not to be inserted after the word "clerk"?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection, although the singular includes the plural.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEFLIN) there were 76 ayes and 20 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage stamps for the Postmaster, $250; for the Clerk, $450; for the Sergeant at Arms, $300; and for the Doorkeeper, $150; in all, $1,150.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FINLEY having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 486 (H. Rept. 651).

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary in making the investigation authorized by House resolution 481 shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Amend, line 3, after the figures "481," by inserting the words "to an amount not exceeding $25,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, wait a moment. What is this investigation? We had a $25,000 resolution last week. What is the purpose of this?

Mr. LLOYD. This is an investigation that is authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HILL. To investigate what?

Mr. BARTLETT. The Money Trust and everything connected with it.

Mr. LLOYD. We had a trust resolution a few days ago in regard to the Money Trust question.

Mr. HILL. I thought that was before the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. LLOYD. Part of the original resolution goes to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and part to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HILL. I would like to inquire if we are to have another resolution from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to authorize them to expend $25,000?

Mr. LLOYD. That has already been done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me two or three minutes?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, resolution 405, which I think was the original resolution, was divided up in substance by a resolution between various committees including the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee, by resolution of the House, was authorized to carry on any investigation it pleased within its jurisdiction which were referred to in resolution 405, but subsequently the House, the other day, repassed the substance of everything in House resolution 405, and directed the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate the whole subject.

I do not oppose this resolution, because I am quite willing, if gentlemen on that side of the House are determined, for them to show either how extravagant or how inefficient the committees are when they have appointed one committee for making one investigation that they shall appoint another committee to make the same investigation, because this is work that the Committee on the Judiciary ought to do. I agree with the gentleman that the Judiciary Committee ought to do it. We have already passed a resolution of the House directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to do it and another resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to do it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a day or two ago a gentleman came to me at my office to show me a series of blanks, which I understand are issued under the authority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, calling upon every State as well as national bank in the United States for information over which this Congress has not the slightest particle of control.

Mr. BARTLETT. State banks?

Mr. HILL. State banks—under this provision spending money when every particle of information with reference to national banks which is sought for by those questions can be obtained in the comptroller's office without any expenditure of money, and the facts sought to be obtained from the State banks Congress has no jurisdiction over. Now, I have not the slightest particle of objection to voting $25,000 to get new and original information, but to duplicate work that has already been done and secure information which we have no control over seems to me to be unwise expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. If the Aldrich Currency Commission did not send these blanks to all the banks of the country?

Mr. HILL. They were authorized to do it by direct act of Congress, and, in my judgment, it has accomplished no good whatever. I was opposed to it in the beginning. I think it has been useless work for the last five years, as it has been carried on, and I am opposed to the proposition which the Aldrich Currency Commission submitted. I believe you can not build up a sound currency system on a false foundation, and therefore I am opposed to the whole thing, unless the fiat money at the base of the system now can be eliminated.

But if you can get any information that is of value in this way, that is not already in the comptroller's office in the Treasury Department, I have no objection. But I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is absolutely useless to spend thousands and thousands of dollars in duplicating work which is already done and paid for.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, it is not expected that these committees shall duplicate their work. The Judiciary Committee was authorized by a resolution of the House to perform certain work, and it is necessary in the performance of that work that they incur certain expense, and this simply provides that that expense may be made and may be met out of the contingent fund of the House. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CRAYON PORTRAITS OF EX-SPEAKERS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 264) which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 264 (H. Rept. 649).

Whereas for many years there have been hanging upon the walls of the Speaker's Lobby crayon portraits of ex-Speakers James K. Polk, John Bell, Howell Cobb, John W. Davis, M. C. Kerr, Schuyler Colfax, Robert M. T. Hunter, Andrew Stevenson, Philip Barbour, J. W. Jones, John G. Carlisle, John White, Linn Boyd, Jonathan Dayton, J. L. Orr, Langdon Cheeves, Nathaniel Macon, and William Pennington; and

Whereas by resolution of the Sixty-first Congress these portraits were ordered substituted by oil paintings which are now being hung in place of said crayon portraits: Therefore be it

Resolved, That as soon as said portraits are substituted the crayon portraits be given to the States whose Representatives said ex-Speakers were, and that the Clerk of the House shall ship said crayon portraits to the secretary of state of the several States entitled to receive them, and inform said officials that said portraits are given by Congress to said States.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "States," insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of the cost of transporting said portraits shall be paid by the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. These portraits are to be given to the States.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that this is an application for unanimous consent, but I do not desire to object. You say you give them to the States. Usually the State is represented by its officials instead of by itself, and you direct that the portrait shall be sent to the secretary of state and he shall receive it. It seems to me that we ought to have some way of communicating with the representatives of the State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this a simple resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. I am inclined to think it is complex.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am in earnest. Is it a House or a joint resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. It is a simple resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What right has the House by simple resolution to dispose of any property belonging to the House?

Mr. MANN. If there is no harm, let us dispose of them.

Mr. LLOYD. These crayon portraits are of no value, and the purpose of this is to authorize us to send these pictures, which are down in the crypt, to the States of the respective ex-Speakers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I wish to inquire is of the right of the House——

Mr. MANN. They are not an asset, but a liability. [Laughter.] We have the same power to do it as we have to clean out any other rubbish.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These crayon portraits were so offensive to the esthetic tastes of the Members of the House that we took them off of the walls of the Speaker's lobby, and now we are proposing to donate them to somebody in the belief that we are doing them a favor.

Mr. BARTLETT. Among these Speakers was a citizen of Georgia, Howell Cobb. I would think that if you are going to give them away, instead of sending them to the States, they ought to be given to the members of the families of those ex-Speakers.

I know that ex-Speaker Howell Cobb has daughters living at Athens, Ga., who would probably be glad to receive this portrait. I think the State of Georgia already has a large portrait of Howell Cobb hanging in the State library, or hanging somewhere else on the walls of the State capitol.

Mr. LLOYD. If it is given to the State and the State desires to do so, it can donate it to the family of Howell Cobb.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I will not object, but if there is going to be further discussion of it here to-night, I may.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] if it will be compulsory upon the States to receive these portraits. [Laughter.] There is nothing in the resolution about securing the consent of the States.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, let us have consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SISSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for one day, on account of important business.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have a request for unanimous consent which I have reduced to writing, and I ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the request submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 22143) to establish a qualified independent government for the Philippines, and to fix the date when such qualified independence shall become absolute and complete, and for other purposes, and also House joint resolution 278, to authorize the President of the United States to secure the neutralization of the Philippine Islands and the recognition of their independence by international agreement, which bill and resolution have been favorably reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs and are now upon the calendar, shall have the same status as privileged reports of committees provided under the first section of paragraph 56 of Rule XI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I do not think he ought to present a request of that sort in a House where there are only a few Members present at 7 o'clock in the evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request to-night.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not responsible for the absence of Members.

Mr. MANN. It is now 7 o'clock.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the matter has been pending for some time, and I understand it has been agreed upon with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. MANN. This is a matter that affects the House, and it may affect the procedure of the House for the rest of the session, and therefore Members should be here when the order is presented.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, if unanimous consent is given, how would it affect unanimous consent given to bills reported by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. GARRETT. It would not affect that at all.

Mr. MANN. It would not affect that at all. This will be the continuing order for the balance of this year.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask if it is intended to consider both the bill and the resolution at the same time.

Mr. GARRETT. No; I suppose in the order in which they are named.

Mr. MANN. I do not like to object, but if the gentleman insists upon his request, I shall be compelled to.

Mr. GARRETT. In view of that suggestion, I shall have to withdraw it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman if, when the gentleman offers it again, he will not add "and that in the consideration of said bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union general debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill as reported, and matters relating thereto"?

Mr. GARRETT. I shall not object to that. Of course, when the matter comes up, if it is agreed to in this way, when unanimous consent is requested for the limitation of debate, that would be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman insist?

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman makes his suggestion in that way, I shall have to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his request.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6009. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, May 4, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Briant H. Wells, quartermaster, United States Army, the sum of $850.05 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury (H. Doc. No. 727); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23461) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Millard, Ky., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 650), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

By Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted minority views on the bill (H. R. 23635) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," which views were referred to the House Calendar. (H. Rept. 612, pt. 2.)

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 4, 1912.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, May 2, 1912.)

The Senate met, after the expiration of the recess, at 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Senate bill 5382 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, I ask leave to report back House bill 21477, the river and harbor bill, with certain amendments, and I submit a report (No. 697) thereon. I desire to state that at the earliest opportunity after the pending bill is disposed of I shall call up this bill.

I wish to state, further, that the bill as it came from the House appropriated a little over $24,000,000 in cash and $2,200,000 in continuing contracts. The Senate committee by its various amendments have added about $8,000,000 in cash to the bill, making the total amount of the bill somewhere about $34,000,000. One hundred and eighty-five amendments were offered in the Senate, involving $44,000,000. If we had adopted all those amendments we would have increased the bill to the extent of $44,000,000. We could not do that. We have endeavored to get a moderate bill. We were somewhat handicapped in this matter because of the exigency that arose on the Mississippi River. We have added to the bill, in respect to that portion of the river from the Passes up to Cape Girardeau, Mo., $2,500,000 beyond the bill as it passed the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is of opinion that it is somewhat in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement to admit other business, but if there be no objection the report will be received.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21477) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have the report printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed, under the rule.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I raise the question of the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent from the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senate proceeds to the regular order, I ask permission to introduce out of order, so that it may be printed, an amendment which I propose to offer to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728). I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I also ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the same matter may be printed in connection with the amendment and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and it will be printed with the accompanying letter.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask permission to have a short telegram read before the consideration of the bill is proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 3, 1912.

Hon. JEFF DAVIS, Washington, D. C.:

We, as representatives of Division 131, Order of Railway Conductors, implore that you use best efforts to defeat bill entitled "Workmen's compensation act."

J. B. MILLIKEN.
A. H. JOHNSON.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, are amendments other than committee amendments now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the committee amendments have been disposed of and that amendments are in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] desires to speak generally on the bill, and I will wait before offering the amendments formally.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I favor the general principles of the workmen's compensation bill. My opposition to the measure now pending before the Senate is due to the fact that I think the bill does not properly regard the rights of the employees of the railroad companies. I believe its passage would be a great injustice to them if it is passed in its present form.

I therefore desire to urge one of two courses with reference to it—either that it be allowed to go over until December, that the bill in its details may be studied thoroughly not only by the members of the committee who prepared it but by other Senators and by the public at large, or else, if the bill is to be passed now, that the existing rights of railroad employees be preserved to them and that the bill be made cumulative and not exclusive.

Why should this bill be pushed through so hurriedly? It is a measure of vast importance. It concerns the future of a very large part of the American people. There are nearly 1,800,000 men employed on the railroads. Estimating an average family of five, we would have nearly 10,000,000 of our people concerned in this bill.

When did the Senate rush through so hastily a measure which affected so many of the citizens of our country and affected them so vitally? This bill was only introduced in February. Only 30 days ago it was reported from the Judiciary Committee. What the Judiciary Committee intended to present to the country has been known but 30 days. The men interested in this measure have not spoken upon it. The telegrams which you have received commending this measure have not been received since the measure was perfected and since the men knew what the measure was.

I wish to urge upon Senators that they have not heard from the railroad employees on this measure as it is. Why do Senators object to delay? Next week one of the strongest organizations of railroad men meets in annual convention at Harrisburg, Pa. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will meet on the 8th there. One or two of the chief officers of that association have approved this bill, but the rank and file have been muzzled. They have been prevented from presenting their protest to you. To my certain knowledge one of their leaders came here, intending to appear before the Judiciary Committee, but, learning that not only his membership but the membership of his lodge might be withdrawn if he appeared, he concluded that he could render more service staying inside the order than by quitting it. Now, within two weeks you can hear from them. If you rush this bill through at once, you prevent them from having a hearing.

The Firemen's Brotherhood, one of the four largest organizations of railroad men, has been relieved, so that they can express themselves, and you are beginning to hear from them. About two weeks ago the conductors, finding dissatisfaction among their men, were relieved, and you are hearing from them. During the summer the principal organizations of most of these bodies will meet. Of course, if you pass the bill now, you will prevent them from letting you hear from them. If you wait until December, you will find out what they really think about it.

Ah, Senators, with the facts before you, you can not defend a vote for this bill upon the theory that the men have asked for it, for to your attention is brought the fact that the men have not asked for it. There are two heads of organizations here still pressing it—a Mr. Lee and a Mr. Wills. We heard from Mr. Lee through a paper or an argument he presented replying to an article from the chief justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, in which he went on to denounce the author of the article as an ambulance chaser. His language reminded me of the railroad claim agent's, and it sounded like one of that class prepared his article for him.

If the balance of his statement is no more accurate than his characterization of the writer of the article about which he complains, who has for 20 years been upon the supreme court bench of North Carolina and for 10 years chief justice of that bench, his statements are entitled to but little credit.

We heard yesterday of an article sent by Mr. Wills to engineers throughout the country urging them to telegraph to Senators and Representatives to vote for this bill just as it is, without any amendment, for, he declared, "amendments are dangerous." Dangerous to whom? Not to the men. No one will suggest an amendment to this bill that will make it harder on the men. Dangerous, then, to whom? Necessarily to the railroad companies, for they have got everything in this bill that the ingenuity of a trained railroad lawyer could put into it to facilitate defense to their cases. I think every difficulty that the trained railroad lawyer ever met in conducting the defense of a case by an employee is carefully guarded in this bill. Dangerous, then, to whom? Dangerous to the railroads, not to the men. Dangerous to amend it, he says.

Why, the Senator from Utah yesterday presented three amendments, one of which modified the autopsy provisions in the original bill, the provision that allowed the railroad claim agents, at their own volition, to take up and cut up as they saw fit any railroad employee killed in the line of his work. It required no judicial discretion to let them do it; it was an arbitrary right given to them. The Senator from Utah has presented an amendment modifying that clause. Yet Mr. Wills insisted that any kind of an amendment was dangerous. Dangerous to take the 16-year limit off the daughters? Why, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was shocked on yesterday when he understood that the 16-year-old girl of a dead railroad man was to be turned off without a dollar. No matter how completely the negligence of the railroad company was responsible for his death, no matter how completely free from criticism had been his conduct, the 16-year-old daughter was to be turned off with nothing; and when the Senator from Utah was questioned about it, he excused the bill by suggesting that there were others to be taken care of. Now, he has put a modification upon that provision. Yet Mr. Wills tells us that any amendment would be dangerous. I do not believe Mr. Wills will be here next December representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

I ask that this bill go over until fall, because there are many objections to it. There are many things in it that can be improved, or, at least, where the rights of the employees may be broadened without injustice to the railroad companies; and before their rights are cut off at common law and at statute law and this bill substituted exclusively as their means of redress it is not unreasonable to insist that the fullest time be given to the men involved—not just to Lee and Wills, but to the men themselves who meet in their national conventions next week and during the coming summer to consider these questions and to be heard before us. Is that unreasonable? Why object to it? It is so important to them; it is of such infinite importance to them.

But Senators say, "True, there are defects about the bill, but we will pass it and correct it in later years." What about the poor fellows who are hurt in the meantime? Correcting 5 or 10 years from now will not do them any good. You will have taken away from them their rights by passing this bill; you will have passed it without giving them a chance to be heard; and though you may correct the defects of the bill within the next 10 years, that will not do any good to the widows and orphans whose husbands and fathers are killed in the meantime. It will not do any good to the men themselves who are injured in the meantime.

Now, if you hope to perfect it in a few years, why not leave them their present rights under existing laws? Why not let it go over until December and perfect it before you put it on them? That is all I am asking. I am urging the Senate to do one of two things—to leave them their present rights under existing laws, while this present measure is being tried and being perfected, or that you let the bill go over until December, that the bill itself may be perfected after the men themselves have been heard.

The present rights of the men have just been established. For years they have been fighting to obtain them; for years they have been fighting to be relieved from the inhuman line of decisions that followed Priestly v. Fowler, decisions that regarded money as of more consequence than life; decisions that took care of a man's freight and paid him a hundred cents on the dollar for it, but built around human life and human limb a line of rulings that allowed life and limb to be taken without compensation. At last the beneficent act passed by Congress in 1908 has been fully sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States; only in February it was sustained; and now, just as it is established, just as the Supreme Court has declared that it is the law, you strike it down. Ah, Senators, is that right? Is it right, just as the law they have fought for so long has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, to strike it down?

If you put into this bill a provision that it shall not be exclusive, if you leave the men their present rights until we try this bill, and in a few years' time, through experience, perfect it and then make it exclusive, I shall have nothing to say. If you merely make it cumulative instead of exclusive I shall join the men who favor it and vote for it.

The English law in many respects has been used as the basis of the proposed law, but the English law provides that the remedy shall be cumulative. The English workmen's compensation act preserves to the men their common-law rights; it preserves to the men their statutory rights under the employers' liability act, and it gives them a workmen's compensation act in addition. This bill is stricter on the men than the English workmen's compensation act; it is harder on them than that act in the fact that it cuts off from them their statutory and common-law rights in addition to the compensation act.

Let me call your attention to the trouble about making this bill the exclusive remedy. The constitutionality of this bill and the meaning of the bill will be questioned. In the proceedings of the commission will be found an elaborate criticism upon the constitutionality of this bill; strong arguments were presented against its constitutionality. I shall not discuss them, but I only call attention to the matter sufficiently to show that the constitutionality of this bill must go to the courts. Suppose it is held to be unconstitutional, as the first employers' liability act was held to be, then what becomes of the men?

Leave them their present rights until this bill has been tested; wait until it is held constitutional before you strike down their existing rights. That is what I am pleading for.

Then, what does it mean? There is a great deal of doubt.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to inquire of the Senator how it would destroy existing rights if the court should find that the statute was invalid?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They would be in abeyance in the meantime.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They would be in abeyance, but they would not be destroyed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The statute of limitations might run against them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That would mean a very long litigation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will take three years to go to the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of this bill. It has taken us nearly four years to carry the present employers' liability bill through to the Supreme Court. It was passed in May, 1908, and the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered in February, 1912.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply desire to ask the Senator if he knows what the Federal statute of limitations is, if there is any, against a claim of this kind?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Federal statute, I think, is two years under the employers' liability act. The Federal statute of limitations would be superseded by the statutes of the various States in some instances, and the statutes of the different States would be suspended, so far as the men involved in interstate commerce are concerned, by this bill. Congress having provided a remedy, it would take the place of the State statute.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator think the State statutes would govern a proceeding in a Federal court under a Federal statute?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; but it would govern the rights in a State court at common law; and if it is constitutional it strikes down and suspends the jurisdiction of the State courts as to all interstate-commerce employees.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that there was no Federal statute placed in abeyance under the employers' liability act while that act was being tested in the courts of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that was not exclusive in any sense. Mr. CARY in a most elaborate argument debated the constitutionality of this bill, and other briefs were filed attacking its constitutionality. As I have said, I shall not argue the proposition as to its constitutionality. To be frank, I do not know what the Constitution does mean or where we are going to stop on this subject. We have already gone further than I thought we could, and I would not venture an opinion and I would not place great reliance upon the opinion of anybody else about where it will stop. I think we shall know where it will stop when the Supreme Court settles it; but with that question involved, why make this remedy exclusive?

I said that the meaning of the bill was doubtful. I am not so much criticizing the phraseology of the bill as the necessary doubt as to the meaning of such a bill. Why make a remedy of this kind exclusive when you are reaching out into a new field full of doubt?

The bill provides that—

> Any employee who, while employed in such commerce by such employer, sustains personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

When is he and when is he not to be considered employed in such commerce? That is a very important question for construction, and it will have to be construed before we will know. When will it be determined that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment? That is a matter for construction. Will it apply to men in the shops? Will it apply to men in the yards? Take the case of a railroad beginning in a State and ending in a State and yet engaged in interstate commerce. To what extent and where will it apply to men employed by that railroad? In the record will be found a statement presented to the commission by the attorney general of the State of Washington, calling their attention to the fact that upon these questions the district courts have disagreed already. If you leave the employee his present remedy, he can bring his suit; he can put in two counts; he can plead both ways; he can protect himself from the loss of his rights while the meaning of this bill is being determined.

Nearly all the State statutes are made cumulative or optional and elective, yet this bill, just as the employers' liability act is decided to be constitutional, though the men for three or four years have been held in a sea of doubt—this bill is to be substituted for the established law, and for another term of years they are to be left in doubt, if this bill repeals existing laws. What I ask is that in fairness, if this bill must pass now—and I understand you have the votes to pass it; I understand that some Senators on this side will vote for it—but if it is to be passed now, I plead with you do not strike down the existing remedies and put these men in a condition of utter doubt.

If you take the plan provided in this bill for serving a petition before the adjuster and leave it as it is to-day, it will be a most difficult matter to secure service. I defy any lawyer to take the plan of service and to know just how to serve a petition. The bill certainly must be amended in that respect. It tells you how to serve the process, but how you can do what it tells you is a very different thing.

We are told that this bill is intended to stop waste; it is designed to do away with the existing laws because the existing laws permit litigation, and this is a beneficent scheme that is to terminate litigation. The Senator who supports this bill upon that theory is ready to chase a rainbow whenever its presence is suggested. In the first place, the amount of litigation on the part of the railroad employees is rapidly decreasing; the amount of litigation is much less in comparison with the number injured than the discussion of this question by the advocates of this bill indicates, and I will prove that by the record before the commission.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] asked the Senator from Georgia if he knew what was the limitation in the present Federal statute. I desire to read the limitation provision in that statute. It is as follows:

> SEC. 6. No action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that was hardly what I desired to know. I was asking that question on the assumption that this bill might be tested by a proceeding in the court and might finally be held to be unconstitutional, say at the end of three or four years. Would that affect existing rights under the present liability law?

Mr. REED. Beyond question, unless this bill is amended so as to avoid the limitation which I have just read; that is to say, the section I have just read requires the action to be brought under the present Federal statute within two years from the date of the injury. If a man is injured and he proceeds under this present bill, assuming it to be his proper and exclusive remedy, and two years elapse pending that litigation, and it is then decided that this bill is unconstitutional, and he then goes back and undertakes to bring his action under the existing Federal statutes, he would be met by the bar of the time limitation therein expresssed. This is true beyond any earthly question. Such a litigant would be out for all time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is a more serious trouble than that. We are dealing with a class of people who need their money at once. Even if you save them the statute at the end of three years, you have stopped them from their rights for three years. You are dealing with children and widows; you are dealing with men in many cases without means, who depend upon their daily labor for their livelihood, and when you stop their rights after they are injured, so that they can not earn a living, then the fact that you give back to them the right to sue three years later does not sustain them in the suffering and the want you have put on them in the meantime. The preservation of the statute of limitations is not the redress—and just here I am going to stop to say that in my plan, or the plan I would advocate, of a workmen's compensation act, I have a view radically different from this bill in this regard. It provides that for two weeks after injury nothing is to be paid. My own view is that every workmen's compensation act should provide a scheme whereby for the first 30 days, at least, during which a man is suffering from an injury he should draw his pay and draw it promptly, so as to keep want away from his door while he is suffering from such physical injury. That is the German theory for treating this question.

Since the interruption I have turned to the expression of opinion by the attorney general of the State of Washington that I contemplated reading to the Senate but for the fact that I could not find it instantly. He says:

> First, the carrier must be engaged in interstate commerce; and, second, the employee must be engaged in interstate commerce. The decisions, even the few that we now have, are in absolute conflict. For instance, Judge Kershon in the Pennsylvania district court has held that a workman engaged in repairing a bridge is not within the provisions of the Federal liability act; another district court has come to exactly the contrary conclusion. Former Judge Whitson, of the eastern district of Washington, held that a brakeman engaged in repairing a brake was engaged in repairing cars.

I come to the theory presented to support this bill that it would largely eliminate litigation and that now nearly all claims are litigated. I find, Senators, in the record the testimony of Mr. Whiting, the claim agent who has been criticized and who may or may not be entirely worthy, but who has gotten up some figures, a portion of which I will use. He has undertaken to ascertain certain facts about accidents and payments for accidents during a three-year period on 25 per cent of the railroads in the United States, and the result of his statement is that of the claims against these roads amounting to 41,571, all were settled except 344, which went to judgment.

It is but fair to say that some of these settlements were cases in which suit was first brought, but it is equally fair to claim from his testimony that the great bulk of the cases are now settled without litigation, and the percentage of settlements which he presents under the existing law is greater than the percentage of Germany and England under their workmen's compensation acts.

Again, the amount paid out for settlements was $8,567,636, while the amount by judgment was $800,748. Again, you will find in the record, at page 1196, the testimony of Mr. Warfield, counsel for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, in which he declares that 95 per cent of the accidents on his road are settled without litigation; settled directly with the parties injured without any employment of counsel at all, and that only 5 per cent of the cases go into the hands of attorneys.

It is very easy to protect the railroad man from exorbitant charges by attorneys. We can amend the employers' liability act and provide that in no case shall a contingent fee be more than 20 per cent, and that in no case of settlement without an actual trial shall it be over 10 per cent; and under this bill, creating almost absolute liability, removing the defenses that have heretofore been the cause of litigation, that compensation would be ample.

Now, this new act will lessen settlements. It withdraws the inducement to settle. It cuts down the amount of recovery in cases of trial so strongly that the railroads will litigate, because they will not have anything, scarcely, to pay, even if they lose, and they will insist that the employee take what they offer, for even if they litigate they will not have much to pay.

This large volume of settlements now made are to avoid litigation. They are due to the danger of much larger payments if litigation takes place; and now, if you adopt this bill, under which, even if litigation takes place, nothing scarcely could be recovered, you encourage the railroad companies to litigate.

I said that this new bill furnishes a wide field for litigation—in the first place, as to the constitutionality of the bill, to which I have referred; in the second place, as to the meaning of the terms of the bill, the character of the position occupied by the employee; and then, gentlemen, comes a most artistic piece of work. It is the creation of this adjuster. The name is misleading. I do not think it was exactly right to all these men over the country to call him an adjuster, because the idea went out to them that when they came to this adjuster he was to pay them. That is not his authority at all. He is a Federal trial judge, appointed by the district court judge. He has no power over a case except to hear it when it is brought to him and try it under the evidence.

The next thing that is artistic and misleading about this bill is the way in which the case is to be brought before the adjuster. Instead of telling the employee just plainly, "You may bring your suit before that judge," the bill states that a little communication is to be presented to him. Why not call it what it is? A suit, a lawsuit before a man authorized by law to try it. This adjuster is to be a trial judge without a jury, and the little notice the bill requires is the declaration filed before him and which is to be answered by the defendant. It is the machinery for litigation. It is not expressed in terms to carry a clear conception of its effect.

Just here let me stop and say that there is no provision in this bill which will enable the plaintiff to get his witnesses or get his testimony if the witnesses are outside of the district. The bill does not say he can take testimony by deposition, to be used before this master or judge. It does not say "you may take it by interrogatories." Of course the railroad does not take its testimony in that way. It has the cooperation of the other railroads, and it brings its witnesses on free transportation, but the plaintiff must rely upon depositions and interrogatories to get his testimony. Nobody was working on the employees' side when this bill was framed. That was not thought of. It was the claim agents and the attorneys for the railroads who were before the commission who suggested everything they needed. There is absolutely no provision in this bill by which a plaintiff can get a witness outside of the jurisdiction of the trial judge called adjuster.

Then comes this privilege with reference to an appeal. It is a de novo trial. Anyone familiar with defending railroad suits knows how the railroad attorney loves to have another trial when he has lost the first time; how he seeks it. Here this bill says, "You try this case before this judge without a jury. You can take it right on up and have a brand new trial in the court above, if you want it." How it takes care of the troubles that have surrounded them! That is not all.

After it has been tried before the judge in any court above, within two years, whenever they seek it, the railroad can have another hearing. The case can be brought up anew before this trial judge without a jury, called adjuster, and another hearing can be had, and if the defendant is not satisfied with the second hearing, a third hearing can be had, and there is no limitation in this bill as to the number of times a case can be brought up anew before this trial judge without a jury.

Second, the employee can not use this remedy. He is cut off from his wages, a cripple, and if he can pull through one trial he is fortunate. He will need somebody's help. Without the privilege of creating any lien on what he recovers, with what is to come to him, a bare pittance, without the privilege of making a contract with counsel, he can be harassed by trial after trial and trial after trial. It would pay the railroads to do it. They can appeal and lessen the danger by harassing the employee with such innumerable trials that it will pay better for him to take anything that is offered.

Senators, I do not believe there is one railroad man in fifty who will stand for this measure, and after they have suffered from it a little while there will not be one in five hundred; and what I want to impress here is that these telegrams do not speak from the men about this measure, and Senators can not, when they return to their homes and find the distress they have brought, blame it on the men for having brought it on themselves, because the RECORD will be full of the fact that the Senate has been advised how little the men have had to do with it. Will Senators vote for such a measure?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Georgia has made what to my mind is a startling statement about this bill. I understood the Senator to say that after the trial before the adjuster, if the railroad desired it, it was entitled to have another trial before the court, and if the result of that trial was not satisfactory to the railroad, it was entitled to have another trial, and if that was not satisfactory, still another trial.

I should like, if I have understood the Senator correctly, to have him tell us upon what condition, if any, these additional trials would be allowed. That is to say, does the Senator mean to say that the railroad, having had its hearing before the adjuster and once before the court, could without any assignment of error in the decision of the court have another trial?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Simply by asking for one?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. I will explain what the bill means on that subject and what I think of it. The bill provides that during two years the railroad company, even after hearing, can have the employee reexamined by physicians, and have one or more additional hearings. Either the railroad or the man can do that. The man can apply for an increase of his pay at any time within two years and have another reference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I understand the Senator to mean that if the railroad people want another hearing, after the court has once decided it, it would be necessary to allege a change in the condition of the plaintiff?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The hearing follows as a matter of course. Permission to have a second hearing is not necessary. The bill gives them the right to apply to the adjuster and to have another hearing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill provides that at any time within two years either party may apply to the adjuster, and upon showing that the disability has increased or decreased or ceased there may be an adjustment of the order for compensation.

If the Senator will permit me, that provision is a very usual one.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not yield now for a speech. I yielded for your statement of fact, but not for a speech. I prefer to go on with my own speech. The Senator can make his speech when I get through.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not interrupt the Senator further, with that admonition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is precisely what I said at the outset with reference to the bill—that the provision to the employee is worthless. If he can drag through his two trials, he is doing very well; but he can be, at the option of the railroad, any time it sees fit within two years, carried before the adjuster and another hearing had before the adjuster at the pleasure of the railroad company. That is what I said.

I said that this bill arbitrarily gives to each side the right to apply, within two years, for a hearing before the adjuster.

Mr. SIMMONS. That application for a new hearing or a rehearing would be based upon an allegation of a change in the physical condition of the plaintiff, would it not? I am simply asking for information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator first to say that it is a matter of right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a matter of right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Without any change in the original status as it was presented to the trial court or the adjuster, the railroad or the plaintiff can ask for a rehearing?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I say it is a matter of right.

Mr. SIMMONS. And does not depend upon the changed condition of the plaintiff?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The hearing is a matter of right.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is there nothing left to the discretion of the court?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not as to whether there shall be another hearing. The hearing arbitrarily follows the application.

Mr. SIMMONS. But there must be an allegation of a change in the physical condition of the plaintiff.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not say there must be such an allegation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then it seems to me there is a provision in this bill violative of every principle of jurisprudence of which I have ever heard.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will to call attention to a fact, but not to discuss the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call attention to it because I am sure the Senator does not want to misrepresent the bill. The section referred to is section 11 on page 11. It says that—

> The judgment may be from time to time reviewed by the adjuster upon the application of either party, after due notice to the other party, upon the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently ended, increased, or diminished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the review itself is a matter of course. It is an arbitrary right to have the review. It is just exactly as I said it was—the arbitrary right, as many times as they see fit, to drag the employee before this adjuster and have other hearings. There is no limitation as to the discretion of the adjuster to reduce the amount allowed. It is true that it purports to give it to the employee as well as the employer, but what I insist upon, Senators, is that the employee who can pull through one trial and live has done all he can, and that this provision gives to the railroad companies, the defendants, a right which will enable them to so annoy the plaintiffs as to force them to take anything claim agents offer.

There could not be a provision framed by the ingenuity of a corporation counsel—no lawyer who ever represented railroad companies could suggest a provision—to put the railroad employee more perfectly in the hands of the claim agent.

Litigation stopped? There never was a bill framed that more perfectly provided litigation and litigation and litigation, and all at the expense of the workmen.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from North Carolina asked a question a moment ago, that, in case there was an adjudication of this matter and a subsequent review of the case was desired, whether it would not be a part of the allegation that there had been a change in the condition of the person. If I understand the Senator from Georgia, he means to say that whenever there is a request for the reopening of the case it has to be granted, but it is predicated upon a change in the condition of the individual who had been injured.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There does not have to be any application for a reopening. There is an application for another hearing, and the other hearing takes place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But is it not predicated upon some change in the condition of the party?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will read the language of the proposed bill:

> At any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the accident, but not afterwards, and before the expiration of the period for which payment of compensation has been fixed thereby, but not afterwards, any agreement, award, findings, or judgment may be from time to time reviewed by the adjuster upon the application of either party, after due notice to the other party, upon the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently ended, increased, or diminished. Upon such review the adjuster may increase, diminish, or discontinue the compensation from the date of the application for review.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is the very point I wanted to call attention to. The phraseology says upon the allegation that there is a change in the condition of the plaintiff. That is the only point I wanted to get at.

If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I understand the point he is making is that the railroads, being in a better financial condition, can call for this review, and as a matter of fact, under the terms of the bill, they can do it upon their allegation at any time they see fit.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And the other man is not financially able to do the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And they can bring him in and bring him in and bring him in.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is the point in this matter: All that is required is the mere naked allegation, the mere filing of a statement, "We demand a review and allege that there has been a change of condition." Without any preliminary showing of a change of condition, but upon the mere naked allegation, the review takes place. There is no penalty of any kind if the allegation is found upon the trial to be false, and there is no provision to protect the man against being dragged into the various parts of the district following up the adjuster, and nothing to protect him against the expense of again bringing his witnesses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not only that, but he can be again examined by the doctors for the railroad from time to time. Kindly this bill permits that when the doctors for the railroad examine him he may have a doctor at his own expense. How is the injured employee to pay for expert service to meet these innumerable examinations by the expert surgeon of the railroad? Can anybody conceive anything that can be suggested to be added to this bill that would help the railroad company or its counsel in defending a suit? There is no provision for the pay of the physician of the poor fellow who is hurt. There is nothing to help him out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not if he gains the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; not if he gains the case. He can not be treated except by their physician. If he has his own physician he must pay him himself. He can not recover reasonable compensation for his own doctor if his doctor treats him. No; the railroad company must furnish the doctor if it pays him, and just as often for two years as claim agent wants to have the employee examined he will have it done.

There are some expert physicians and there are some expert witnesses who are physicians, and to their examination he must submit, and when he gets his judgment it is not final. They can literally wear him out. I said that the imagination could not suggest anything to add to this bill that would help the claim agent make the man who was hurt take anything that was offered to him.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it would be enlightening to compare this particular feature of the bill with the existing law. When there is a suit and judgment is rendered under the existing law, that is final.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unless it is taken to a higher court.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Unless it is taken to a higher court, and there is some grounds to set it aside; but when we have adjudicated, that is the final settlement of the question, and the plaintiff knows exactly what he has and there is no possibility of a reopening of the case. Why is it that the limitations do not apply in the present law as in this proposed law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the existing law one trial, unless set aside, is final. Under the proposed law there can be two trials arbitrarily before a first judgment, and then the subsequent right for two years, just as often as the railroad company wants to do it, to carry the employee before this trial judge without a jury and have a rehearing, and a rehearing, and a rehearing. They were not content with saying that they could do it one time; it is from time to time that they are to do it. And this is your workmen's compensation law.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Georgia——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if he construes section 11 that in the case of an application for a new trial before the adjuster there is any jury trial provided at all at that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know what it means. It does not say.

Mr. CULBERSON. The language is:

> The findings of the adjuster upon such review shall be served on the parties and filed with the clerk of the court having jurisdiction, in like time and manner and subject to like disposition as in the case of original findings.

But so far as I can see this section does not provide for a jury trial upon such a review and refinding by the adjuster.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suppose they would be obliged to allow an appeal in each instance or else it would clearly be unconstitutional, if it is not clearly unconstitutional anyhow. That is an open question. That is one of the questions to be litigated by this bill that is lauded in a bill to terminate litigation. That is one of the things that is left in the air by this perfect measure that can not wait until next December for further consideration and investigation.

If a case on rehearing goes on up to the district court, then that means another expense to the plaintiff. If it does not go up then that means that arbitrarily the trial judge without a jury, called adjuster, can finally put the employee injured wherever he sees fit.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to have the Senator from Georgia draw the contrast sharply, if he will, between the conditions under the present law and what may be obtained under this mode of procedure. As I understand it, under the present law——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not wish to yield to anyone to make a speech at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Georgia can do that much more admirably than I can, and I would be glad to have him do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I tried to do that in my discussion of this case several days ago, which went into the RECORD and has been printed. It would take me quite a length of time to go over that question again. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I discussed very elaborately about three weeks ago that branch of the case, and it is in the RECORD; and it would require very much more time than I would wish now to give to go into it further.

As to the mere matter of procedure, there is a difference which I am pressing and which I did not press then—I believe the Senator from Arkansas had reference to the matter of procedure more than to anything else. Under the existing law an injured employee can sue in the State courts and try his case before a jury of his neighbors, who know him and know his character, and have one verdict, if it is not set aside, and that is the end of litigation. The case can not be removed to the United States court. Under this bill—

Mr. DAVIS. Right there, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that under one procedure the man gets the money and puts it in his pocket and under the other it drags along two years, because he is paid month by month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not prepared to say whether, in some instances, it would not be better to let them receive their pay not all in a lump sum. I am not pressing a final discussion of that question.

Under this bill, instead of the right of trial by jury in your own State courts, the employee must go before this trial judge, without a jury, appointed by the district court judge. He has no means to get the testimony of a witness by depositions or by interrogatories. Counsel making suggestions for the railroads, I suppose, knew that they could bring all their witnesses by train and they did not need depositions and interrogatories. His case can be forced into a second trial by an appeal to the district court before a jury. Then he can be brought before this adjuster for another hearing, and it may go up probably, and from time to time during the whole of two years he can be kept trying and trying and trying his case, and be examined and examined and examined by the physicians of the railroad company. And this is to be made the exclusive remedy for these men.

I have called attention to the fact that in all of these hearings certainly for some time the law will be unsettled as to what classes of employment and what classes of work will be covered by the act. The facts will be open for discussion and for litigation. The question of drinking, the question of intent, will still be left open. If the man is to be paid whose gross negligence causes the accident, why should not the man also be paid who took a drink? I am opposed to hiring a man on a railroad that takes a drink in service; but if this bill is so beneficent and wishes to take care of the man whose gross negligence is the exclusive cause of the injury, why strike out the man who took a drink?

How the injured employee at the time was employed is a question which will be open for litigation. Then what was the nature of his injury. Was it partial or total? Was it permanent or temporary? All these questions must be settled by this trial judge without a jury.

I do not think the counsel for railroads are fond of juries, and I should think they would be delighted with a trial judge without a jury.

Now, let me call your attention to the fact that the great bulk of injuries are injuries not referred to at all in these schedules of payments contained in the proposed bill.

Again, using Mr. Whiting's figures, of the injuries he settled 37,099 were temporary injuries while only 1,527 were permanent. This bill provides no schedule for any temporary injury. The amount of payment of every temporary injury is left perfectly open by this bill and a large part of permanent injuries are left open. Yet in the classification of 40,000 injuries that it was necessary for the railroad to settle, 37,000 of them were temporary injuries. This bill fixes no compensation at all for any of these cases.

With this trial judge without a jury, appointed by the Federal court judges to try the cases, and with the opportunity furnished to harass these 37,000 men who have temporary injuries, the injured employee will say: "I can not do anything; I am helpless; you can literally wear me out. I will take anything and go. You can furnish machinery to so harass me that I am at the mercy of the claim agent. Whatever the claim agent offers I must take."

According to Whiting's showing, over one-third of the entire amount that he paid out for injuries on the roads were temporary injuries. Gentlemen have talked about this bill increasing the burdens of railroads $5,000,000, without anything to base the statement on, until some of them actually believe it is so, and they have actually caused the President to publish that this bill will increase the amount the railroads will have to pay $5,000,000. I utterly repudiate such a proposition. There is not a thing to base it on. No one knows what the present legislation will make the basis of compensation, because it has not been tried, and they do not know what will be done by the claim agents under this proposed bill, and when they talk about increasing burdens $5,000,000 I am willing to attribute to most of them lack of knowledge and not insincerity of the statement.

At the outset of this discussion, when the bill was first mentioned upon the floor, I questioned the accuracy of that statement by the Senator from Utah, and after examining the record I see that he has nothing to base it on.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. REED. If I am not interrupting the Senator, as applicable to the point he has just made, viz, that more settlements are now made than will be made under the pending bill, I desire, with the Senator's consent, to read a statement from Mr. R. C. Richards, the claim agent of the Northwestern Railway, made at the claim agents' meeting on the 25th to 27th of May, 1910. I read it in corroboration of the figures the Senator has given and of his statement. Mr. Richards said:

> But there are one or two points I would like to make in connection with the subject; that is, that these new statutes—> have practically taken away the defenses of fellow servant, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence. In other words, they have practically given every employee who is injured a right of action if there is any negligence on the part of the employer. That is about where we have gotten to. That being so, it becomes essential and extremely necessary that the claim departments and men connected with claim departments be efficient and capable. That instead of making lawsuits we should make settlements. We all know how many claims a $10,000 verdict will settle. We all know that every time we have a personal injury of any severity and we have litigation we are running the risk of a $10,000 verdict—

That is, the Federal statutes—

He might have said a $50,000 verdict.

> We all know how hard it is to get a verdict set aside after it is rendered. Therefore it seems to me it is essential that we should settle more cases and have less litigation. And in order to settle cases the claim department must be efficient. It must investigate cases to-day that have occurred on yesterday, and not next year, because next year the witnesses are scattered and the lawsuit has commenced and the people have been told what to testify to in order to make a case.

I pause here long enough to say that one question solemnly discussed by these claim agents was the availability and value of witnesses who frequently came to them offering to sell their testimony. I proceed with the reading.

> It is therefore important, it seems to me, that the investigation should follow immediately after the accident, and that when the facts are arrived at so that the man who is to adjust the claim can pass on it, the settlement should follow immediately after the investigation.

Now, note this language:

> Now, I think during the last 10 months the line I represent has had some 6,000 or 7,000 employees injured and something like a hundred killed, and out of that vast number of injured and killed, and that is about 80 per cent of our personal injuries, we had 40 lawsuits, and I think we had that small number of lawsuits because of the efficiency of the men who are working under me and their promptness in settling claims.

I think that fully sustains the Senator in his position that the present law makes for settlement, while the proposed law probably will make for litigation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there will not be any trouble about the fact that cases are going to be settled if the law is allowed to remain. The trouble is if they can not pass this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. REED. If in order, I should like to make a motion that we take a recess until 2 o'clock, and on that we can have the call of the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion is made that there is no quorum. Under the rule the roll must be called. Of course, if there is no quorum, the Senate can not take a recess.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But we can adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate can adjourn, but it can not take a recess. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Lodge	Root
Bacon	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Sanders
Bourne	Cummins	Myers	Shively
Brown	Fall	Nelson	Simmons
Bryan	Fletcher	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.
Burnham	Gardner	Overman	Smoot
Burton	Guggenheim	Owen	Stephenson
Catron	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Townsend
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Warren
Clapp	Jones	Perkins	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pomerene	Wetmore
Crawford	Lea	Richardson	Williams

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business of the Senate. I should like to have this announcement stand for all votes taken to-day.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. REED. I think it is only right that the Senator should be allowed time to get his lunch.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator, but that is entirely unnecessary. I am not the least bit fatigued. A few hours on my feet will not fatigue me physically at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that if he himself desires to get luncheon, I certainly will not object to a short recess.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe that we always ought to have a recess from half past 1 to 2, so that Senators may eat lunch at the same time and get back to the Chamber. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, but it is not essential.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is essential to some of the rest of us.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I accept the suggestion.

Mr. REED. I move that we take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Utah made a suggestion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the suggestion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That a recess be taken until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. REED. I will modify the motion to provide for a recess until half past 2, if that suits the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until half past 2. [Putting the question.]

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think Senators knew that was the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

I have been endeavoring to bring to the attention of the Senate, first, that the litigation under our present laws is rapidly decreasing; that the policy of the railroads more and more is to settle; that a very small proportion of the cases are now litigated; and that with the employers' liability law established litigation will practically be a thing of the past and settlements will be the general practice. I also have undertaken to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that under this proposed law there is an almost limitless field for litigation; that you are moving out into an unexplored territory; that you are putting upon the country a new bill with many terms in it which are unsettled; and that the litigation will be far more under the new bill than it is to-day.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the experience of England under the workmen's compensation act. If you will turn to the record of the testimony before the committee, you will find complaint that there is a great increase of litigation in England; that the litigation there is now rapidly increasing and not decreasing under the workmen's compensation act. You will find also that in Germany, during 1907, the last year for which I have the statistics, 70,000 cases were litigated and 19,504 were appealed to the higher courts under the workmen's compensation act. This theory that you have found something that will end litigation, tested by experience, is a mere piece of imagination. If we are to have a bill that ends litigation, we must have something different from what has been presented here.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I renew——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. REED. I renew my motion that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. REED. I will suggest quarter past 2—that is only a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until quarter past 2 o'clock. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I raise the question of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion is made that no quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Davis	Myers	Smoot
Bristow	Fall	Nelson	Stephenson
Brown	Fletcher	Oliver	Sutherland
Bryan	Foster	Page	Thornton
Burnham	Gallinger	Penrose	Tillman
Burton	Gronna	Percy	Townsend
Catron	Guggenheim	Perkins	Warren
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Williams
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Richardson	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Root
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Sanders
Crawford	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. JONES. I will state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Any Senator who desires to examine the question can find on page 568 of the record quite an elaborate discussion of the distressing increase of litigation that has taken place in England under the workmen's compensation act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I move that we take a recess until a quarter past 2, which is a half hour. It will not make for delay. I think it will facilitate the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate take a recess until a quarter after 2 to-day. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for a division.

There were on a divison—ayes 10, noes 16.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say that many more than 10 voted in the affirmative. I call for another count simply to test that question.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If he were present my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. GORE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. WATSON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to ask whether the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with him, and withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to announce for the day the pair of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and the pair of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Thornton
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Reed	Watson

NAYS—39.

Borah	Cummins	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Curtis	Oliver	Smoot
Bristow	Dillingham	Page	Stephenson
Brown	Foster	Paynter	Sutherland
Burnham	Gallinger	Penrose	Townsend
Burton	Gronna	Percy	Warren
Catron	Guggenheim	Perkins	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Richardson	Williams
Crane	Lodge	Root	Works
Crawford	McLean	Sanders

NOT VOTING—30.

Bacon	Cullom	La Follette	Poindexter
Bailey	Dixon	Lippitt	Rayner
Bankhead	du Pont	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Gamble	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Gardner	Martin, Va.	Stone
Briggs	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Swanson
Chilton	Heyburn	Nixon
Culberson	Kenyon	O'Gorman

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to thank the Senators on the other side for the courtesy they have shown me in giving me an opportunity to get lunch. But I rested without it. The suggestion of a recess did not originate on this side. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] first suggested it, and the suggestion having come from him, we supposed it would be agreeable to the other side; else we would not have acted upon the suggestion at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I came into the Chamber the Senator from Georgia was mentioning my name. I did not catch in what connection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All I said was that we would not have suggested a half hour for lunch except that the Senator from Utah kindly did, and we appreciated it, and after a little reflection determined to accept the suggestion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is quite right. I was sitting on that side, and I said I would not object to it, but I——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At first I felt we should not accept it, and I so indicated to the Senator, but after a moment's reflection I felt it would be so refreshing that we should be glad to accept it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I found the sentiment so decidedly against postponing the consideration of the measure that I yielded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Without any reference to taking a recess to-day, I should like to remind the Senate that we have been accustomed for many years to meet at 12 o'clock, and this meeting at 2 is an innovation. Never in my time in this body has the Senate taken a recess for luncheon for anybody, because it would break up all business during the day to take a recess during the middle of the session for that purpose.

We shall have to go along meeting at 12 o'clock to do the business, and I think it would be a great mistake if we should establish the practice of taking a recess for luncheon in the middle of the day's work when we meet at 12 o'clock. My objection is to a general practice of that kind and not to any specific case.

Mr. BACON. While it is true it has not been the practice——

Mr. LODGE. It has been done just once. I know the case, which occurred a very short time ago, and the time it took to do it then; and I was surprised——

Mr. BACON. It was done several years ago.

Mr. LODGE. It was done, I thought, within a year or two. It was done three years ago, the Senator from Kansas says. The Senator's service has been long here, and I venture to say that in all that time that is the only case.

Mr. BACON. It is the only case.

Mr. LODGE. I never heard of the House or the Senate doing it, and I think it would be a great interruption of public business when we meet at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. I was simply correcting the Senator's statement, for I understood him to say that it never had been done.

Mr. LODGE. I knew of that one case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the whole tendency under existing legislation is a decrease of litigation. I think I have established by the evidence in the RECORD that the amount of litigation now going on over these personal-injury cases against railroads is far less than the suggestion would indicate. I have also undertaken to show that under the pending bill there would necessarily be a great deal of litigation. I have called attention to the fact that in Germany the litigation is very great and that it is increasing in England.

The most shocking part of the facility for litigation under this bill grows out of the right not only to have the case tried once but over and over and over again for two years, at the option of the railroad companies.

I called attention to the fact that the provision for service was defective in this bill. I want to renew that suggestion. There is no definite provision for service of process in this bill which meets the requirements of conditions as they exist. Most of the corporations operating railroads throughout the country have their principal office away from the State in which the operation takes place. There is no provision in the bill that service can be made upon the local agent or representative of the railroad company doing business in the State.

The notice required from employees of their injuries is of a character liable to cause trouble and to forfeit their rights. There is no suggestion in the bill that the railroad company should furnish the employee also with a definite statement in its possession as to whether the railroad company will claim that the accident occurred while the employee was under the provisions of this law or under the provisions of some other law.

I desire to discuss briefly the amount of the compensation allowed to employees under this bill. Take the case of an engineer, who is killed, making $200 a month, $2,400 a year. On the basis of 4 per cent the present value of the annuity covering his income would be $35,000. If he is killed the bill gives his widow $3,800, payable monthly, for eight years. If she has children it is $4,800, at $50 a month. The present value of the life of the deceased was $35,000. The compensation the bill allows to the widow and children is $50 a month until it amounts to $4,800, subject to cease if the widow marries or dies or the children arrive at the age of 16.

Take the case of an engineer losing his foot above the ankle. His compensation, at $50 a month, would be $2,800. Unquestionably his capacity to work is half gone, if not more. His financial loss alone is between $15,000 and $17,000. This bill allows him $2,800, payable $50 a month. Under the existing law he has an absolute right to recover; his recovery would easily be for such an injury $15,000 or more. He could settle to-day for $10,000 to $15,000. This bill cuts him to $50 a mouth until he gets $2,800.

It is a harder bill than the English law in every way. Compare the salaries of our men and the compensation in England and the amount there allowed is much more to the benefit of the employee.

I desire to state that the compensation under the English employers' liability act and under the English workmen's compensation act are not the same. The compensation in some respects is better in England under the employers' liability act. Under the employers' liability act in England the total sum of three years' previous salary could be recovered, which would be $7,500. In the case of the engineer to which I referred—and this sum can be paid for any injury where the proof justifies it—$7,500 could be recovered under the English rule. It is cut down to $2,800, arbitrarily cut down, by this proposed bill. The engineer who has a permanent injury that disables him for life is cut down to $600 a year.

What are those permanent injuries recognized by this bill? Both legs off, both hands off, both eyes out, being injured to such an extent that both limbs are completely paralyzed. What about the other injuries? Even for the extreme injuries I have mentioned it is only $600 a year, where the man's income before was $2,400.

If you will compare the schedules fixed by this bill with the pension schedule you will find that it is not half as large as the pension schedule. Five hundred thousand pensioners take care of the pension schedule. There are 1,800,000 employees of railroads to take care of this schedule, and they will take care of it, and they are entitled to a hearing on it, and they have not had it. You will cut them off for two weeks after injury with nothing. The German law has a provision which takes care of them for three months. I insist, Mr. President and Senators, that in any wisely constructed workmen's compensation act the first thought should be to care for the man at once after the injury a reasonable time while he is perfectly helpless, and instead of proceeding upon the theory that you will cut him off for a certain number of weeks with nothing for fear that he may be malingering, treat him like he is an honest man and you will be more apt to make him an honest man. Treat him like he is dishonest and the effect of your treatment will be demoralizing upon him.

So you see, Senators, this bill cuts down 80 per cent at least the recovery of a number of men. What excuse is there for it? What are you taking away their present rights from them for? You know they do not understand it or they would not approve of it. You know that the engineer who learns that you propose to give him $2,800 in $50 installments for the loss of his hand or his foot will rise in indignation against this measure and against the men who put it on the statute books. If Senators would only listen they would stop and they would not pass it.

The committee has gotten it up and it seems to be the plan to just put it through without reflection or consideration by those who intend to vote for it. If they would scan its detailed provisions they would not approve it. Compare it with the schedule of compensation to pensioners for the loss of a limb. There is an elaborate schedule of compensation for pension injuries. Take other schedules of compensation for injuries. You are putting a burden on these men by the cold, hard limitation of their rights. You have arbitrarily said that no man shall be considered as making over $100 a month, no matter how great his injury, and you will allow him but half of the hundred, $50 a month, for complete and total loss of the capacity to work.

Then you have said that if he suffers the loss of an arm or a leg, though the loss is a permanent injury, though you know it cuts him down one-half, you will give him only $50 a month for a few months, instead of for life. The soldier who has lost an arm or two arms gets his $100 a month the balance of his life, and so on the compensation comes for life. What is to become of the one-armed and the one-legged railroad men when the time arrives that the meager allowance you give them shall cease? What is to become of the widows when the eight-year period is out?

The committee had before them statistics to show that the average widowhood period of an employee of the railroads who is killed on the railroads is 15 years, and yet they cut her to a meager sum for 8 years.

[At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives, which appears elsewhere.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I raise the question that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Dillingham	McLean	Root
Borah	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Sanders
Bourne	Gallinger	Myers	Shively
Bradley	Gore	Nelson	Simmons
Bristow	Gronna	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Brown	Guggenheim	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Overman	Smoot
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Page	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Sutherland
Clapp	Jones	Percy	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Perkins	Thornton
Clark, Ark.	Lea	Poindexter	Townsend
Crawford	Lodge	Reed	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Richardson	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Georgia will resume.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just to let Senators see that already the men are beginning to know something about it, I will send to the Secretary's desk a letter to be read which has just been brought to me from Buffalo, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
ERIE SYSTEM,
Buffalo, N. Y., May 3, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

YOUR HONOR: At a regular meeting of J. G. Hubbard Lodge, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, it was requested of me to thank you for the fearless stand you took in behalf of the many railroad employees, and we trust will meet with success in defeating the workmen's compensation act in its present stage.

The employers' liability act has been a blessing to employees and their families, and to take that from them would be an unworthy act.

Thanking you once more for our membership's interest, I wish to thank you for the families of employees.

With best wishes, and trusting your term in the United States Senate will be of many years,

Very respectfully,
H. P. HANVEY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I had about completed the criticism that I wanted to make upon the effect of this bill in cutting down the compensation of the men. It is perfectly apparent that to arbitrarily say none of the high-class employees of the railroad companies shall be considered as making over $100 a month, and then to say that in case of complete and permanent total disability the compensation shall not be to any of them more than $50 a month is to take from them their present rights, and then to say that except in the case of total permanent disability you will give this meager $50 a month for one or a few months is to utterly disregard any fair spirit of compensation. If the man has a permanent loss of a part of his body which is to incapacitate him to a certain extent all of his life, why limit his compensation to a small sum monthly for a few years? If his arm is gone or if his leg is gone and half of his capacity to labor is gone, why say that you will arbitrarily consider him as not having made over $100 a month, and then arbitrarily say you will only allow him one-half of that, and then arbitrarily say that you will allow him that half but a few months, unless your purpose was to prevent his compensation, unless your purpose was taking away from him his present rights, to give him a mere bagatelle in its place.

Yet that is what this bill will do. You have an engineer making $2,400 a year. His leg has been cut off in a case where he is entirely free from fault, and this bill would give him $2,800, payable at $50 a month, when his financial loss as the result of cutting off his leg is between $15,000 and $17,000. Estimating that he had only lost one-half of his earning capacity and giving him the present value of that earning capacity at the age of 45——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what proportion of engineers now who may be injured get nothing under the law of 1908?

Mr. SMITH of GEORGIA. No; and nobody else knows. There are very few in my section of the country. It is the rarest thing in that section that an engineer gets nothing, and it is the rarest thing that he has a lawsuit. There is scarcely a chance under the present law for him to lose. He can never lose except where the accident is the sole and exclusive cause of his negligence.

The theory about mere accidents with nobody to blame I take no stock in. Accidents do not happen except where somebody is at fault. Either proper machinery has not been furnished or proper rules have not been given or proper work under those rules has not been done. I believe it is a safe proposition to say that in cases of engineers not 10 per cent of them are injured where they can not recover, and if the accident is due solely to the negligence of the engineer who is hurt, I deny the soundness of the proposition that the man who is injured without fault shall have 80 per cent of his rights taken away from him under the claim that you propose to compensate somebdy who could not before have recovered.

As to the class of men to whom I am referring, it is a low estimate that the bill you are pressing will take 75 per cent of their rights from them. If you wish to give something to the man whose negligence was the sole cause of the accident, it ought not to come out of the man who was not negligent at all. Is not the compensation to the negligent to be given as a matter of public policy? Must you not justify that as a matter of public policy, and ought not the charge to either be levied on the Treasury of the United States or on commerce?

What excuse is there to take it, and take it twice, from the man who was free from fault? The excuse for this measure is that you are going to take care of somebody who heretofore was not taken care of. That somebody is the man injured exclusively by his own fault or by accident.

As I said before, accidents without faults are very rare. Somebody is negligent when these injuries take place. The real beneficiary is the man who is the exclusive cause of his own injury. Now, broaden the law, if you please, to care for the man whose negligence was the exclusive cause of his own injury; but when you do that, do not take it twice from the pocket of the man who was not at fault. If it is to be done as a matter of public policy, let commerce stand it. Do not grind labor. Do not put the iron into the wives and children and into injured men who are free from fault.

It is incomprehensible to me that Senators who I know are filled with regard for their fellow men can be willing to put this burden on these men. I have heard some of them excuse themselves upon the theory that if we who oppose the bill are right the burden will be taken off after a while; but what about the men who are hurt in the meantime? Why is it you are not willing to let the present law stand and add this proposed law? You do not want it to stand, because you want to cut down the rights of the men under the present law. That is the only reason for it. The present law can not stand, because you want to take the rights of the men under the present law to furnish the money for the new men you are going to compensate under the new law; and these new men you are going to compensate under the new law are the men whose negligence is the sole cause of the catastrophe. And you are reducing compensation to those now entitled to recover far more than is necessary to provide payment for the negligent. Ah, Senators, if we could have a hearing, if men would listen, they would not vote for such a proposition.

I can understand how a man who has helped work this bill out, who is, in a sense, its father, becomes blinded to its faults, as the parent is blinded to the faults of his child, as the mother can see no evil in her offspring; but there are Senators on the other side who are voting for this measure whose hearts are full of love for their fellow men, whose consciousness of what is right and whose desire to serve the human race moves them in all they do, and if we could only have a hearing from them, if they could only be induced to consider this question, they would not do this thing; they would not allow it done.

It is perfectly easy to provide this additional privilege to the negligent. This bill will provide for that, but if you want to provide for the negligent without taking the rights of the vigilant, leave the vigilant the laws they have—that is all. Let the existing law stand, and pass this bill. You will then have provided for the negligent without encroaching upon the rights of the vigilant.

Senators, is it right to take away from the vigilant railroad men to give to the negligent? Ah, I want to tell you, you take it twice over from them; you take $2 from them every time you give a dollar to the negligent; you give $1 to the railroad company and $1 to the negligent by the bill you are about to pass. Pass the bill, provide for the negligent, but leave to the vigilant the rights they have under existing laws. Let us find out how the new measure is going to work before we take away from the employees of the railroads the laws already given them, before we take away their rights which have been established by the courts. Let us not throw them out into this new sea of doubt, stripped of their established rights.

I can understand why the railroads are not fighting this measure. I can understand how their claim agents and their general counsel are chuckling over it. I understand why a large part of the million seven or eight hundred thousand employees are not protesting against it; but I have not any doubt about their protesting in the course of the next few months. And you will not let it go over to hear from them; you will not give them time that they may consider it.

If I were considering this question purely from a political standpoint, I would welcome such action from the other side of the Senate. I am not afraid but that long before November the man or the party that presses this bill will be punished for doing so; but I would rather see the rights of these men cared for without regard to party; I would rather see them protected than to name a President. I can not forget that when, almost a boy, with practically nothing, I came to a great city they were my first friends and gave me my first small fees that helped to enable me to meet my monthly expenses, and if they are ground down and if the burdens of this bill are placed upon them, I can grieve with them, and only regret that I did not have the capacity to bring it to the attention of Senators that they might realize what they were doing.

I have said that the provision for service in this bill was defective. If you will turn to page 25, section 7, any lawyer in this body who will study that section will see that he would not know how to have a defendant corporation served. There is no designation of the officer to be served. It reads:

(7) Any petition may be served by the United States marshal for the district where the proceedings are pending, or by any deputy.

Any subpœna, process, or order of an adjuster, or any notice or paper requiring service, may be served by such United States marshal or deputy, or by any citizen of the United States over the age of 21 years, being a resident of such district, or by registered mail sent by the adjuster to the person or employer to be served, postage prepaid, and addressed to the principal place of business of such employer or to the place of residence of such person.

Where is the principal place of business? Where is the principal office? It may not be in your State. There ought to be provision made for service on the agent of the railroad in the district where the accident occurs. There ought to be careful consideration of the question as to the class of agents upon whom service could be had in the various districts, and facilities for service ought to be provided. I mention that, Senators, simply to show that while at every point the railroad's right has been guarded, there has not been the same study incident to the other side. I do not mean any criticism upon the framers of the bill; but the representatives of the corporations were there suggesting, suggesting, suggesting, and whenever you come to suggestions from their trained representatives and suggestions from one or two men who are the heads of the brotherhoods an unequal match has taken place, and the one side is guarded while the other is neglected. I would not know how to advise a service in my State on half the railroads doing business there.

I made some reference to the English law. I find volumes of decisions of cases carried to the courts on account of the English workmen's compensation act. I find that it is more liberal than this bill by far, in that it leaves a considerable sum that might be recovered, even for a minor injury, and, therefore, if an employee goes into court there is room for him to move his damages up to a considerable sum, even though his injury was not a complete disability. They give a limit for complete disability, but they leave all other disabilities only limited by the compensation for a complete disability. If we were to apply the same rule, we would fix the highest compensation at $50 a month for the wife of the man injured and we would cut nobody below that, but leave every other injury that latitude toward which to reach as a basis for settlement. This bill undertakes to cut everybody down to small and limited payments for short periods, thereby being differentiated from the English law, and the differentiation classes it as less favorable to the employee.

Now, if you turn to the English employers' liability act you will find that the limitation there is the past three years' income of the injured employee, and any employee for any kind of injury is only restricted to not more than three years' income; so that the engineer to whom I have referred, for any injury he had received, would have the latitude of $7,500 as compensation, while it is here proposed to give him less than that for his greatest injury, and arbitrarily to say that it shall be much less than that for subordinate injuries. The English employers' liability act and the English workmen's compensation act differ in the amounts which can be recovered. The Senator from Utah was mistaken when he said that the compensation provided by the two acts was the same.

The most vital part of the English workmen's compensation act is that it preserves all the existing rights under other laws to the employees. Here it is, Senators [exhibiting]; I have brought the volume here. The English workmen's compensation act is in addition to their rights at common law and their rights under the employers' liability act. This bill does not compare with the English law in its kindly treatment of the employees. This bill is only applied to railroad men, the highest class of employees we have, while the English law applies to all workmen and literally goes to the extent of taking care of them in cases of sickness, not from physical injury but from diseases developed along the line of their work. Our law is harsh almost to the extreme as compared with the English law.

If the Senator would accept the principle of the English law, I would vote for his bill. If he would accept the principle of leaving existing remedies and letting it work out in that way, I would vote for this bill, because I would know that in most instances they would shun his bill until we improved it. I would know that the burdens of this bill would not fall on them unless they voluntarily took it. I do hope Senators will stop before they put this measure on these people. I do hope they will hesitate at least and give a little more thought to it, even if they have not appeared to be giving much attention to it except to respond to roll calls and uniformly and solidly vote to press forward and to pass it without amendment unless the amendment comes from the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. And then retire to the cloakroom.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And then retire to the cloakroom. We are going to ask you, first, to postpone this bill until December next and give the men a chance to be heard and give us all a chance to study it and work on it and improve it.

Senators, 1,800,000 men are involved, nearly 10,000,000 people altogether, including their families. You have seen that as they find out about it they do object to it. If you have studied this bill, you see there are faults in it. If you are not prepared to say there are faults in it, you must be prepared to say that doubts are raised. Let it wait until December. We have a right to set it for the first Monday in December and make it still the special order by unanimous consent, to be disposed of at once. I believe in workmen's compensation acts, but I want some compensation to them; I want some benefit to them; I do not want it merely to cut out what they have and do practically nothing toward helping them.

Senators, if you will not let the bill go over until December, then just make one little change in it—strike out section 3, which declares that after the passage of this bill it shall be the only remedy. Why do you take away from them the rights they have? Why do you not leave their present rights to them? If you mean to help them, how can you justify taking from them what they now have? No man can defend his vote on this bill on the ground that he sought to serve the railroad men, when he is asked Why did you vote to make this remedy exclusive; why did you take from them the rights they have under the employers' liability act and at common law? If you will vote for that, we will ask nothing more. You will have your workmen's compensation act; you will have done that for them and taken nothing from them.

They have a right to ask why you take their present rights from them. If you have carefully considered most of the communications coming from these men, you will see that they thought you were giving them something new and not taking away what they had. They did not understand that you were going to take away from them what they already had. If you will read the testimony of the head of the conductors' association, you will see that he begged the commission not to take from them their present rights; you will see that the head of the firemen's association did the same thing; you will see that they did not agree at all to have their present rights taken from them; and when they thought a workmen's compensation act was coming they were expecting a workmen's compensation act in addition to what they had, not as a substitute for what they had. You will find the protest all through the testimony against the small compensation provided, and you will find a very storm of indignation against it when it is understood.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cummins	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Davis	Myers	Stephenson
Bristow	Fall	Nelson	Sutherland
Brown	Gallinger	Oliver	Swanson
Bryan	Gardner	Overman	Thornton
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Paynter	Warren
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Wetmore
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Pomerene	Works
Crawford	Kern	Richardson
Culberson	Lea	Root
Cullom	Lodge	Simmons

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] is detained from the Senate on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names; a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday at 5 o'clock the vote be taken on all pending amendments and the final passage of the bill, and that all amendments intended to be proposed to the bill be presented to the Senate before 3 o'clock on that day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Provided the bill is not postponed to a day definite.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why not say before 5 o'clock? We may get ready to vote before that time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Oh, yes; if it is the will of the Senate to vote earlier than that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not later than 5 o'clock, then.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not later than 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Arkansas kindly repeat his request?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the pending bill and all amendments not later than 5 o'clock on Monday next, and that all proposed amendments to the bill shall be presented before 3 o'clock on that day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not later than 3 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Provided the bill is not postponed to a definite time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is part of the existing unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. OVERMAN. But that will have to go in in the new unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the bill and all pending amendments be voted on not later than 5 o'clock on Monday next, and that all amendments proposed to the bill be presented to the Senate previous to 3 o'clock on that day. Is there objection?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think there should be an understanding about the motion to postpone. I do not think we ought to wait for such motion until 5 o'clock or until after the amendments are disposed of. What does the Senator from North Carolina say about that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The motion might be made on Monday morning.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Monday morning. If that is understood——

Mr. SHIVELY. Is not that illogical? Should not the motion to postpone come after the bill shall have been perfected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. REED. First, I want to understand what is proposed as a unanimous-consent agreement. I do not think it is yet clear. I understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to suggest that as a part of the agreement the clause should go in, already in the previous agreement, stating the right to make a motion to postpone to a day certain. Then I understood the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to raise some question about that. I should like to have the agreement, whatever it is, stated in concrete form before I yield my consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only request that has been made, the Chair will say, is that made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], that the bill and all pending amendments be voted on previous to 5 o'clock on Monday next and that all amendments proposed to the bill be submitted to the Senate before 3 o'clock on that day.

Mr. REED. That, then——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] accepted a suggestion, "provided it is not postponed in the meantime."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was not my purpose to modify the substantive part of the existing agreement, but merely to modify it by getting an hour fixed for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then, the unanimous-consent agreement would be in about this phraseology: "Provided that the bill, on motion, has not been postponed to a day certain previous to the hour agreed upon."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from North Carolina and I do not disagree about it. I think there should be also an understanding that if a motion to postpone is made, it should be made during the morning hour—that is, early in the day, before we get to the time to dispose of the amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senate may so perfect the bill that nobody will want to postpone it; may so modify it that every Senator may be satisfied with it. Why limit the right to make the motion to postpone to a period prior to the possible adoption of amendments? If a motion to postpone is to be made, such motion to postpone should not come until after the amendments have been voted on. The adoption of certain amendments may make the bill agreeable to Senators who would otherwise vote for its postponement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can foresee some difficulty there. If we agree that the amendments shall be voted on prior to 5 o'clock and then leave in the air the question of a motion to postpone I do not know where we are going to finally land, and I want that matter out of the way.

Mr. OVERMAN. We might agree to have a vote before the close——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not care when it is done, so that it is before the time to vote upon the amendments shall expire. Else after voting upon the amendments we may be kept all of another day fussing with the motion to postpone.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What would be the objection to fixing 3 o'clock before we vote upon anything?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. SHIVELY. The objection is the one which has just been stated. We are asked to vote on a motion to postpone before we vote on the amendments. Just the reverse is the order in which the motion to postpone should come before the Senate. If certain amendments are adopted, all Senators may be against postponement. Amendments should be exhausted before postponement is considered. Otherwise certain Senators may vote for postponement because of what they regard as fatal defects in the bill, and which defects might have been cured by amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement might be made that the motion to postpone shall precede immediately the question of the passage of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me the unanimous-consent agreement would include a vote before 5 o'clock, the amendments to be presented before 3, and also such motions as are admitted under the previous consent agreement. That would not alter the previous agreement at all—that at 5 o'clock we proceed to vote on all amendments and motions admitted under the previous agreement. It seems to me that would obviate all the objections presented.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All I want is that when we enter into this unanimous-consent agreement there shall be no opportunity, after we have complied with these conditions, for further long discussion over the question of postponement. I suggest that we begin voting before 5 o'clock, and without further debate dispose of this bill. That is the point I want to make.

Mr. OVERMAN. And all motions and amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And all motions and amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will be no argument if that is put in the agreement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If you reserve the right to make a motion to postpone, without any limitation as to when it shall be made, it may be made after all the amendments are adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will have to be made before we begin to vote, because that is the time when we shall vote on the amendments and motions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that is understood——

Mr. OVERMAN. As I understand, the question could be put before the time to vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion as to the form in which the proposed unanimous-consent agreement has been stated. There will undoubtedly be a number of amendments. It is impossible to tell how long it will take the Senate to vote on all those amendments. So it is impossible to tell how long before 5 o'clock we would have to start in order to vote before 5 o'clock.

I think the form of the agreement ought to be as stated by the mover, that we begin to vote on these amendments not later than 5 o'clock and without interruption we vote upon all pending motions and amendments and the passage of the bill without further debate. If you put the form of the agreement as stated in the first place, it will be impossible to tell when the voting should begin in order to conclude it before 5 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator's suggestion, then, is that we consent to include the previous condition that all debate shall end——

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is my suggestion; that the Senate at 5 o'clock shall proceed to vote upon all pending amendments and motions and on the bill itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that would follow, but at the same time——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then all Senators would know that no vote will be taken before 5 o'clock.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One Senator at a time.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator not agree that the vote on the motion to postpone shall be taken immediately before the vote on the final passage of the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that after the time when all amendments are out of the way, provided it be understood——

Mr. SHIVELY. It is not a debatable question. There can be no delay.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the unanimous-consent agreement will be, as I understand, that not later than 3 o'clock all amendments shall be submitted; that not later than 5 o'clock the Senate shall proceed, without further debate, to vote upon all pending amendments and the bill; and that the motion to postpone to a day certain shall be disposed of after the amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SHIVELY. Just prior to the vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah what would be the objection to including the motion to postpone to a day certain with all other motions and amendments to be voted on at 5 o'clock or not later than 5 o'clock?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To begin to vote not later than 5 o'clock?

Mr. POINDEXTER. To begin to vote on those not previously disposed of.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Utah, I hope, did not think a motion to postpone could be made after the passage of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I had not much of that idea.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have sought for some time to explain my objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, but I have not been able to get the ear of the Senate. I have but one objection to it. I think we ought to have the right to continue to offer amendments, and not merely for delay.

Suppose the Senate should vote down the proposition to give the man the right to recover his full pay. I hope they will not. I would then want to make a trial on 75 per cent of his salary. I would want to test this down if necessary, and to get the very best we can—better, I hope, than the bill proposes. Not for delay, for I want to assure the Senator from Utah it has not been my purpose in this matter to delay further than this: I wanted the matter kept before the Senate long enough to catch to some extent the ear of the country. I did not hope we would have the hearing of the Senate of any debate, but I did hope the discussion of the subject might catch the ear of the country. I have never had any thought of undertaking to stop procedure arbitrarily, but I have believed it was fair to us and only just to this measure that it should go along slowly enough for a few days to let the country know we were considering it.

I am anxious to have a vote here on Monday. We do not seem to be able to attract attention and make any impression.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can not the Senator submit his amendments before 3 o'clock on Monday?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope I will not have many. It is only in the event that they are voted down that I will offer others, but I state frankly that it is not with any purpose of delay. We might agree to this: That after 5 o'clock there should be no more debate, and we should vote, and it is possible we might get through with it early Monday morning and then commence voting. I think we will get to voting on them by morning.

Mr. BACON. I think the almost universal practice in these unanimous-consent agreements is to provide that not later than a certain hour the Senate will begin to vote upon all amendments pending and to be offered. That is so general that I may almost say it is universal. I think that is the proper course.

Of course, as was explained by my colleague, sometimes the adoption of one amendment will require another, or the failure of one amendment makes it necessary to offer another amendment. It seems to me it is the simplest thing in the world to say not later than a fixed hour the Senate shall proceed to vote upon amendments offered and to be offered and the bill, including, as suggested by the Senator from Virginia, any motions which are permissible under the present agreement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why would it not be better to fix the hour at 3 o'clock—to begin voting at 3 o'clock on all amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me we have a unanimous-consent agreement, which we are all in honor bound to keep. The only question is when shall we proceed to execute the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made. It seems to me that this unanimous-consent agreement covers every difficulty suggested by any Senator. It seems to me if we will agree that at 5 or 4 or 3 o'clock we will proceed to execute the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made, it will cover the entire case and we would then execute the agreement made several days ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would seem to be so.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me if we agree that at 3 or 4 or 5 o'clock we will vote——

Mr. CULLOM. Without debate.

Mr. SWANSON. Without debate, we will execute the agreement heretofore entered into.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there is this decided objection: If we name an hour certain to vote on the amendment, this Chamber will be practically empty until that hour comes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. "Not later than." The amendments can be called up at any time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it should be agreed that a vote may be had on an amendment at any time, so as to guarantee the presence of Senators.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the understanding.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have a suggestion which I have reduced to writing: That all debate shall cease not later than 4 o'clock Monday; that any amendment may be submitted to a vote at any time; that after all amendments shall be disposed of, it shall be in order to make a motion to postpone to a day certain; and if it fails, the bill shall then be voted upon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will modify the request I made and ask that not later than 3 o'clock on Monday the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and all pending motions and amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Without further debate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Of course, that means amendments offered or to be offered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And without further debate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And without further debate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does that preclude submitting amendments to a vote before 3 o'clock?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Oh, no. It says "not later than."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, that after 4 o'clock there shall be no further debate and not later than 4 o'clock we shall proceed to vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is very little difference between 3 and 4 o'clock; it is only an hour. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Utah we will make it 4 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then I remodify the motion by substituting 4 o'clock for the vote on the bill, and that we shall then proceed without further debate to vote on all amendments and on the motion to postpone.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Whenever an amendment of that kind is in order to be voted upon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, as the Chair understands it, is that on Monday next, not later than 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment then pending or which may be offered to the said bill, and upon the bill itself, and further, that immediately prior to the time for taking the vote on the passage of the bill, if a motion then be made to postpone the further consideration thereof to a day certain, it shall be entertained.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That such a motion shall be in order.

Mr. WARREN. Unless there has been some arrangement as to the hour of meeting, it would leave the hour of meeting at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be arranged later. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the hour of meeting will be 12 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We will take a recess until 11.50.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Eleven fifty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say this: My own judgment is that this agreement ought not to be made; that this bill ought to be fought out, and these amendments ought to be discussed. There are vices in this bill that have not yet been exposed and will not be in the short time allotted. But I do not intend to stand here against the judgment of other men interested as I am in the amendment of this bill, and I am not going to make the objection which would bar a unanimous-consent agreement. But I am yielding with reluctance and express the opinion that we are making a mistake. However, I will not take the responsibility of standing out against all my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Unless somebody else desires to be heard this afternoon, I will move that the Senate stand in recess until the calendar day of Monday at 11.50 a. m.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Georgia desires to proceed, I, of course, will not make the motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I had better go on with my amendments. We may be able to vote on some of them this afternoon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We are cutting off our time and there will be but a short time for debate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the time will be so short on Monday that I think it essential this afternoon that the nature of the amendments I intend to offer should be discussed. We have not any real hope of discussing them before the Senators, but we can discuss them and put them in the RECORD and carry them at least to the fight we will make in the House, if the Senate passes the bill without placing on it the amendments. Let the parties interested know what the Senate has done and what the House has a chance to do, and if we have a little delay we feel sure it will not be long before the Member of the House or the Senator who votes for this measure and against these amendments will not be able to defend himself before the pile of telegrams and letters from railroad men condemning his conduct.

I want the men interested to understand how we wish to improve this bill if it will pass it.

The first amendment which I have suggested is to strike out section 3. Section 3 makes this bill the exclusive remedy of railroad men. I want that stricken out.

Of course, later on we would have to amend the title, but under the practice of the Senate the title can not be amended until the bill is passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to call the Senator's attention to section 30, which deals with the same matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall be glad to send the Senator a copy of all my printed amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just on that particular point, in order to accomplish the object the Senator has in view, there should be stricken out the words "happening before this act shall take effect."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or else to insert, after the word "before," the words "or after."

My next amendment is to amend section 30 so as to insert, after the word "before," the words "or after," so that section 30 will read as follows:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before or after this act shall take effect.

Now, Senators, our first suggestion is to give the Senate a chance to save these men their present rights, and we, or most of us, are willing to go on record on that subject. We know they ought to be saved, and we feel that there are a number of Senators on the other side who ought to vote with us on it, having the same views about human rights and human beings that we have, who really have the idea, new fashioned as it may be, that life and limbs are almost as precious as dollars and cents, and that even the Senate of the United States might afford to put the limbs and the life of a man who works on a railroad on a plane just as high as it puts the freight of a shipper. There is not any scaling of the value of the freight. If it is lost, the shipper gets paid. If the negligence of the railroad or the lack of negligence of the railroad loses the freight of the shipper, the railroad pays full price for it.

I have an unreasonable notion that if, from the negligence of a railroad, an engineer is killed his wife and children might be allowed a claim against that railroad for the fair financial value of the life of that engineer, and it is not extreme to think that a human life might be treated in compensating the widow and the little children somewhat in the same way that you would treat the freight of a great shipper that is lost in transportation. You would pay the shipper the full value, and yet the Senate is asked to treat the widow and the children to about 20 per cent of the value of the life of an engineer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Can not the Senator from Georgia see that there is a distinction naturally appealing to the latter-day business man between the property that a man has in his hand that is negligently cut off and the property that a shipper has in a load of hogs—that they are upon an entirely different plane and that the hogs ought to have the advantage in this day and year of grace?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was actually advancing the astonishing proposition in the presence of this body that I am so unreasonable as to feel that the widow and children ought to have recognition, and that the wife of the engineer might be treated——

Mr. REED. Lest I might be misunderstood, let me say that I am equally unreasonable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Senator from Missouri, and I want to tell Senators that it is going to be recognized in the same way. I want to tell Senators that you can put a limitation on now, but you can not keep it there. You can say that $4,000 paid monthly at $50 a month is all the widow and half a dozen children can have for the life of an engineer whose expectancy according to the table has a present value of $35,000, but you can not keep it there. I am here to protest that we do not start it so.

Now, if you are simply dealing with the engineer who is exclusively at fault, whose negligence was the sole cause of the catastrophe—if you are seeking in a wise public policy to give something then, your figures fixed would be reasonable. If you would pass a bill without destroying the present rights of the employees, your figures intended for the man whose negligence was the sole cause of the catastrophe might be considered reasonable, but you can not sustain that estimate of compensation in the other cases.

Therefore, we urge the Senate to do as the English law does. When they adopted their workmen's compensation act they made it cumulative. They left the employee with all his common-law rights; they left him with all his statutory rights under the employers' liability act; and they added the workmen's compensation act. You strike down the employers' liability act just at the moment when you know it has become effective, or at least you propose to do it by this bill.

Now, next——

Mr. SIMMONS. What has the Senator to say about the constitutionality of the proposition, anyhow?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have stated, Mr. President, in the opening of my remarks that there are a number of grave constitutional questions that can be raised as to the validity of this bill. I stated that I did not intend to discuss them; that I only presented to the Senate the fact that they were raised by lawyers and briefs were filed before the commission pointing out unconstitutional provisions and attacking the constitutionality of this bill generally. Instead of stopping to discuss the constitutional questions in detail, I only desired to present the question as to its constitutionality as a reason why, if we pass the bill, we ought not to repeal the existing rights and leave the employee without his present remedies while we are embarking in a sea of constitutional doubt.

I criticized the provision of the bill which takes from the employee the right to be compensated in damages for the expenses of his injury. His right to employ his own physician and collect reasonable fees charged him by his own physician is taken away by this bill. He can not have a physician paid for by the road unless it is the road's own physician.

He can now employ a physician; he can have his family physician; he can employ his own surgeon, and he can recover the cost of that physician provided the charges are reasonable. You take that from him, and you prescribe under this bill the very thing that the railroads have always wanted.

Oh, how tender this bill is toward all their defenses. You prescribe that not a dollar of compensation is to be paid except where the railroad's own physician does the work. I propose to amend the bill by providing:

That if the employee elects to furnish his own physician or surgeon to care for himself, he may recover from his employer such expenses incurred therefor by him as are reasonable and just.

Next, amend, after line 16, on page 4, section 7, by adding:

Provided, That where it is made to appear that the employer, through its officers and agents, had received knowledge of the accident within 30 days after the happening thereof, no notice whatever shall be required to be given of the action by the employee to the employer.

Why penalize the employee for not giving notice when the employer already has notice? I will tell you why. It is the cunning device—I will not say that, because I do not know who devised it, but it is the adroit defense furnished to the railroad lawyer by requiring the employee to furnish a statement of his case right away, to give all his notions of his case right away to the railroad company. It is to commit the employee to a statement of his case at once, and to hold it as his admission to break him down if need be. My amendment provides that if the employer through his officers or agents knows about the accident within 30 days the employee need not notify him of what he already knows.

Amend section 7 by adding the following:

It shall be the duty of the employer, with five days after receiving notice through its officers or agents that an employee has received an injury in its service, to notify such employee whether said injury was received while such employee was employed in such commerce by such employer; and in any legal procedure which may follow the employer shall be bound by such notice, and will not be permitted to deny its truth, and on failure of said employer to give said notice said employer shall not be permitted to deny, in any legal procedure, the claim that said injury was received by such employee while employed in such commerce.

It just occurred to me that while you are taking care everywhere of the interest of the employer you might do something for the employee, too.

Amend by striking out section 10 and by striking out section 11.

Section 10, that I ask to strike out, is as follows:

SEC. 10. That before any agreement or award has been made or after the making of any such agreement or award, and at any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the accident, it shall be the duty of the injured employee, if so requested by the employer, to submit himself one or more times, at reasonable times and places, for examination—

One or more, just as many as they want. The injured employee must trot up to the claim agent whenever he wants him—for examination by a duly qualified physician or physicians furnished and paid by the employer.

Of course they would be paid for by the employer. They are its men. They are being used to prepare its testimony. It is real kind that the railroad company will pay for them and that it does not try to make the employee, who has not anything, pay for the examining surgeons who are to testify against him.

The section continues:

It shall also be the duty of such employee in like manner to submit himself to one or more such examinations whenever his original claim for compensation or the matter of the review of compensation is pending before an adjuster or the court. The employee shall have the right to have a duly qualified physician or physicians, provided and paid for by himself, present at any such examination.

Now, that is kind. It is real kind to say to an employee who is a freeman that he can take his own physician along with him, provided he pays the bill, when the railroad's physician examines him. How could you keep him from doing it? That is indeed generous.

The section continues:

If the employee refuses to submit himself to any such examination or in any way obstructs the same, his right to payments or compensation and his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under this act shall be suspended until he shall have submitted himself for such examination, and no compensation shall at any time be payable in respect to the period of such suspension. Upon request a copy of the report of the employer's physician or physicians of such examination shall be furnished to the employee, and a copy of the report of the employee's physician or physicians, if any, shall be furnished to the employer, within six days after any such examination. The employer shall have the right, in any case of death, to require an autopsy at his expense.

The original plan of this bill was to allow the claim agent representing the employer to take up and cut up the dead body of an employee to make an autopsy whenever he got ready. I am glad the Senator from Utah modified that provision, although Mr. Wills said it was dangerous to change the bill in any way.

Now, I move to strike out that section. I also move to strike out the next section, which is section 11. Section 11 is the one which allows the railroad to bring the injured employee before the adjuster from time to time. It is under section 11 that litigation does not terminate and that innumerable hearings can be placed upon the employee, if the claim agents want to do it.

I suggest as an amendment to amend section 13, paragraph 4, by adding at the close of the same:

Provided, That either party may take the testimony to be used before the adjuster, of a witness, either by deposition or interrogatories, according to the rules of practice of force in the United States district in which the case is pending.

I say this bill is drawn without any provision which allows testimony to be taken. If it is there, I have not been able to find it. Of course the railroads do not need it. They do not take their testimony that way. They bring witnesses from all over the country. But the employee does need it.

Mr. President, I will send up to the Secretary this amendment to section 13, and I think I will perhaps offer it now. It is a good one to break the ice on. On page 3, line 3 to line 8, I offer that amendment now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 13, paragraph 4, by adding at the close of the same the following words:

Provided, That either party may take the testimony to be used before the adjuster of a witness, either by deposition or interrogatories, according to the rules of practice of force in the United States district in which the case is pending.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to be heard for just a moment.

In preparing the bill, the view of the commission was that the general law of the United States with reference to taking depositions would apply to taking depositions before this adjuster, for the reason that the adjuster is, in substance and effect, an arm of the court, the same as a United States commissioner is an arm of the court, and the Supreme Court has held that it has control over the United States commissioner, and wherever he is lacking in power to do any particular thing the court itself may direct it. Therefore our thought was that it would follow that in a proper case depositions might be taken under the general law.

But this simply makes definite and certain what we believed was included in the law without it, and I shall not object to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not catch the Senator's reason for thinking that he had provided for it already.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The reason, with reference to all matters of this kind, was that the adjuster would be, in effect, an arm of the court, just as the United States commissioner is an arm of the court. It has been held, with reference to United States commissioners, that the commissioner was all the time under the direction and control of the court, and that where the law was lacking in definite directions to him the court could supply that the same as it could, under the general law, do the thing itself. That was, in substance, the holding, but as I have said——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Have you not in this bill specifically directed the way in which this man is to take the testimony and where he should go?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Having expressed a portion of his authority in that regard, have you not excluded the balance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No more than in the case of the United States commissioner. The Senator will find the case in 155 United States Reports, page 595, which holds substantially as I have stated. But I see no objection to the amendment, and as far I am able to do so, I accept it.

Mr. REED. The trouble with the Senator's argument is that a United States commissioner exists under general law as a branch of the Federal court. This is an exclusive bill and stands by except where it incorporates the provisions of the law otherwise.

I suggest to the Senator, in addition to this amendment, the further statement that "evidence taken before a commissioner may be preserved in writing and may be read upon the trial with the force and effect and under the same circumstances that a deposition would be admissible."

Mr. ROOT and others. Question!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. I wanted to know whether the Senator from Utah would accept that amendment. Otherwise I shall write it out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know he was addressing me.

Mr. REED. Directly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will be glad if the Senator will restate his suggestion.

Mr. REED. I suggest that the bill ought to be further amended by providing that "evidence taken before a commissioner may be preserved in writing upon the trial of the case before the court and can be there read under the same circumstances and with the same force and effect as a deposition."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I see no objection to that.

Mr. REED. I should like to have that language added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri kindly submit his amendment in writing?

Mr. REED. I will do so.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understood the Senator from Utah to say that he would accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia. So there is no occasion for calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will simply offer that amendment and have it ready, without any further discussion on it, to vote upon Monday afternoon. As there will be no contest over it, it may then be submitted as one of the amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may as well be disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we dispose of it now we have to raise the point of bringing Senators here to vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That point need not be made unless the Senator desires to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia desire a vote on the proposed amendment now?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not insist on it now.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understand the amendment has been accepted, and it is a mere matter of reducing it to writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that one Senator can not accept an amendment submitted by another Senator. It is for the Senate to do that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not so state. I simply said that, so far as I was able to do so, I would accept it.

Mr. SHIVELY. In the absence of objection, that is always a proper course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is merely a question whether the Senator from Georgia desires the amendment to be voted on now or whether he withdraws it for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not insist on voting upon it now, there being no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. REED. Does that include the further language——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Chair misunderstood me. I said I did not insist on a vote now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair apologizes. The Senator from Georgia then withdraws his amendment for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, I will withdraw it; because the Senator from Missouri has a still further suggestion of some language with reference to it, and I think it quite important that it should be perfected. In the multitude of amendments that I felt called upon myself to suggest to this bill, which I think ought to be amended far beyond the suggestions I have made, I really did not have the time to complete them with that accuracy I would have liked.

I think the amendment to strike out section 11 is an amendment we might well take up now. I offer that. My proposition is to strike out section 11 from the bill. I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves the following amendment.

Mr. ROOT. Let it be read, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. On page 11 strike out all of section 11.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think it important to call the attention of the Senate to what that section does. That is the section which makes it practicable for the railroad company to bring the injured man after his case has been heard——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me that the Senator had an amendment pending here, and it was practically accepted and yet no action was taken upon it. Now, we are not making much progress if we get so near together as that and then let the matter go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did not the Senator understand the Chair? The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] had a suggestion of some change.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was accepted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not so understand it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was accepted, and it seems to me that ought to be settled before we take up another amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not understand that it had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia withdrew the amendment, which was his entire right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did it because I understood it had not been perfected. If it has been perfected, I am perfectly willing to press that amendment to a vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason why I rose is because I think we would have a clear record and would know better where we are if an amendment on which we were practically agreed was settled in the record before we went to another.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think if the Senator had heard all that took place he would have understood that the Senator from Missouri suggested an amendment, and there was some criticism upon it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understood that that was accepted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I then suggested that it be perfected as practically agreed on.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not hear that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said we were not ready then to vote on it, as it had not been reduced to writing, but we could pass upon it without further discussion on Monday. But if the Senator from Missouri has it ready, we might vote on it now.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator from Utah this language, which I have now reduced to writing:

Evidence produced before the adjuster may be taken in writing or in shorthand and may thereafter be read in evidence on the trial of said cause before the adjuster or the court under the same circumstances and with the same force and effect as a deposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is an addition?

Mr. REED. That is an amendment to your amendment. I add it at the end of your amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment to the amendment be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will offer again the amendment I had, because I see that what the Senator from Missouri has is not a modification of my amendment, but an addition to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Georgia moves to amend section 13, paragraph 4, found on page 16 of the bill, by adding at the close of the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That either party may take the testimony, to be used before the adjuster, of a witness, either by deposition or interrogatories, according to the rules of practice of force in the United States district in which the case is pending.

The Senator from Missouri proposes to add, after the word "pending" in the proposed amendment, the following words:

Evidence produced before the adjuster may be taken in writing or in shorthand, and may thereafter be read in evidence on the trial of said cause before the adjuster or the court under the same circumstances and with the same force and effect as a deposition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that was hardly as I understood the proposition which the Senator from Missouri made. I would have no objection if the amendment is so worded that the transcript of the shorthand notes of the reporter are properly authenticated. There ought to be a provision of that sort.

Mr. ROOT. "When properly authenticated."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; "when properly authenticated."

Mr. REED. Authenticated by the adjuster or by the reporter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It should be authenticated by the reporter.

Mr. REED. I think that is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the phrase "when properly authenticated" will cover it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he keep that amendment until Monday morning and study it out a little before we finally determine what we shall put in.

Mr. REED. Very well. Then I will withdraw it temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now I offer an amendment to strike out section 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 11 of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if that amendment were agreed to, it would take out of the bill what I regard as one of the very important provisions of it and one of the very important provisions for the protection of the employees. The Senator from Georgia, all the way through his discussion, not only of this section but of others, has referred to it as though it were a provision which the railroad companies alone could make any application of. Now, let me read the essential part of that provision:

At any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the accident, but not afterwards, and before the expiration of the period for which payment of compensation has been fixed thereby, but not afterwards, any agreement, award, findings, or judgment may be from time to time reviewed by the adjuster upon the application of either party after due notice to the other party upon the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently ended, increased, or diminished. Upon such review the adjuster may increase, diminish, or discontinue the compensation from the date of the application for review, in accordance with the facts, or make such other order as the justice of the case may require, but such order shall have no retroactive effect.

Mr. President, the whole theory of the compensation law is to compensate the injured employee for disability. The disability may be any one of four classes: It may be a permanent total disability, in which case the compensation continues for life; it may be a temporary total disability, in which case the compensation continues so long as the disability continues; it may be a partial permanent disability, in which case the compensation continues for a certain definite length of time—in one case for 72 months, and in case of a slight injury, like the loss of a finger, for a few months, and so on; then, the fourth class is where the injury is of a temporary partial character, in which case the compensation continues under this bill so long as the man is not able to obtain work.

Take a case where a man has received what is denominated a temporary total disability. Upon investigation of that case it may be determined from the evidence of the medical examiners that he has such an injury as will continue for six months, and the adjuster fixes the compensation accordingly; he directs that the compensation at the rate of $50 a month shall be paid to that man for the period of six months; but before the six months expire it is discovered that, instead of that being a temporary total injury, it is a permanent total injury; that the diagnosis is erroneous; then this man should have the right—and the right is preserved to him under this bill—of going before the adjuster and showing that in the meantime his injury has increased in character; so that, instead of being a temporary total injury it is a permanent total injury; then, this compension will continue for life. Again at the end of six months it may be found that he has not recovered. His disability is still regarded as a temporary total disability; but it is lasting longer than was at first anticipated; instead of lasting six months, it bids fair to last a year; so he goes before the adjuster and the adjuster directs that the compensation shall continue to that man for another year; and so on. That is an illustration of the application of the law for the benefit of the employee.

On the other hand, the adjuster finds that the employee has been temporarily totally injured, and within a week he discovers that the man was not injured or that the man has recovered in spite of the predictions of the doctors and has gone to work somewhere at full wages, and it is discovered beyond question that he is not injured; then the railroad company should have a right to protect itself. It is for the mutual protection of both, and I do not know of any compensation law that does not include some such provision as this.

Now, we have limited the time in which a review may be had to two years. Some of the laws permit it to be made at any time, even beyond the period of two years; but we have limited it to two years, for the reason that we believed from an investigation we made of the subject that the character of practically every injury will have been determined within two years; that even if it is to be a total permanent injury, two years will disclose that fact, and the cases where it will not be disclosed may be regarded as negligible. Therefore, after the expiration of two years application for review, either on the part of the railroad company or on the part of the injured employee, in the vast majority of cases, in practically all cases, might be regarded as vexatious; and so we limit the time within the two years; but within the two years, in order that no injustice may be done, we permit these applications to be made.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, if we are to have a vote on this amendment, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	McLean	Richardson
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Root
Bourne	Curtis	Myers	Shively
Bristow	Davis	Nelson	Simmons
Bryan	Fall	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Burnham	Fletcher	Oliver	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Overman	Sutherland
Chilton	Gronna	Page	Thornton
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Poindexter	Wetmore
Crane	Lea	Pomerene	Williams
Crawford	Lodge	Reed

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to be permitted to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent from the Chamber on important matters connected with his duty as a Senator.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask that the number of Senators present may be announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names; not a quorum.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the time has been fixed for a vote on the pending bill, a limitation within which this matter is to be concluded, I hope the Senate will stay in session and send for absent Senators and require them to be here.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the absentees be called.

Mr. BACON. There is certainly no propriety in fixing a time for a vote and then for Senators to absent themselves and prevent a proper consideration of a measure. I hope the Senate will not permit it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. SANDERS, Mr. JONES, and Mr. WORKS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words with reference to this amendment. I confess that in some respects this bill does not suit me. It is a pioneer measure, and undoubtedly will have to be amended from time to time if it becomes a law, and in some of the contentions of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] I recognize a great deal of force, but I want to say to the Senator that, to my mind, he is not helping this bill nor helping the men whom I know he wants to help in his proposal to strike out this section. I believe this section is one of the most important sections of the bill from the standpoint of the railway employees.

The Senator from Georgia has had very large experience, I understand, with cases of railway employees and with the wide range of injuries that are sustained by them. Unless it be a case of the loss of a limb, it very often happens that it is impossible to tell within the first few days after the injury how slight or how serious that injury may be. Take the case of a shock. Very often these injuries are attendant upon shock resulting from head-on collisions, or the ditching of a train, or the jumping from a train, or the receipt of a wound that in sympathetic effect may destroy the hearing or may destroy the sight. It may be a gradual loss of sight. You may not be able to say within the first 30 days that the sight has been seriously injured. It may be a symptom appearing within the first 30 days which gradually develops and finally ends in total blindness. It is the same way with the hearing and the same way with nervous shocks. As the Senator from Georgia in his experience understands full well, in cases of neurasthenia, injuries to the spine, and progressive paralysis, resulting from shock, you can not tell whether the disability is going to disappear in 30 days or whether after 3 or 4 months; it is simply developing and may end in death. The amendment of the Senator proposes to cut off all opportunity for the employee to go before the adjuster after it is discovered that a mistake has been made and that the injury is much more serious than it was thought to be at the first examination. To shut off absolutely any right on his part to ask that his case may be again examined, I think, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me to say it, would be a most serious mistake and a most serious crippling of the bill from the standpoint of the employee.

If the Senator will permit me, I remember that only a few months ago there came before the Committee on Claims of the Senate the case of a locomotive engineer on the Isthmus of Panama, in charge of an engine used with a steam shovel. There was a 3 per cent grade, and on a wet day imperceptibly his train had moved slightly until his cab came too close to the steam shovel, and in its movement back and forth as the train slid within reach, the arm of the shovel struck the cab and a sliver in some way flew and struck him near one of his eyes. Gradually—it did not appear for some time, but gradually—the injury developed and grew until he lost the sight of his right eye. They carried him along in a secondary position, working on a switch, until it finally developed that the sight of the other eye was weakened, and that he was very likely to become totally blind. He was sent back to the United States, and, while making some settlement with an accident insurance company in Cleveland Ohio, he became so despondent over the prospect of losing his sight entirely that he committed suicide. The employers had no idea during the first 30 days or so after he had received this injury that that man was going to become totally blind; he did not expect to become totally blind. Suppose the matter had been adjusted and settled within the first 30 days after the injury, how much damages would he have received? Would the Senator prevent him three months afterwards from making application to have a rehearing, in view of the fact that his injuries as they developed proved to be far more serious than he had himself expected?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator to yield merely to suggest a class of cases that occur much more frequently than that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was myself going to give another instance or two.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Injuries growing out of hurts upon the head which very frequently at first and for quite a while are considered merely temporary and quite insignificant, will afterwards develop into epilepsy, partial paralysis, and sometimes into insanity.

Mr. CRAWFORD. True enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And undoubtedly when it is ascertained that what was at first thought to be a mere temporary, insignificant hurt was really a permanent one, crippling the man both in body and in mind—frequently in one and sometimes in both—he ought to have a chance to obtain an increase in the amount allowed him as compensation, when it is considered that the compensation is for the real injury inflicted and not merely for the apparent injury at any particular time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.

I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to another case occurring here in Washington. It is a pathetic case of a young man, with a wife and children, who while walking in the basement of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, going around to his elevator early in the morning and in a rather dark passage, happened to step into a low place in the floor and fall. Ordinarily, you would have said that the mere tripping and falling on the floor in the basement corridor would not have amounted to anything; would not have been worthy of passing notice; would not have called even for a shin plaster, and yet some wrench occurred—just how or in what way is not known—and to-day this young man's trouble has developed until he has absolutely lost the use of his lower extremities and has to be wheeled in a carriage. Ganglia have gathered in bunches up and down his spinal column; running sores have broken out, and the whole history of the case shows no other cause for it; no hereditary trouble, no personal dissipation, no other cause for it except some injury received in that apparently slight accident.

Another case I remember very well in my own experience was that of a lady who was thrown by a collison simply a few feet from an ordinary seat in a day coach to the floor of the car; but afterwards when the case was being tried and she came into court and physicians examined her it developed that neurasthenic trouble had set in and it was merely a question of time when her life would have to pay the penalty.

A disease resulting from an injury like that develops often very slowly; during the first three months of its history it is a question whether the patient is not recovering; and yet the development goes on until finally it ends in death. Now, after an injured employee has gone before an adjuster in the early history of his case and had it investigated and had compensation fixed upon the basis of a slight injury, and after the facts are developed it appears to be a most serious and permanent injury, would the Senator bar such an employee absolutely from having the case reexamined? I think to do so would be a very serious mistake.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would add to the history of cases of the kind to which the Senator refers one which just recently happened in Atlanta. About six months ago a professor of music in our public schools was thrown from a street car and he hit his head. In a day or two he was up again and thought he was all right. The claim agent went around to see him and made him an offer of a couple hundred dollars, which he accepted. Within two months his trouble in his head became acute, and he quit for a rest. Within two months later he was sent to the insane asylum of the State, and since then he has there died from his injury. So the line of cases to which the Senator refers are within the observation of all of us.

I condemn the whole plan of this bill. I condemn the two-weeks system. The German plan compensates the employee for three months before he receives any compensation under the workmen's compensation act. My own view of an intelligent and sound system is one which shall provide a plan not arbitrarily denying payments for two weeks, but a comprehensive and well-prepared workmen's compensation scheme that arbitrarily takes care of an employee if he is hurt under some system of official examination for a few months before he is forced to go before an adjuster at all.

My criticism of this section is not made in the sense of the suggestion of either Senator. I grant you that no employee should be put in a position where his rights are finally concluded a few days after the hurt. If we are to have a sound plan in the interest of the employees, we will cover the first three months, and then the litigation will start. I object to the unlimited right of reexamination contained in this bill. If there were a provision that covered the expense of the employee, I would not object, but to this very limited compensation that he is to receive, and with the unlimited right of the claim agent to ask him before the adjuster from time to time for two years I do object. It is possible that the section might be amended so as to relieve it of the arbitrary treatment of the employee.

But this section does not simply give the employee once, later on, after he finds out what is the matter with him, the right to go before the adjuster and receive the treatment that you suggested he might have. It gives the claim agent or the railroad company the right to take him from time to time before the adjuster. There is no necessity for that. If it is deemed necessary to provide under the system of the bill that the compensation shall be fixed, except in cases of unmistakable permanent injuries, to last 18 months or a limited number of months, and that at the close of that period or at a period fixed, covering the length of time that may be thought necessary, the adjuster should bring the party before him again and physicians appointed by the court or at the instance of either side, once, and that at the end of a certain term of months the party should again appear before the adjuster to see whether time has wrought a change, I would not object. What I object to is the provision in the bill which subjects the employee to a trial before the trial judge without a jury, and then to a trial in the district court before a jury, a trial de novo, with the expense falling on him, with no provision that the expense shall be paid by the railroad company, and then just as often as the claim agent desires to do it, this section allows the employee to be brought time after time before the adjuster for examination and reexamined and reexamined—physicians' bills, physicians' bills, physicians' bills, to testify. That is the burden I am criticizing.

I think the Senator from South Dakota might perfect amendments to this section that would carry the beneficial effects that he suggests and rid it of all the burdens that it throws so heavily on the employee.

The difference between the two is this: The railroad company can afford to lavish its funds upon litigation if it deters claims, and it is an economical proposition that brings a saving to it, but the employee is not fitted to bear the burden of the fight, and it is the limitless burden that can be placed on him under this section against which I protest. I have worked out no amendments to put it where it should properly stand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the Senator from Georgia think it would be fair not to have this privilege a reciprocal one?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it should be reciprocal.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Supposing the employee really was not injured so seriously as was contemplated, should not the reciprocal provision allow the same privilege to the company?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; and I so stated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it quite fair to assume that a statute, as fair on its face to the employee, which simply gives a reciprocal right to the same extent and no greater to the employer, is to be used as an engine to completely destroy this man by bringing him before the adjuster without cause? Does not the Senator think that that course of procedure would react on the railroad company and to its injury to a greater extent than that of the employee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator, no; and if it did I answer the Senator that wise judgment is not used ordinarily by the railroad companies, or many of them, in treating their employees. It is improving.

Mr. KERN. I should like to inquire of the Senator if a proviso added to section 11, to the effect that not more than one application for review shall be made by either party within the period of one year, would not meet his objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would vastly improve it. I do not think it ought to be allowed once every year. I think the first trial ought not to begin before a few months after the accident, and I think, then, when there is application for a rehearing from either side, or, better than that, I think that either side might properly have the right to petition the United States district court judge and, for cause, obtain from him an order authorizing a rehearing or reinvestigation before the adjuster. I have never suggested that it should not be reciprocal. I suggested that it should be reciprocal. But I pressed the fact that it was a burden on one when it was not on the other; that a number of investigations would be no burden on the railroad company. They have their regular physicians, employed usually by the year. In my section every road has its able surgeon, among the very ablest in this country, who is employed by the year, who treats their cases and testifies for them in court. Our best surgeons are retained as the surgeons of the railroads. It is very difficult to get an able surgeon to examine an employee and testify. He might treat him, but the surgeon who is not retained by the railroad companies to treat its cases does not enjoy going into court on behalf of the plaintiff. If this bill was so amended as to provide that the rehearing could be within the discretion of the United States district judge for cause shown, I would not object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Georgia has several times referred to the German law with reference to the 13 weeks' period. They have altogether a different situation there than we have. In Germany there are a lot of these interrelated schemes for the benefit of employees. They have, for example, the sickness fund, out of which the first 13 weeks of any injury as well as a sickness is compensated for. That sickness fund is not contributed by the employer. It is contributed by the employees and the employer in the proportion of two-thirds by the employees and one-third by the employer, and the effect of it is to relieve the employer from making compensation, except to the extent of one-third, during the first 13 weeks. The employer does not begin to pay the full compensation for the accident until the expiration of 13 weeks. It is an altogether different situation from the one we have here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I never suggested that it was the same situation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think we could in a law of this kind provide for a sickness fund.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I said was that the German system carried the compensation for a certain length of time. I was under the impression it was 3 months, but the Senator says 13 weeks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Thirteen weeks. That is three months.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do insist that any perfect system ought to contemplate a plan by which the injured employee receives with certainty support for the first few weeks of his injury, whether it be by a system of insurance or national taxation. Under the national-taxation system we have the whole power of Congress. Taxes can be levied to provide the funds.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me we can not deal with that subject in this legislation. There are a great many good reasons for making a waiting period. All laws provide for some waiting period. I will not stop to go into that now, but later on, if I have the opportunity, I will discuss the matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to make an observation. I think there is much merit in the suggestions coming from both sides. I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is right in the view that there may be cases where the gravity of the injury will not be fully developed at the date of the hearing and where justice to the employee will require a review.

I think, on the other hand, there is great force in the argument advanced by the Senator from Georgia that if you place in the hands of a railroad company the power to call for an unlimited number of examinations, you have given the company the enginery by which it can greatly harrass and trouble and perhaps destroy the employee in a contest between a man and a great aggregation of men organized, with its attorneys and its physicians and backed by its capital. All men who have studied the matter know that the thing that is most to be desired after all by the employee is a speedy trial and a final end of the controversy, and that it is the prolonged trial, the endless litigation, which results finally in defeating the benefits the law intends to confer.

I have not that worshipful respect or, I should say, adoration for the Federal judiciary possessed by some men. Neither do I belong to that class who denounce Federal judges in the aggregate and by the wholesale. In the last analysis the best place to have your rights guarded is in some court. The Federal court is not the tribunal to which I would like to see these matters go; but if they are to go to that court, I would rather trust the judge to see that oppressions are not worked or abuses practiced than to leave it to an adjuster or to the claim agent of the road.

I suggest there should be a provision in this bill, as outlined by the Senator from Georgia, that upon a showing of probable cause made to the United States district judge having jurisdiction of the matter he is authorized to order a review of the case. That would safeguard the rights of both parties, because the judge would not order a review unless there was some ground or reason for it, and on the other hand, he would order the review upon a showing of probable cause. It seems to me that meets both difficulties, and that it ought to be accepted without much question. I would be inclined to favor that rather than a proposition to strike out the entire clause.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should prefer that to striking out the entire section. I simply did not have the time to perfect the section. I found it objectionable as it stood, so I sought to strike it out.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, who is in charge of the bill, if he would object to adding after the word "diminished," in section 11, where it occurs in line 17, this language:

Provided, however, That before any such review is had the judge of the United States court shall find as a fact that there is probable cause for such review.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, Mr. President, that would result in having the United States judge practically examine the case in advance of the adjuster doing it and the judge determining whether there has been a change in the conditions. That is the business of the adjuster—it is his sole business.

Mr. REED. The Senator will pardon me. An application filed before the Federal judge, supported, for instance, by an affidavit on the part of the injured man that since the making of the award he had discovered a change in conditions, would be a very simple matter. On the other hand, an application by a railroad company, that since the making of the award they had discovered that the man was not injured at all or that his injuries were not of the character claimed, supported by an affidavit, would be a very simple matter. It would not be a trial. It would not amount to an investigation. It would merely place in the hands of the judge the power of protecting both parties, and it seems to me most reasonable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me the proposition the Senator from Missouri makes could have but one result—to require the employee to hire a lawyer every time he made application to the Federal court for an examination of this kind.

Mr. REED. I do not understand that that would follow. Why would he have to hire a lawyer to file an application of that kind, when it is claimed that under the beneficent provision of this bill he can try his entire case without a lawyer?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the adjuster; not in the court.

Mr. REED. And it is proposed to allow him, in this bill, to be heard in the Federal court without a lawyer, if I understand the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator misunderstands it.

Mr. REED. You have provided practically that, because you have provided that he can not have a good lawyer, because he can not make a contract——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He can get an honest lawyer.

Mr. REED. Patently, if the theory that was painted here by the Senator a few days ago in advocating this bill is to develop into an actuality. Lawyers will no longer hardly be necessary in these cases; the men are to be taken care of by their societies and organizations; and it is a strange thing, now, when we are simply asking that some limitation be placed upon the right to demand examination after an examination, that we are met by the claim that a simple application of that kind can not be made without employing a lawyer. Surely that is so simple a matter that even the class of lawyers who are going to get into the business under this bill will know enough to make that kind of an application. I think a man could do it himself. If the Federal courts are going to act as a sort of guardian of these men, which is the way they are pictured here, benevolently inclined guardians, it will not require very much effort for a poor fellow to make sufficient showing to get that sort of an order made if he has good cause to show.

I am not saying this to provoke discussion, but the section as now drawn is far from just. I submit further, is it not the safer plan to place some limitation upon the power of claim agents to demand repeated examinations? I know of no way to protect both parties better than by allowing the court to supervise the applications for review.

Now, mark you, you are proposing to change a judgment. You are proposing to alter and set aside a judgment by hearing, and perhaps a half a dozen hearings, before an adjuster, although that judgment may have been rendered in a United States court and confirmed upon appeal, and you are giving the adjuster the right to retry the case time after time. There ought to be a limit to that, and if you will vest the discretion in the judge, I am sure he will guard the interests of both sides, not giving unnecessary trials, and at the same time allowing the matter to be opened for review in case fraud has been worked or grievous wrong done.

The Senator will not accept it? Then, of course, we can vote upon this measure, and we will offer our proposition as an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Georgia has concluded, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11.50 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope not. We have limited time, and we want to go through with these amendments to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate take a recess until 11.50 o'clock Monday morning.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, so much has been said about Federal judges that I would not do justice to my own feelings if I did not say that so far as concerns the district in which I live we have a Federal judge whom I would trust with any question of law or question of fact or question of right as quickly as I would any man who lives; and if our own district alone was to be affected, and the whole question was to be decided without a jury, it could be left to him to pass upon the rights of parties, and under a law which would give him a fair latitude in fixing those rights we would know that every man who had any claim in the district would be dealt with fairly, equitably, and kindly. A higher type of lawyer or judge sits upon no bench anywhere in the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia to strike out section 11.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we will renew on Monday our criticism of section 11 and present an amendment to it which I hope the Senate will adopt.

Now, after the word "require," in section 13, paragraph 9, line 11, I move to insert the words "The reasonable attorney's fees of the employee shall be taxed as cost against the defendant by the adjuster or by the court."

I want to discuss that for just a moment. I can not think that such a provision would be dangerous.

In support of that amendment, discussing it generally now, but not pressing it for an immediate vote, I have this to say: That you propose to cut to very small sums the compensation of these men under this bill. You propose to leave them the most scanty support, a bare possible chance to live. You provide a judge to try the cases. It is true you have called him an adjuster, and you have a provision about notice of claim made before him, but if the employee gets his rights he must have a lawyer. This bill does not allow a contract between the employee and his lawyer, and it limits recoveries to small amounts. Do not take the necessary expense of trial out of the meager pittance that you leave the men. Allow the adjuster to tax the reasonable cost and the reasonable lawyers' fees and charge them to the railroad companies. That is my suggestion. I will press that on Monday and pass on now.

After the word "required," on page 20, section 14, line 21, insert the words "or without giving notice where such notice is not required."

I wish to bring this especially to the attention of the Senator from Utah, because I think when he examines the bill he will agree to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the section already provides that in default of an agreement, after giving notice of the accident when the same is required, within six months from the date of the injury the proceedings shall be instituted. It does not seem to me that the amendment suggested by the Senator is necessary, but it puts the question beyond any doubt, and therefore I shall not object to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Senator to say he would not object to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall not object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought possibly some question might be raised.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So far as I am able to do so, I will accept the suggested amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will offer the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator repeat the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After the word "required." on page 20, section 14, line 21, insert the words "or without giving notice where such notice is not required."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On page 22, section 14, after line 11, add:

Provided, That where an employee institutes suit for an injury, claiming that same did not take place while he was employed in interstate or foreign commerce, and fails to recover in such suit, the limitation of the time for his right to proceed under this act shall begin with the termination of such suit, and not with the time when the injury to him occurred.

There will be a great many cases in which there is much doubt as to which of the laws is applicable. The employee may think that the statute we are passing is not applicable, and in that event it seems to me the statute should run from the trial of his case in the other court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not want to say that I will accept that now, but I recognize that there is a good deal of merit in the suggestion made by the Senator.

However, let me suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the language of the proviso is "and fails to recover in such suit, the limitation of the time for his right to proceed under this act shall begin," and so on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it ought to be qualified so as to read "fails to recover on account of."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely. That is the suggestion I was going to make, "fails to recover on the ground that he was not engaged in interstate commerce."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will agree to that qualification.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will not press that to-night. I am very much inclined to agree with the Senator about it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well. Amend section 14 by adding paragraph 8, after pargraph 7, as follows:

(8) Employees shall have the privilege of enforcing the rights given to them under this act before the adjuster or to proceed in any State court having jurisdiction, and no suit brought in a State court under this act shall be removed to the United States court.

I will not press that now. It speaks for itself and argument upon it is hardly necessary.

My next amendment provides for striking out section 16 and substituting what I shall read:

That on the hearing of a cause of action arising under this act either party shall have the right to elect to commute the monthly payments into a fixed sum, and in that event the fixed sum shall be the present value of the annuities herein provided for, the present value to be calculated on the basis of interest at 5 per cent.

I am not sure whether that is best. I have doubt about it myself. My earnest desire is to see these men served. I want to suggest a criticism on the section as it is embodied in the bill. It undertakes to make these claims a lien, in case of failure of the roads, superior to all other liens. I do not see how that can be done. I do not see that Congress has any such power. Take the case of a railroad in a State beginning in the State and ending in the State with a State charter. Under its State charter it has issued bonds and mortgaged its property for those bonds and they have been sold. Subsequently it is consolidated in another line and enters into interstate commerce. What authority has Congress to divest those liens? What power has Congress to do it? I think it is a very dangerous proposition for Congress to be undertaking, under its interstate commerce power, to assume the authority to divest an existing lien, and I am exceedingly doubtful myself whether such an act could divest the lien.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if his amendment contemplates striking out this part of section 16:

That the assignment of any cause of action arising under this act, or of any payments due or to become due under the provisions hereof, shall be void. Every liability and all payments due or to become due under this act shall be exempt from levy or sale for private debt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, it would strike all of it out. I do not like to see it all stricken out, and yet I do think it ought to be qualified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why does not the Senator offer an amendment in reference to it instead of striking out this very excellent provision, which is for the protection of the laboring man?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would answer the Senator that I simply did not have the time to perfect it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would not take five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest that the Senator do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to do it; but if I wanted to modify it I would not strike out the two first provisions which make an exemption fund for the laboring man of these monthly payments so that they may not be taken from him, and so that the object of the bill, which is to give him support, may be accomplished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the provision to which the Senator from Georgia calls attention we had ourselves some doubt about, but in examining the State laws we found many statutes where the workman had been given a lien for his wages which was made superior to all other claims against the property, and those statutes seemed to have been sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Were they sustained on statutes made subsequent to the mortgages executed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is my understanding; on the same theory they sustained the mechanics' lien, although there was a mortgage upon the property. If the mechanic builds a house and adds that to the property, he has a lien for the material which he furnished upon the house. The workman who puts his work into the operations of the railroad has been instrumental in keeping it a going concern, and upon that theory, as I understand it, the statutes have been sustained. However, I frankly say to the Senator that it is a matter about which I am not entirely clear. What I was going to say finally was that if we can do it, it seems to me that we ought to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree with the Senator about that, and if the Senator——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The most that could happen to it would be for the court to say that it could not be given application as against existing mortgages. That would not affect the validity of the law in any respect. It would simply give it effect as applied to new mortgages or to new liens. Inasmuch as it will not endanger the law in any other respect, I think we had better leave it in and let the courts deal with it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The trouble about that is that if it is not valid your whole system of long-time payments is objectionable. It is exceedingly dangerous to provide that the payments shall be monthly, drawn out through indefinite time, unless a lien can be given for the delayed payments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, he will observe that in the bill we have provided that the findings of the adjuster shall go to the court and become automatically a judgment of the court.

The judgment, therefore, of the Federal court would become a lien upon the property within the county where the judgment was rendered and in any other county where it might be filed. Therefore the judgment would constitute a good lien against the railroad property and against all debts created after the time of the rendering of the judgment. That, I think, would afford a pretty fair protection for the payment of these claims. But, in addition to that, we put in this provision to strengthen it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To make that judgment good, in nearly every section it must be carried to the various counties and recorded. It seemed to me that the bill had not gone far enough to take care of the rights of the parties as to the monthly payments, that it had not sufficiently safeguarded their rights against possible future financial trouble on the part of the companies, and it was for that reason I suggested the elective privilege of lump-sum payments, doubting myself the wisdom of the lump-sum payments and yet objecting to leaving the plaintiffs with no protection indefinitely, doubting very seriously whether the provision with reference to prior liens would be effective.

Now, there is one other criticism upon section 16 that I wish to make. What power has this employee to base an employment of his doctor on? How can he obtain the services of a doctor? At least this provision should be amended to allow him to subject his recovery to the proved expenses of his trial. You leave him nothing to borrow a cent on. You leave him nothing to send for witnesses on. When he sends for his witness he has to pay his railroad fare and his per diem to get him. You leave him helpless to litigate by providing that what he gets can not be subjected to any kind of lien; there ought to be some provision of modification that will facilitate his protecting his rights. You just leave him absolutely helpless in front of the adjuster and the claim agent so far as financial resources for litigation are concerned.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This situation appears to be one which can arise only in case the railway company is insolvent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. What I am discussing now——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I mean the one making these allowances a first lien.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have passed from that. I was discussing another provision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Perhaps I am breaking in at the wrong place. I thought that was still being considered. I had been studying it.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask what has become of the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is simply here. I am discussing it.

Mr. ROOT. I mean what has become of the proposed amendment relating to the lien.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has it been laid over?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not formally introduced any of these amendments. I am reading them for information and discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia did not offer it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I read some that met the approval of the Senator from Utah, we have agreed on them and passed others.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator whether it is his purpose to introduce any further amendments this afternoon?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. And ask for a vote on them?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not tell about that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What objection has the Senator to acting upon proposed amendments such as this one?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are not offered yet. I should desire to discuss them all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And then offer them later.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Offer them from time to time as I think the most judicious time develops.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was going to suggest to the Senator that we could vote more intelligently, it seems to me, on an amendment after the discussion relating to that particular amendment had closed. If we take them en bloc we may have a great deal of confusion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We will try to take them up again and relieve the Senator from that embarrassment on Monday, or we might possibly reach one that we think it desirable to bring to a vote before then.

I propose to amend section 20 by striking out, in lines 19, 20, and 21, the following words: "No employee's wages shall be considered to be more than $100 a month."

We insist that provision should be stricken out; that the arbitrary provision that no employee may be regarded as making over a hundred dollars a month is utterly inexcusable. We insist that if an engineer is making $200 a month or $250 a month he should be treated as making that, and for the Senate to pass a bill arbitrarily cutting a man's estimated pay to a hundred dollars a month, although it may be two and a half times that much, can find no logic for its defense. That amendment I shall certainly press, and I hope Senators will give us a "yea-and-nay" vote on it. I trust Senators will strike that particular provision from this bill.

I propose to amend section 21, line 14, by striking out the words "for a period of eight years," and add in line 15, after the word "death," the words "during the life expectancy of the deceased."

Senators will at once see what is the object of that amendment. It is simply that we deny the propriety of limiting the meager compensation the widow is to receive to eight years. No defense can be made of the proposition to cut her off in that way. If she remarries, of course, she loses it, and if she dies she loses it. The committee had the statistics before them that the average widowhood of the widows of deceased railroad employees was 15 years, and yet they cut down the time that they give such widows the paltry part of their husband's earnings to eight years, and they cut off the children at 16. I was astonished when on yesterday Senators declined to increase that age period in the case of the children.

I desire to urge upon the Senate that this bill does not fully compensate or justly recognize the rights of the widows of these men; that when it arbitrarily provides that $100 shall be considered the limit of the salary and then arbitrarily provides that the widow shall not have more than 40 per cent of that, and not have it for more than eight years, and seeks to wipe out her present rights, it can not be defended. And the million eight hundred thousand railroad men will rise and protest against it. They ought to do so; they ought to make themselves heard in protest against such treatment.

I propose to amend section 21, on page 30, in lines 17, 18, 21, and 22, by striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting "twenty-one," and on page 31, line 16, by striking out the words "for the unexpired part of the period of eight years." That amendment provides that the time children shall receive compensation for the death of their fathers shall not be 16 years, but 21 years. Why not? The law gives them far more now.

You can not magnify the idea of taking care of those whose own negligence is the sole cause of accident and mislead the people who are interested in this measure. They will come back to you and say, "If, in the kindness of the legislators, those who are injured exclusively by their own negligence are to be cared for, do not take the money, two or three times over, out of the pockets and out of the rights of those who have been injured when free from fault." We will urge upon the Senate the amendment striking out the age limit at 16 and putting it at 21.

I propose to move to amend, on page 34, lines 5 and 6, by striking out "50 per centum," so as to read: "Where permanent total disability results from any injury there shall be paid to the injured employee the monthly wages of such employee during the remainder of his life."

Why not? Later on in this bill I propose to offer an amendment providing that compensation here suggested shall only go to those employees who are injured without fault on their part, but that the compensation of those injured through their own fault shall be the amount provided in the pending bill; but I shall seek to amend the pending bill so as to provide that the employee injured without his fault through the negligence of the corporation shall have preserved to him at least the financial compensation to which he is now entitled under the employers' liability act. I do not ask that he shall have compensation for his pain and suffering and deformity, but I do insist—and that is the effect of this amendment—that the employee who is injured by the negligence of the defendant railroad company shall receive the compensation that he now gets, so far as his financial loss is concerned, though not, I repeat, for his pain and suffering and deformity. I ask that his compensation shall be proportioned to the income that he was making; that is, if his total disability is brought about by an accident, then his compensation shall be his monthly wages during the total disability; and if that total disability is permanent, then that it shall be during his life; and if it is temporary, then that it shall be while the disability lasts. That amendment I shall ask you to vote upon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Several Senators have been to me and suggested that they are weary, that it is Saturday afternoon, and that we ought to take a recess until Monday morning. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Georgia, if it would be agreeable to him, that we can meet at an earlier hour than has heretofore been suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to press these proposed amendments just a little further, and then I shall be ready to agree to a recess. I want it known that there are issues between us; I want the issues to be known, and I want them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; for a question, but for nothing else.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I want. I want to find out what this issue is. Do I understand the Senator correctly in this, that he wants to preserve all the old distinctions between the men who sustained injuries in line of duty, but who are chargeable with negligence, and those who are not negligent? Does he wish to preserve that old distinction and the old distinctions relating to fellow servants?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly not; I think they were barbarous.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. Where are you going to draw the line between the men for whom you want to preserve the right to recover damages, as they have it under the old conditions, and limit others to the rights and benefits of this act?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can answer the Senator easily. I want to preserve to every man the rights he has at common law and under the employers' liability act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the employers' liability act?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the act of 1908.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Precisely. I want to preserve for the employees what they now have, and I want whatever else you do to be something more for them without taking from them what they now have.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You will still have a class of worthy men who go out maimed, halt, blind, and some of them to their deaths, who can not be helped under the employers' liability act of 1908, and who are absolutely remediless at common law or under the laws of the several States. The Senator from Georgia would give that class, which is very large in number and very worthy, the benefit of this bill, but, of course, they would be denied any other benefit?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And he wishes to reserve these additional benefits for the more fortunate class who might otherwise come in under the act of 1908 or under the old rules pertaining to negligence?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that that is the Senator's position?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Partly so and partly not. I can make it very clear to the Senator, clearer than his question would indicate. I believe in the employers' liability act; I think it is a righteous law. I think the line of decisions following Priestly v. Fowler were court-made law to a large extent, built on precedents and at the sacrifice of human rights and human blood. I think that the Congress has wisely passed the employers' liability act. I want to leave to the men their rights both at common law and under the employers' liability act as they stand, and I am willing to join the Senator in giving the benefits of the meager pay that is offered in this bill to the men who heretofore have not been provided for; but I am not willing for you to take care of the men who have not heretofore been provided for by taking $2 out of the pockets and from the rights of the men heretofore provided for for every dollar which I believe this act will give to the men who have not been heretofore provided for.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One theory—I will not undertake to state the whole argument in favor of this proposition—but one theory upon which it is based is this——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. I do not want to take the time of the Senate longer than 6 o'clock, and I am anxious to put in the remainder of my amendments before that time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wanted to get the Senator's view of this matter. It will take but a moment to state what I have in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We are not dealing with cases that have already occurred; we are dealing with cases that will occur in the future. The effect of a law of this kind is to say to the employer, "There will be accidents happen to your employees in the future. It can not be told in advance whether those accidents will occur in such manner that you will be liable for a large amount of damages or that you will be liable for nothing. Now, we will say in advance to you, no matter how this accident occurs, whether under circumstances that you will be liable or under circumstances that you will not, we will compel you to pay what we regard as a fair proportion of the loss." Then we say to the employee, "You are going to be injured in the future, but it can not be told whether you will be injured under such circumstances that you can recover a large verdict or that you can recover nothing, and we say to you in advance, no matter how this accident may occur we will guarantee you a certain definite sum of money."

It seems to me that that presents a logical and sensible basis for a law and presents a basis upon which the Supreme Court would hold the law to be constitutional, but where the Senator proposes to provide in his amendment that the master or the employer shall continue to be liable for his negligence and superadd to that a liability in every case where he is not liable for negligence you propose a law that the Supreme Court would not fail to declare to be unconstitutional.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think the Senator from Utah believes that if this bill were made cumulative, without being made the sole remedy, it would be unconstitutional or that it would affect its constitutionality at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do think that it would affect its constitutionality. That is the precise law that was involved in the Ives case in New York, a case which I think has been somewhat misunderstood, but that was the precise law which the Court of Appeals of New York held to be unconstitutional.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think there is any trouble about that; not the slightest.

What are they undertaking to do upon this bill? The Senator says they propose in the future to hold out to the injured employees certain compensation. Let us scan it a little. That compensation is not based on what they make; it does not recognize what each man is earning; it undertakes arbitrarily to cut the salaries of many of them in half; and then it undertakes to cut that half in two. They undertake to do it with no statistics and no information as to what the men get now. They do it arbitrarily at a time when the men are beginning to receive the benefits from the most beneficent act that was ever passed. They do it in a way that can have but one effect, and that is to serve the railroad companies, the defendants.

I deny the right or the wisdom of wiping out the present laws and giving such a meager, trifling substitute to the men. Therefore I urge that if you take from the employees who are hurt without negligence all compensation for pain and suffering and deformity you have taken one-third from them. It is as little as you should do to leave them with provision made to pay their actual financial loss. As to the others, those who are injured as the result of contributory negligence, one-half the sum you give could be agreed on; but to take the man who was free from negligence and who was making, perhaps, $250 a month, and who was injured exclusively by the negligence of the defendant, and arbitrarily cut his salary to a hundred dollars, say you will not recognize him as making but two-fifths of what he was making; then arbitrarily say you will pay him but one-half of that two-fifths, or one-fifth of what he was making before; and then arbitrarily say, when you injure him for life by cutting off his arm or leg, that you will not pay except for a few months that paltry $50, only a little over a year's compensation in all, is treatment you can not defend. You can not defend it on the theory that you want a contribution to take care of the negligent; you can not defend it on the theory that perhaps he might have been injured when he was negligent. He might well say to you, "Suppose I was; you give me but a year's salary, and I would rather risk that." You have not put enough in it; you have made it narrower and closer and harder than the law found in England or in Germany.

I criticize the plan of compensation provided by this bill for those permanently disabled to a partial extent. If a man has lost his arm, his damage is for life, not for a few months, and he should receive compensation for life. What is he to do after the few months pass?

That is not the plan upon which you handle pensions. Take your pension laws, which I brought here to call to your attention. You give a hundred dollars to a man who has lost two hands or two feet. You give him from $50 to $75 for smaller injuries. You go through the whole list of injuries, and the compensation is for life. Why should a permanent injury, although only partial in its extent, not be compensated for for life? If the arm is gone for life, if the leg is gone for life, the theory of this bill, which compensates for a few months and stops, is unsound. The true rule should be to determine what percentage shall be allowed for the extent of the injury, and carry that through life.

What is he to do at the end of a few months? This bill was to have been rushed through the Senate in a day and it would have been rushed through in less than a day had not some of us felt that attention should be called to it. You will still rush it through about 30 days after the committee reported on it. Great matters of this kind are usually allowed to lie upon the desk for the fullest consideration. Why are the Senators unwilling for it to go over until December? Are they afraid it will weaken as it is publicly examined? Are they afraid it will break down in front of public criticism?

I hope it will not be passed across the Hall. I hope that, even if the Senate decides to pass it, it will not be concluded before next December. If it is to be postponed until next December, why would it not be wise to keep it here and let us consider it until next December, too? I do not believe it can possibly be rushed through in the other House, although I do not know. It is a violation of the rules of this body to surmise what the other House will do, and I suppose I should withdraw the surmise.

This bill, amended as I suggested, would provide that where a partial permanent disability takes place it would give compensation through life. I suggest that an amount equal to 50 per cent of his wages shall be paid to the injured employee for the balance of his life in the following instances:

The loss by separation of arm at or above the elbow joint or the permanent and complete loss of use of one arm.

The loss by separation of one hand at or above the wrist joint or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one hand.

The loss by separation of one leg at or above the knee joint or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one leg.

Then, further down, I suggest smaller percentages of compensation, but I carry the percentages through life where the partial injury is one which will run through life. The bill as now framed will only compensate to the extent of a small amount each month for a few months for these injuries.

Mr. President, I have brought these amendments now to the attention of the Senate, if not to the attention of Senators, and I trust somewhat, through the splendid opportunity that this forum furnishes, to those outside of the Senate. As I stated at the outset, I have never had any thought of undertaking anything like an obstruction of legislation in the sense of an effort to continuously prevent a vote; but I have all the way through contemplated, if it was necessary to obtain just a few days' hearing, to waste some time, if compelled to waste it. However, I am glad to say that what I feared would be a situation that might force us to that course has not existed. I have finished all that I wish to say at this time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the bill be reprinted, showing the amendments thus far adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask also that the amendments offered by me be reprinted. There is an error on the first page, and the edition is exhausted.

RETIRED SOLDIERS (S. DOC. 642).

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1912.

Resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to pass such laws, rules, and regulations concerning the navigation of vessels engaged in international and coastwise trade as will safeguard and protect the lives and property of passengers and crews, and for the equipment of such vessels and steamers with sufficient and adequate boats, rafts, and appliances.

Whereas it has come to the attention of this body that on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1912, more than 1,500 lives were destroyed by the disastrous collision of the steamship Titanic, while proceeding to the port of New York; and

Whereas it further appears to this body that the existing laws, rules, and regulations concerning and appertaining to the navigation of vessels and steamers while engaged in the transportation of passengers between international and coastwise ports are inefficient for the protection and preservation of the life and property of the passengers and crews thereof; and

Whereas it appears to this body that the existing laws, rules, and regulations concerning and appertaining to the equipment of vessels with boats, rafts, and other appliances and apparatus for the protection and preservation of the lives and property of the passengers and crews while engaged in the transportation of passengers between international and coastwise ports are wholly inadequate and inefficient; and

Whereas it appears to this body that many vessels and steamers at present engaged in international and coastwise trade are being so navigated as to endanger the lives of the passengers and crews thereof, and that they are insufficiently and inadequately equipped and provided with boats, rafts, or other apparatus and appliances for the safety and protection of the passengers and crews in case of accident, collision, or other disaster: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, requested to take such immediate action as in its judgment it may deem fit and proper to the end that efficient laws, rules, and regulations concerning the navigation of vessels engaged in international and coastwise trade be passed and adopted as will safeguard and protect the lives and property of passengers and crews thereof, and to the further end that all such vessels and steamers be equipped with sufficient and adequate boats, rafts, and other apparatus and appliances for the safety, protection, and preservation of the passengers and crews thereof; therefore be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from this State in Congress now assembled be and they are requested to use their utmost efforts to the end aforesaid, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each of them forthwith.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, May 3, 1912.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 29th day of April, A. D. 1912.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date first above written.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 6685) granting a pension to Sara Sibree Bornemann (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 6686) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit exchanges of lands of Osage allottees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following joint resolution:

On April 30, 1912:

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution relative to the rebuilding of certain levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the routine morning business or as soon thereafter as there may be an opportunity, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the agricultural appropriation bill, being House bill 18960.

RECESS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate now take a recess until the calendar day of Monday at 11.50 o'clock a. m.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator was going to make the hour of meeting earlier than that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Say, 11 o'clock.

Mr. REED. It will take a long time to discuss the long amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well; I will change it to the hour of 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Saturday, May 4) the Senate took a recess until Monday, May 6, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 4, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-living God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thee for that deep and hidden spring within, which is ever urging us onward and upward to the heights of spiritual glory. That something, strange and mysterious, which will not be satisfied with less than the best make us tractable to the holy influence. That our light may so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DAMS ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay before the House Senate bill 5930, an act extending the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River, granted by act approved February 29, 1908, a House bill for the same purpose being on the calendar, reported from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill (S. 5930) to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908.

Mr. MANN. Is this the same bill as the bill reported to the House?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is, with a slight difference, which I want to correct by an amendment. It is for the same purpose.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference?

Mr. ADAMSON. The Senate bill requires the completion in conformity with the act of June 23, 1910. The House bill did not contain that provision, but the report sets out the reasons why it was not so amended as recommended by the War Department. The only difference is that we would like to exempt it from the second proviso in section 4 of the act of June 23, 1910, by reason of the expenditure of money heretofore made in reliance upon the original grant of consent.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that where a Senate bill is taken from the Speaker's table because it is substantially the same as the House bill already reported, it must be substantially similar, otherwise the Members of the House can not tell what they are voting upon.

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly the rule, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Certainly bills are not substantially similar where one bill provides for 50 years' franchise and another bill for an unlimited franchise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct.

Mr. ADAMSON. The bills are for the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference if they are for the same purpose, if they are not substantially the same. If objection is made, the bill will have to be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MANN. I will not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 3, after the word "six," insert:

"Excepting the second proviso in section 4 of the said act of June 23, 1910, that the authority granted shall terminate at the end of a period not to exceed 50 years. This extension of time is exempted from that proviso by reason of the expenditures of money heretofore made in reliance upon the original grant of consent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar bill (H. R. 22092) to extend the time of the Twin City Power Co. for the completion of a dam across the Savannah River was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have a request for unanimous consent, which I have reduced to writing and will ask to have the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 22143) to establish a qualified independent government for the Philippines, and to fix the date when such qualified independence shall become absolute and complete, and for other purposes, and also House joint resolution 278, to authorize the President of the United States to secure the neutralization of the Philippine Islands and the recognition of their independence by international agreement, which bill and resolution have been favorably reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs and are now upon the calendar, shall have the same status as privileged reports of committees provided for in the first section of paragraph 56 of Rule XI; and that in the consideration thereof in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union general debate shall be confined to their subject matter and matters relating thereto. General debate upon the two propositions shall be limited to 30 hours, one-half of same to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not catch the latter part of the reading.

Mr. GARRETT. As to the amount of time and division of time? It fixes the amount of time at 30 hours, 15 hours on a side on the two propositions.

Mr. MANN. Is it the idea of the gentleman to have these bills made practically continuing orders, subject to the consideration of appropriation bills and other privileged matters, or to come in ahead of appropriation bills?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there is no intention of displacing the business of the House with the consideration of this resolution any more than is proper. It will be a matter of agreement and arrangement between the chairmen of the various committees and the Speaker and other gentlemen of the House.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but we met this situation the other day: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] had the Panama toll bill made privileged. Thereupon he intended to call it up ahead of the legislative appropriation bill and had very strong equities in his favor, and now is promised that it will come up ahead of the naval appropriation bill, the sundry civil bill, and the general deficiency bill. Does not the gentleman think that his request ought to be subject to the consideration of appropriation bills, so that there will be no conflict in the House between the chairmen of the different committees endeavoring to get the Chair to recognize one or the other?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, I have a provision that I shall ask to have inserted in the gentleman's request, or I shall be forced to object; providing that general appropriation bills shall at all times have preference over the bill and resolution herein mentioned. It is very embarrassing to those in charge of appropriation bills, as well as to the Speaker, to attempt to keep track of business that may be made privileged, unless closer contact can be had, because of the work that engrosses Members who are preparing bills, and inadvertently causes misunderstandings to arise. If this provision be adopted no misunderstanding can arise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that there are two special orders in force now. One of them will only take one day; that is, the next legislative day after the consideration of the legislative bill is ended, excluding Wednesday and the first and third Mondays, is to be devoted to business on the Private Calendar. The other is the one the gentleman from Illinois referred to, the Panama Canal toll bill. That is a standing order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement as the reason for asking to have this done in this way. Of course it could be done by a rule. A rule can be brought in, and if the House chooses to pass it, it will make it in order at any time.

But it was thought best after a conference between the majority and minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs to try to do it in this way, in the belief that it would interfere less with the business of the House. If we brought in a rule, it would be almost impossible to know in advance what time to fix. I think under this plan there will be a better opportunity for gentlemen to prepare themselves for debate, and there will be better opportunities for Members to know when the bill will be likely to come up than if we resorted to the other method.

Mr. MANN. The old practice, which I think was better, was to make a bill like this a continuing order, subject to appropriation bills and other privileged matters before the House, so that when other privileged matters were to come up the bill would not be in order, but when we did not have other privileged matters in order the bill would be a continuing order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have never been a believer in tying the hands of the House in advance. There are a number of bills that, in my judgment, are as much—and perhaps more—desirable to be considered than the bill now being presented for special privilege. Believing that, and realizing the time of year, the situation of the calendar generally, and the need of putting appropriation bills through, I shall take upon myself the burden of objecting to unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

NAVAL EXPENDITURES.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged resolution from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 363.

Whereas it was provided by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911, that certain sums should be expended only upon certain terms and conditions, namely:

First. For "Increase of the Navy; torpedo boats: On account of submarine torpedo boats and subsurface destroyers, heretofore authorized, $890,833.88: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and during the construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, mechanics engaged in doing the work for which this appropriation is made: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to payments to be made upon vessels authorized prior to the approval of this act."

Second. It was further provided that "The total increase of the Navy, $26,005,547.67." * * * "Provided, That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States, or the commerce or trade between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract."

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, what sums appropriated in said act have been expended for ships, torpedo boats, armor or armament, ship plates, structural steel, or machinery, and what amount, if any, has been paid for said torpedo boats or their armament, or for any supplies, munitions of war, or other articles or things provided for in said act, to the United States Steel Corporation, or any subsidiary company of said corporation, and if any such purchase has been made, whether before or after the 27th day of October, 1911.

And the Secretary of the Navy is further directed to report whether the Navy Department has received bids or entered into any contract agreement or understanding, whether oral or written, for the purchase of armor or armor plate, structural steel, ship plates, machinery, or other article or thing provided for in said act with said United States Steel Corporation, or any subsidiary company thereof, and whether such contract or agreement, if made, was entered into before or after said 27th day of October, 1911.

If any such purchases have been made, bids received, or contracts entered into with said United States Steel Corporation, or any subsidiary company thereof, the Secretary of the Navy is directed to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, all the facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the Navy Department under which any such purchases may have been made, bids received, or contracts, understandings, or agreements negotiated or entered into.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "resolved," in line 1, page 2, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, directed to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, a full statement and complete list of all bids received, contracts made, and moneys expended, giving the names of all persons, firms, or corporations submitting bids or with whom contracts were made, together with the dates and amounts of each bid submitted and contract entered into, under the provisions of the paragraphs 'Increase of the Navy; torpedo boats' and 'Increase of the Navy; armor and armament,' of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1911."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the author of the resolution.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the real menace to the prosperity of the people and the maintenance and security of this Government is within and not without our borders. There is no probability that an "army with banners" will in the near future cross our borders or that a hostile fleet will threaten the cities by the sea.

We are face to face with the menace of monopoly. It is farcical for this Government to attempt to foster and restrain monopoly at the same time. If we are to-day unable to build battleships without paying an excessive price to an Armor-Plate Trust, operating in open violation of law, and without the necessity of having high officials either close their eyes to such violation of law or connive at it, then we should start now upon the construction of a sufficient plant to make our own armor plate. The frauds which have hitherto been perpetrated should warn us that we can not expect these concerns to manufacture armor of such quality as to stand the tests which they have so often evaded or to supply this armor at a reasonable price.

If the makers of armor are sufficiently powerful to force officials to shut their eyes to an unlawful combination, even now arraigned by the Department of Justice, they may be powerful enough to force those same officials to close their eyes to the inferiority and defects in that same armor plate. Both the majesty of the law, the security of the thousands of brave men, and the future dominance of the flag upon the sea demand the passage of this resolution. Every Secretary of the Navy who has investigated this question in the last 20 years has found that an Armor-Plate Trust did exist even before the formation of the gigantic combinations in the steel business which now exist were ever formed, before the United States Steel Corporation and the International Harvester Co. were ever dreamed of.

If isolated concerns, competing in other respects, were enabled in the past repeatedly and successfully to sell to this Government faulty and inefficient armor, attached to the ships by weak and treacherous bolts, and if they were able, as has been demonstrated, to induce their employees and others to supply false and worthless tests to such armor and fastenings, although they knew the lives of brave men and the honor and security of their country were imperiled by their pitiless and criminal cupidity, and enabled to form combinations and to make agreements international in their scope, by which this worthless armor and its treacherous fastenings were sold to this and other Governments, may we not reasonably apprehend that great combinations, which are now charged by the Department of Justice with the gravest offenses and the most extensive and pernicious combinations in restraint of trade in violation of the law, will not at this time overlook this hitherto fertile field for exploitation and extortion?

Congress, dreading the consequences of such a combination and apprehending the perils to national honor and security and to those who have consecrated their lives to their country's defense, wisely enacted this drastic legislation expressly prohibiting the Secretary of the Navy from expending the funds of this Government upon those who do not respect its laws and who may care less for its security than their own personal emolument.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The committee recommended the striking out of the preamble, and that vote comes after the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the preamble.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC DEBT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, for the purpose of inserting a very able address made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] before the Committee on the Judiciary on the 24th of April, 1912, in reference to the formation of the State of West Virginia and the obligations on the part of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a speech made by his colleague [Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right of object, has not this speech already been printed by the Government?

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Not in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. No; but printed in the hearings.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. As a part of the hearings only, and is interspersed with other matter. The speech, I think, is of sufficient historical value to justify its preservation in this form.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, although I doubt very much the propriety of printing any document by the Government in one form and then in another.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address referred to is as follows:

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia said:

Mr. Chairman, at the outbreak of the Civil War the Commonwealth of Virginia was the fifth in population and wealth of all the States in the Union, and by far the most populous of those which had seceded therefrom. Five of her eminent citizens had held the presidential office, and their terms as such aggregated in length one-half of the time from the adoption of the Constitution to the outbreak of that great war.

On May 23, 1861, this great State, by an ordinance of her convention, adopted by her voters, seceded from the Union of States—that organization to the formation of which her illustrious statesmen had so materially contributed, in the most notable gathering for civic purposes which the world has ever known. Her greatest citizen—the world's greatest benefactor—had presided over the deliberations of this convention and for eight years had occupied the highest place of honor in the Government thereby ordained. Her people, with that of many of the other States, believed that the contracting powers which had formed the Union possessed the right to dissolve it whenever the necessity, in their opinion, might arise therefor.

It is idle at this time to comment upon the right, then believed by many to exist, of a State to separate itself from the Union. It is sufficient to say that there was then a division in sentiment upon that question throughout the whole country, and had it been submitted to an impartial jury of its ablest lawyers it is impossible to say what opinion would have been rendered by the tribunal.

From time to time as the world has made its onward march of progress great questions have arisen which no legal tribunal, however able, has been competent to decide, and in such cases a resort to force has been the only means by which the all-important question could be finally determined and set at rest. In consequence of this truth the people of Virginia and of the other seceding States are no more entitled to discredit for voting the several ordinances of secession than are those other persons who oftentimes are called upon to settle by their vote momentous issues and who register thereon their honest differences of opinion.

Upon the adoption of the ordinance by the convention, and before it was decided by the people, a counter movement was begun in those counties of Virginia lying on the west side of the Allegheny Mountains to avert, so far as possible, the effect upon them of the secession and keep that territory within the Union.

It will not be seriously contended at this day that, however patriotic the people behind this movement were, there was any warrant either in the Constitution of the Federal Union or that of the State of Virginia for the uprising which finally resulted in the division of the Commonwealth and the formation out of her territory of a new State.

I do not desire to be misunderstood in what I am now saying, nor as casting the least reflection upon the origin of that good State in which I have resided since its formation, and of which, or a part of which, I am an humble Representative in this Congress. When I say that West Virginia was not admitted to the Union by any warrant in the Constitution of the United States, but, on the contrary, as I believe, in direct opposition to one of its plainest mandates, I do not for a moment contend that in a broader sense and under a higher law it was illegally admitted.

There are certain laws of necessity which arise higher than written constitutions, and which are oftentimes invoked for inhabitants of territories placed in unusual circumstances. Constitutions are the handiwork of men, while these higher laws to which I have referred are made by no human power and arise wholly out of the needs and exigencies of the occasion which calls for their enforcement. It was through no written constitution that our forefathers of the thirteen British Colonies, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, of their own volition and in the power of their God, arose and cast off the yoke of a foreign government which oppressed them, and made free for the occupancy and enjoyment of those who might succeed them the most glorious country under the sun. No revolution, however beneficial may have been its object, has ever been effected by or through the provisions of a written constitution. West Virginia is not the child of the National Constitution, but is the offspring of that greater law of necessity before referred to, and her lineage from the god of war is as direct as was that of the sons of the vestal virgin who founded the ancient city on the Tiber, which for many centuries controlled the destinies of the world.

I have naught but praise for those eminent citizens then residing within the present boundaries of the new State, but now, alas, with but two or three exceptions gone to their reward, who had the foresight, the ability, and the courage to formulate and press forward to consummation the plans for the creation of the new State. They are entitled to more credit when it is considered that they had no written provisions to rely upon, but were compelled to resort to that higher rule of action which in the extremities of peoples have always guided their most eminent statesmen. From the days when Joshua established his followers on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, where they became a renowned nation of antiquity, until the present, those who have succeeded in their efforts for the betterment of the conditions of their people have not only received, but have deserved, the plaudits of the historian.

I shall presently endeavor to show that the State of West Virginia was formed and admitted into the Union through the conviction of the necessity therefor and as an absolute military measure in time of war by those who were in a situation to know all the circumstances. If I can succeed in this, I have made proof of one proposition upon which the relief asked for in the pending resolution is partly predicated.

On January 1, 1861, the Commonwealth of Virginia was indebted to various creditors in the aggregate sum of about $33,000,000, and the object of this resolution is to have the National Government assume that part of such debt which under ordinary circumstances would be equitably chargeable to the territory of West Virginia, and as to which the forced separation without the consent of Virginia injured and crippled that State in her means of payment. It can not be maintained that the effect of this resolution will be solely for the benefit of the bondholding creditors of Virginia or that it may give rise to fraudulent collusions relative to the debt, because it is safeguarded by a provision that no money whatever shall be paid thereunder except pursuant to the findings of the Supreme Court of the United States or upon such other settlement as shall be entirely satisfactory to Congress.

The debt was contracted for the purpose of making internal improvements within the State of Virginia; and at that time the counties now composing the new State were not populous; many of them were unsettled, and little if any of the money for which the debt arose was expended within that territory. So that it can be maintained that upon a truly equitable settlement of the accounts for improvement nothing would have been due from the new State to the old.

It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States, in a preliminary opinion in the cause pending before it, has held that the territory now comprising West Virginia should contribute to the payment of this debt; but this conclusion is reached because of the original unity of the two States and of the existence of such unity at the time of the creation of the debt, and is not based upon any theory that West Virginia, as a separate entity, ever agreed to discharge any part thereof; and it is expressly stated that the ordinances relative to the formation of the State of West Virginia, and the constitution afterwards adopted by its voters, have no weight in the determination of the question. It is treated as a quasi international matter, and the court declares that the rules relative to the settlement of international disputes are applicable thereto. It will be observed that the court, in the treatment of this case, can not inquire into the motives and reasons existing in the minds of the Congressmen and of the President upon the passage and approval of the bill for the admission of the State. They are political questions upon which the coordinate legislative and executive branches of the Government are conclusive upon the court.

To convince you, Mr. Chairman, that the formation of West Virginia was truly and essentially the result of a military necessity, existing at a time of actual war, it is only necessary to point out the circumstances existing at the time of the admission. These circumstances are evidenced by the country's written history, and particularly by the debates in Congress and the papers of the President and other executive officers contemporaneous with the fact.

It may be recalled that in the year 1862 the greatest civil war of ancient or modern times was raging in this Nation, and that the political horizon was dark and gloomy. Virginia, as I have said, was the most powerful of all the States engaged upon one side of the hostilities. She was furnishing the flower of her manhood for the cause which her convention and her people had decreed to be just and right. One of the greatest of America's generals, a native of that Commonwealth, had declined a commission at the head of the Union forces and, in obedience to the mandate of his State, was leading the armies of the South in apparent victorious opposition to the Union; and he had behind him an army as brave and valiant as any that has been described in history or song. The geographical lines of this great State were within gunshot of the room in the National Capitol in which you are now sitting. It will thus be seen that if Virginia could be weakened or crippled, a staggering blow would be inflicted upon the Confederacy itself.

Two bills for the admission of West Virginia as a State were pending in Congress. One introduced on June 25, 1862, by the Hon. William G. Brown, the father of the present Representative from the same territory. The other had been reported from the Committee on Territories in the Senate pursuant to a memorial presented to that body on May 28 by the Hon. Waitman T. Willy, a Senator residing within the borders of the proposed new State but accredited to the State of Virginia. The memorial was accompanied by a constitution adopted by certain citizens and voters residing within the territory proposed to be admitted. The House bill afterwards substituted for the Senate bill passed, as I shall show, and became the law for the admission. I can not take the time of this committee to detail at length all of the proceedings leading up to the presentation of these bills in Congress, although I deem it important that some of the main features be presented.

The ordinance of secession was adopted by the Virginia convention on April 17, 1861, and was to be voted upon by the people on the 23d day of May following. Upon the action of the convention, and, in fact, before that time, when it had become apparent what the action would be, various meetings were held in the counties west of the mountains for the purpose of opposing and creating sentiment in opposition to secession. The most important of these meetings, and the one which may be regarded as taking lead in the movement which resulted in the creation of the new State, was held in the town of Clarksburg, Harrison County, renowned as the birthplace of Stonewall Jackson and the home of your colleague, Mr. Davis. This meeting assembled after an informal notice of 48 hours, and the leading spirit thereof was John S. Carlile, who had been a member of the secession convention and was subsequently a Senator in Congress from what was called the restored government of Virginia. Mr. Carlile offered a resolution, which was adopted, in which it was recited that the State authorities of Virginia had placed the State in hostility to the Union and had inaugurated a war without consulting those for whom they professed to act and providing that the counties composing northwestern Virginia should appoint not less than five of their wisest and discreetest men to meet in convention on May 13 following to determine on such action as they should take in the emergency, and naming the delegation from the county of Harrison, with Mr. Carlile at its head. This mass meeting was held five days after the adoption by the convention of the ordinance of secession and more than one month before the time fixed for the popular vote thereon; and the convention which it called was to meet in the city of Wheeling 10 days before the time fixed for such vote. The convention met at Wheeling at the time designated, and was attended by many of the ablest men in that section of the State. The manner of their selection as delegates had not been defined, and they were selected in various ways—some by mass convention, some by municipal authorities, and in at least one case, that of the county of Wood, the second most populous county of the Territory, it was in some way adopted that every Union citizen of the county who should be in attendance at Wheeling should be a delegate to the convention.

I have mentioned these matters to show the chaotic condition as to the credentials of what is perhaps the most important gathering of men ever assembled in a political capacity within the territory of the State of West Virginia. They were men of undoubted ability and of great patriotism, having for their object the accomplishment of a worthy end; but I think it can be said that this convention, the initial step, as it may be called, in the formation of West Virginia, was not a body to be recognized as authoritative under any constitution, National or State. This convention was in session three days, during which time it provided for a second convention, to be held on June 11, following, in the event that the ordinance of secession should be adopted by the people on the intervening 23d of May. It resolved that in the event of such adoption the people of the counties represented should, on June 4, select delegates to the convention fixed for the 11th; that the senators and delegates who should be elected to the General Assembly of Virginia at the general election to be held on May 23, who concurred in the views of the convention should be entitled to seats in that body. This second convention met in the city of Wheeling on June 11, and there were in attendance some of the senators and delegates elected to the Virginia Assembly, together with many delegates who had been in some way appointed to the convention on June 4 in accordance with the resolution of the adjourned convention. It will thus be seen that even in this second convention there were no persons who had been duly elected in any manner provided for by law, to any representative capacity, except those elected to the Virginia Legislature, whose place of meeting was fixed by law at the city of Richmond. This second convention assembled under the authority of the first convention, which, in its turn, had met in pursuance of the mass meeting held at Clarksburg on April 22. It proceeded to declare vacant all the State offices of Virginia and to fill them by persons of their own selection, and to form a State organization, which was called the restored government of Virginia, with Francis H. Pierpont as governor. It ordained that on October 24, following, an election should be held to vote upon the question of a new State and to elect delegates to a convention to frame a constitution therefor.

James G. Blaine, in describing, in his "Twenty Years of Congress," the situation then prevailing in the territory, says:

> Notwithstanding the compliance with the outward forms and requirements; notwithstanding the recognition by Congress of the new government, it was seen to be essentially and really the government of West Virginia. It was only nominally and by construction the government of the State of Virginia. It did not represent the political power or the majority of the people of the entire State. The Senators and Representatives of Virginia were in the Confederate Congress. The strength of her people was in the Confederate Army, of which a distinguished Virginian was the commander. The situation was anomalous, though the friends of the Union justified the irregularity of recognizing the framework of the government in the hands of loyal men as the actual civil administration of the State of Virginia.

It was this organization that gave its consent to the creation of the State of West Virginia out of the territory of Virginia, and this is the only effort made to comply with that provision of the National Constitution which forbids Congress to create one State within the territory of another without the latter's consent.

The constitutional convention afterwards met and made a constitution and submitted it to a vote of the people, and the vote was taken on April 3, 1862, and there were cast in favor of the constitution 18,862 votes, and against it, 514. It seems to have been conceded by debates in Congress that this was less than half of the voting strength even of the territory seeking to be admitted, to say nothing of all that more populous portion of the State lying east of the mountains, which, of course, did not participate in any of the proceedings.

The measure for admission was ably debated in both branches of Congress by many statesmen. It was opposed in the Senate by Messrs. Sumner, of Massachusetts; Trumbull, of Illinois; Bayard and Saulsbury, of Delaware; Cowan, of Ohio; Powell, of Kentucky, and many others who were regarded as Senate leaders at that time. The bill passed the Senate on July 14 by a vote of 23 to 17. To show that the most eminent statesmen are not, in situations of excitement, altogether substantial in their views, the fact is pointed out that John S. Carlile, the very man at whose instance the Clarksburg convention was called and on whose motion the first Wheeling convention assembled and who was most clamorous for proceedings to form a new State, upon the final passage of the bill voted in the negative; while his colleague, Mr. Willey, who was a member of the first Wheeling convention, and therein cautioned deliberation and carefulness, and on one occasion characterized the extreme views of Carlile as treasonable, became its staunchest advocate.

When the bill came up for consideration in the House it was opposed and declared to be unconstitutional by many of the ablest Representatives, among whom were Mr. Conway, of Kansas; Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky; Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts; and Roscoe Conkling, of New York. Thaddeus Stevens, at that time the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the majority leader on the floor of the House, and with authority almost dictatorial, supported the bill, and I desire to quote a part of what he said:

I have had great difficulty in determining how I should vote upon this measure as a question of policy, and I can hardly say that I have yet made up my mind; but, as at present advised, I shall vote for the admission of the State, and desire to state my grounds for so doing. I do not desire to be understood as being deluded by the idea that we are admitting this State in pursuance of any provision of the Constitution. I find no such provision which justifies it. * * * By the Constitution a State may be divided by consent of the legislature thereof and by the consent of Congress. Now, sir, it is but mockery, in my judgment, to tell me that the Legislature of Virginia has ever consented to this division. There are 200,000 out of 1,250,000 of people who have participated in this proceeding. * * *

Before all this was done the State had a regular organization, a constitution under which that corporation acted. By a convention of a large majority of the people they changed their constitution and changed their relations to the Federal Government from that of one of its members to that of secession against it. Now, then, how has that State ever given its consent to this division? A highly respectable but very small number of the citizens of the State of Virginia—the people of West Virginia—assembled together, disapproved of the acts of the State of Virginia, and with the utmost self-complacency called themselves Virginia. Now, is it not ridiculous? Is not the very statement of the fact a very ludicrous thing to look upon? * * *

The State of Virginia therefore has never given its consent to the separation of the State. I desire to see it (the separation); and, according to my principles, I can vote for its admission without any compunctions of conscience. * * * But, sir, I understand that these proceedings take place not under any pretense of constitutional right but in virtue of the laws of war; and by the laws of nations these laws are what we choose to make them, so that they are not inconsistent with the laws of humanity. I say, then, that we may admit West Virginia not by virtue of any provision of the Constitution but under our absolute power which the laws of war give us in the circumstances in which we are placed. I shall vote for this bill upon that theory, and that alone, for I will not stultify myself by supposing that we have any warrant in the Constitution for this proceeding.

This argument of the great leader had the effect to put the bill through the House, and it passed that body on December 10, 1862, by a vote of 96 to 55.

Everything shows that President Lincoln had grave and serious doubts as to what course he should take in the premises. He called upon six members of his Cabinet for their written opinions. Three of them advised that the bill was clearly unconstitutional; among these was the Attorney General, an able and eminent lawyer. He advised that the act was not warranted by the Constitution, stating that the legislature which gave consent to the dismemberment of the State of Virginia, being composed chiefly, if not entirely, of the persons representing the counties desiring to be admitted, was not a legislature competent to give consent on behalf of Virginia, and that on account of its intrinsic demerits and its revolutionary character the act in question was highly inexpedient and improper.

President Lincoln was placed in a position of responsibility which had, perhaps, never confronted any man under a constitutional government. He was compelled by the very exigencies of the perilous situation to resort to that higher law of self-protection, which, under the laws of war, have always been inherent in every sovereignty in time of danger. As Chief Executive of the Nation, in time of peril he had the right to resort to anything not inconsistent with the laws of humanity which would tend to the salvation and stability of the Government. When the preservation of the Government, and not the interpretation of its internal rules of action, is the supreme question, and war prevails, the laws of war render nugatory all written constitutions. Mr. Lincoln, rising above the ordinary interpretation of the Constitution prevailing in time of peace, availed himself of this great law of necessity. He accepted the responsibility and acted in that way which his forceful mind conceived to be for the best interests of the Nation.

In the autumn and winter of 1862 Abraham Lincoln occupied upon this planet a place of responsibility never equaled in all the annals of history, and almost every official act of his was pregnant with this responsibility. Two years before he had been elected to the Presidency at an election when considerably more than half of the popular vote had been cast against him. He had assumed his duties when it was plain that he would have to conduct the Nation either successfully or unsuccessfully through the greatest civil conflict which the world has known.

In the fall of 1862, at the national congressional elections, the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois returned delegations to the House which were supposed to be in opposition to his policies. He had been publicly criticized in an impatient and unjust manner by Horace Greeley, the great advocate for the abolition of slavery. He had been called upon by a delegation of eminent ministers of the gospel, who had urged upon him the emancipation of the slaves, and to whom he had been compelled to reply that such a proclamation would be useless when all the armies under his control could not enforce it on the opposite shore of the Potomac River from his Capital. He had written to Mr. Greeley, in substance, that slavery was not the supreme question of the hour, but that the salvation of the country was that question. That he would be willing to emancipate every slave if it would save the Union, or would be willing to save the Union without the emancipation of a single slave; and that what he should do, or refrain from doing, about slavery would be according to the effect which such action or nonaction would have upon the salvation of the Union. He saw the advancing army of Lee almost at the National Capital, and, with the exception of one or two battles in the West, nearly every prominent engagement of the war had resulted in advantage to the South. With a valiant enemy to his front and carping critics at his back the low-water mark of the Union had been reached, and he was sorrowful, gloomy, and despondent. But nevertheless, under all his adverse surroundings he was glorious and grand; and, with all reverence, his position was not altogether dissimilar to that of the Divine Man of Sorrow who, 18 centuries before in his Father's temple, had bowed his head in grief and uttered the words, "Oh! Jerusalem, Jerusalem."

It is said that in his Egyptian campaign Napoleon called the attention of his soldiers to the Great Pyramid and inspired them by the declaration that 40 centuries of history looked down upon them from its summit. At the time of which I am speaking Mr. Lincoln, at the head of the American Nation, was as firm and unshaken as that ancient monument. He looked into the future and he saw that in all succeeding time he would be held responsible for a mistake or given praise and credit for the proper action.

On the 17th day of September the southern forces had been, for the time being, checked by the Battle of Antietam, and this gave him the opportunity to declare and put into effect certain policies which he had been anxious to adopt. One of these was his border State policy, by which he endeavored to get a chain of friendly slave-holding territory between the North and the actual seat of conflict. West Virginia was a part of the territory with which he desired to complete that chain, and, after serious reflection, he decided that he would approve the bill for its admission. And to evidence the fact that he regarded his action as a war measure, I call attention that in a written opinion filed by him he said:

We can scarcely dispense with the aid of West Virginia in this struggle, much less can we afford to have her against us in Congress and in the field. Her brave and good men regard her admission into the Union as a matter of life and death. They have been true to the Union under very severe trials. * * * The division of the State is dreaded as a precedent, but a measure made expedient by war is no precedent in time of peace. I believe that the admission of West Virginia is expedient.

He had determined to divide Virginia, that the Nation might remain undivided; and as another potent circumstance in evidence that he acted from military necessity, I call attention to the fact that within a few hours of his approval of the West Virginia bill, on the last day of December, 1862, he, on January 1, 1863, issued the final proclamation for the emancipation of the slaves of the several States in secession.

The merest glance, Mr. Chairman, at the situation then prevailing will indicate the wisdom of the President in his views that it was expedient to admit the State of West Virginia. By the acquirement of that territory there was placed between the Northern States and the southern army 25,000 square miles of land, mountainous in its character and embracing, among other chains, the great Appalachian Range, extending from the line of Pennsylvania to the eastern line of Kentucky, and from thence by way of the quasi neutral or friendly territory of Kentucky to the northern boundary of Tennessee. Within the territory so stricken from the mother State was the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the greatest trunk line at that time in the country. Within that territory it extended from Harpers Ferry westward to the city of Grafton, and there divided into two branches, one extending southwestward with its terminus at St. Louis and the other northwestward to Chicago, with more than 400 miles in the territory of the new State. It also afforded to the National Government, as within Federal lines, access to the channel of the Ohio River from a point north of Pittsburgh to the mouth of the Big Sandy River, which constitutes the eastern boundary of Kentucky, and, by reason of the attitude of Kentucky, giving an open highway to the Mississippi River—in all, a distance of about 1,000 miles. This railroad and this river were of incalculable benefit to the Government in the transportation of troops and munitions of war, and for a military advantage like this Cæsar or Napoleon would have sacrificed a hundred thousand men and would have paid a mint of coin.

In my endeavor to show that the territory of West Virginia was acquired as a war measure, I may have been somewhat tedious; but I have thought it necessary to do this that the resolution which I am discussing might be placed within a line of precedents which I believe to be controlling on its consideration.

I need not remind this committee of judges and able lawyers of the force of governmental precedents. Long before the time when the Persian King, unable to sleep, at midnight arose to search throughout his chronicles for precedents, and from that day till the present the only law governing a sovereignty on any question has been that which has grown out of its own actions upon similar questions in former times. Indeed, the bulk of all rules of civil action depends upon precedents, and the great unwritten common law is but the application of what has been before done under given statements of fact.

It will be observed, as I proceed, that the United States has upon various occasions, both in time of war and peace, found it expedient to acquire from foreign countries, and in some instances from States of the Union, certain territories, and except as to the notable instance of the acquirement from Virginia of the Northwest Territory, to which I shall hereafter allude, no single instance exists in which they did not pay a just and adequate compensation therefor, and in nearly, if not quite, all of the occasions, in addition to the payment of large money considerations directly made, the Government has assumed the payment of unsettled, undefined, and unliquidated debts which were chargeable against the territory so acquired.

After the annexation in 1845 of Texas to the United States a war arose between this Nation and Mexico because the latter Government was endeavoring to reacquire Texas when its independence had long before been acknowledged by the United States, and such independence made perpetual by the admission of its territory into the Union as a separate State. This state of war was terminated in 1848 by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo. During the progress of the war the soldiers of the Union had made full conquest of the Republic of Mexico and our flag was flying and our troops were quartered in the capital city of that country. By every law of nations and of war her whole territory belonged to the United States Government and there rested upon it no legal duty to make compensation for any part thereof. But nevertheless the treaty to which I have referred released and reinvested Mexico with title to all that portion of her original territory lying to the southwest of the Rio Grande, and in addition thereto provided that the Government should pay to her the sum of $15,000,000 for that part of the conquered territory lying to the north of the river and west of the line of Texas. Besides the payment of that vast sum of money by the said treaty, this Government undertook to pay large sums for certain existing debts of Mexico, some of which had been then determined and some were yet to be determined, and wholly exonerated that Republic from all liabilities therefor. Mr. Blaine in his work says that these debts amount to about $4,000,000, but in May last the Secretary of the Treasury informed me by letter that the actual amount paid and assumed to be paid at that time amounted to $5,340,253.16.

Five years after the adoption of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo this Government, under the Gadsden treaty, purchased a small strip of the land which it so generously surrendered to Mexico and paid therefor the magnificent sum of $10,000,000.

A half century later this country again engaged in foreign war; this time with the Spanish Government because of its tyrannical and inhuman treatment of our neighboring island of Cuba. This war was short, but yet long enough for our Army and Navy forces to take complete possession by conquest and subjugation of the island of Porto Rico and the Philippine Archipelago.

We held these possessions by the right of war with a title which would have been recognized and acknowledged by every civilized nation of the world. Yet following the humane plan formerly adopted in regard to Mexico, this Government, by its treaty, made full compensation to Spain for the territory of which she had been deprived. We paid her $20,000,000 in cash, and in addition thereto, by one clause of the treaty, the Government assumed and agreed to pay every debt, public or private, which any or all of the citizens of this country might have against the Government of Spain, and Spain was entirely absolved therefrom.

Under date of the 9th of this month, the Secretary of the Treasury has advised me that under this clause of the treaty debts aggregating $1,387,845.74 have been allowed and paid from appropriations made by Congress.

Prior to the year 1802 this Government had been in a dispute with the State of Georgia relative to the territory then claimed by Georgia and now constituting the States of Alabama and Mississippi. It was claimed by the National Government that the title of Georgia only extended to her present western limits and that the lands between those limits and the Mississippi River were held by the Government under the peace treaty of 1783 with England. The Government had organized the Territory of Mississippi, which originally covered the State of Alabama. Georgia, out of this disputed land, had made grants to various companies and organizations in the valley of the Yazoo River, within the present State of Mississippi, covering about 36,000,000 acres. To end the dispute, Georgia finally released all claim west of her present limits, and the Government made payment to her by way of cash and scrip, to make good the Yazoo grants, the sum of $6,200,000, and, in addition thereto, granted to the State a strip of land, 12 miles wide, extending all along its northern boundary, which had been acquired by the Government from South Carolina.

It will be observed that in this settlement the Government undertook to make good the apparent obligations resting upon the territory so taken in relation to the unauthorized grants theretofore made by the State of Georgia, and, indeed, in every instance where the Government has acquired territory it has in some manner or other assumed various debts and obligations theretofore resting upon the territory.

When Texas was admitted to the Union her western border was ill-defined, and thereafter a serious dispute arose between her and the Government as to the title to certain territory lying to the east of the Rio Grande River and west of the present western line of Texas. Texas claimed this territory as having belonged to her when she was a Republic. The United States claimed it by reason of her conquest of Mexico, and, in truth, the Government at the time, through its commanding general, Stephen W. Kearney, had the possession thereof. In the year 1850, in the Thirty-first Congress, composed of the very ablest men of the day, the Whig leader, Henry Clay, at that time about to close his public career, offered in the Senate for consideration certain measures bearing upon the slavery and other questions, which are known as the omnibus compromise of 1850. One object was the organization of New Mexico as a free-soil Territory, and in the boundaries thereof was included the territory in dispute with Texas. As a part of the general compromise it was enacted that the sum of $10,000,000 should be paid to Texas for the territory of which she was about to be deprived, and on September 9 an act was passed organizing the new Territory and including therein the disputed portion.

It may not be improper to call attention, while passing, to the fact that in both the cases of Georgia and of Texas the territory taken by the Government was in dispute, with the probabilities very strong that the Government was the true owner. In the case of Virginia and West Virginia there can not be the slightest doubt as to title, for Virginia had held the land without the shadow of dispute since long before the organization of the National Government.

The bill for the compensation of Texas provided that $5,000,000 of the purchase money should be held until the release of certain debts against the State, but on February 28, 1855, the Government by a supplemental bill, after it had in fact paid $8,500,000 on account of the compromise, appropriated the additional sum of $7,500,000 for the benefit of the creditors; and it thus appears that that part of the present State of New Mexico involved in the dispute with Texas has cost this Government $16,000,000.

The debate in the Senate in reference to these compromise measures of 1850 is perhaps the most notable discussion which had occurred therein since the foundation of the Republic, and was participated in by a greater number of its eminent statesmen. The speech made by Henry Clay upon that occasion is the last notable public expression of the views held by him upon important questions, and he died two years later. John C. Calhoun, the great leader of southern thought, arose in his place, for the last time, to speak upon this question. He was so feeble that he could not finish and handed his manuscript to his long-time friend and comrade, James M. Mason, of Virginia, who read it for him. He left the Chamber and but a few days thereafter his death was announced to the Senate. It was upon this bill that Daniel Webster, on March 7, 1850, made his great speech, which, by reason of certain expressions therein relative to the question of slavery, ostracized him from friends in the North and rendered his nomination for the Presidency two years later impossible. Many other prominent Senators spoke upon this question, including Thomas H. Benton, who subsequently became the historian of the debate. There was a difference of opinion between these men on many of the questions involved in the discussion, but there was not in the whole debate the slightest expression of opposition against the payment to the State of Texas of the amount designated for the territory of which it was supposed she was about to be deprived.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the opinions and uttered declarations of the great men of our country may well be taken as authority on the policy of the Nation on similar questions when they arise; and I refer to them as constituting strong argument for the position which I assume upon this resolution. There have been, and still are, other great men in this country whose views are instructive at this time. A short time ago, in a discourse in the House of Representatives upon another subject, I took occasion to refer to three distinguished men who have occupied high stations in the minds of the people of this country. If you will allow me, I will quote what I then said:

> This country has produced three men the coincidences in whose lives are so striking as to indicate that they are not the result of chance. Each of them has been thrice defeated for the highest office within the gift of the people; two of them upon three occasions by the people at large, and the other twice in the conventions of his party and once by the electors at the polls. One of these men, Henry Clay, was the leading man in his country's history during the first half of the nineteenth century, and he has been described as the leading English-speaking statesman of his period. Another, James G. Blaine, led the advance guards of his party when it had supreme control, from the close of the Civil War to the latter decade of the nineteenth century, and his voice was powerful and potent in forming the constructive policies of the Nation. The third, William Jennings Bryan, has for 15 years or more formulated the policies and the leading principles of the great militant Democratic Party and still is its acknowledged leader. Not only is this true, but there is indissolubly connected with his great name many principles of right and justice which have been engrafted upon the public policy of the country by the assistance of the very men who defeated him for office while they were opposing such principles. Clay was a Whig, Blaine a Republican, and Bryan a Democrat. So that the three great parties who have at different times controlled the destiny of the Nation are each represented in the illustrious trio. We are told that the joint lives of three great patriarchs—Adam, Methuselah, and Noah—made a continuous line from the creation of the world to its destruction by the Deluge, and that they carried down in their memories until the time that letters were discovered the antediluvian traditions and histories of our planet.
> As a parallel to this I point out the fact that Henry Clay was born 12 years before the adoption of the American Constitution. He died in June, 1852, 22 years after the birth of James G. Blaine, in 1830. Mr. Blaine died in January, 1893, when William Jennings Bryan, born in 1860, was 33 years old. Bryan still lives, and it is the hope of every good citizen of this land that he may long continue in his upright and useful career. It will appear that the joint lives of these three men extend from a period antedating the formation of this Government by 12 years down to the present day, and these three illustrious men could have easily handed down by word of mouth, without change of verbiage, the Constitution of the country, though it had never been reduced to writing. No man reviles the memory of Henry Clay or casts reproach upon the brilliant genius of James G. Blaine, and the time will come when the third parallel, William Jennings Bryan, upon the consideration of the great deeds which he has accomplished for the benefit of man, will be spoken of only in the highest terms of praise and honor.

Mr. Chairman, I can show that each of these three men is committed to the policy of this resolution. I have already shown that Mr. Clay, by his compromise measures of 1850, advocated almost the identical measure you are now considering. The difference in the two propositions is this: In the Texas matter the object was to compromise and settle for the time being a question bearing merely upon a governmental policy of the country. In the case of the division of Virginia and the organization of West Virginia the object was the salvation of the Nation, and at a time when it was feared the very life of the Government was at stake.

That Mr. Bryan is committed to the substance of this resolution is shown by his conduct at the time when the Spanish treaty stood in imminent danger in the Senate, when by his influence with the minority members of that body he prevailed upon them to vote for ratification.

In the case of Mr. Blaine it is not necessary to rely upon a comparison of measures. His forceful pen has left on record his opinion upon the identical thing involved before you. Because of his great intellect, deep research, and actual knowledge of all the matters pertaining to the civil strife between the States he was in every way competent to express an opinion and make an argument upon the subject.

I call your attention to what he has written in his great history:

> To the old State of Virginia the blow (the separation) was a heavy one. In the years following the war it added seriously to her financial embarrassment, and has in many ways obstructed her prosperity. As a punitive measure for the chastening of Virginia it can not be defended. Assuredly there was no ground for distressing Virginia by penal enactments that did not apply equally to every other State of the Confederacy. Common justice revolts at the selection of 1 man for punishment from 11 who have been guilty of the same offense. If punishment had been designed, there was equal reason for stripping Texas of her vast domain, and for withdrawing the numerous land grants which had been generously made by the National Government to many States in rebellion. But Texas was allowed to emerge from the contest without the forfeiture of an acre, and Congress, so far from withdrawing the lands by which other Southern States would be enriched, took pains to renew them in the years succeeding the war. The autonomy of Virginia alone was disturbed. Upon Virginia alone fell the penalty which if due to any was due to all. * * *
> Virginia owed a large debt held in great part by loyal citizens of the North and by subjects of foreign countries. The burden was already as heavy as she could bear in her entirety, and dismemberment so crippled her that she could not meet her obligations. The United States might well have relieved Virginia and have done justice to her creditors by making some allowance for the division of her territory. Regarding her as only entitled to the rights of a public enemy so long as she warred upon the Union, we may confidently maintain that she is entitled at least to as just and as magnanimous treatment as the National Government extends to a foreign foe. In our War with Mexico it became our interest to acquire a large part of the territory owned by that Republic. We had conquered her armies, and were in possession of her capital. She was helpless in our hands. But the high sense of justice which has always distinguished the United States in her public policies would not permit the despoilment of Mexico. We negotiated, therefore, for the territory needed, and paid for it a larger price than would have been given by any other nation in the world.
> The American Government went still further. Many of our citizens held large claims against Mexico and the failure to pay them had been one of the causes that precipitated hostilities. Our Government, in addition to the money consideration of $15,000,000 which we paid for territory, agreed to exonerate Mexico from all demands of our citizens and to pay them out of our own Treasury. This supplementary agreement was nearly $4,000,000.
> If the United States were willing to place Virginia on the basis which they magnanimously placed Mexico after the conquest of that Government, a sufficient allowance should be made to her to compensate at least for the part of her public debt which presumptively was represented by the territory taken from her. If it be said in answer to such suggestion that it would be fair for West Virginia to assume the proportional obligation thus indicated, the prompt rejoinder is that, in equity, her people are not held to such obligation. The public improvement for which the debt was in large part incurred had not been in so far completed as to benefit West Virginia when the Civil War began, their advantages being mainly confined to the tidewater and piedmont sections of the State. There is indeed neither moral nor legal responsibility resting on West Virginia for any part of the debt of the old State.
> In determining the relative obligations of the Government and of the government of West Virginia concerning the debt, it is of the first importance to remember that the new State was not primarily organized and admitted to the Union for the benefit of her own people, but in a far larger degree for the benefit of the people of the whole Union. The organic law would not have been strained, legal fictions would not have been invented, if a great national interest had not demanded the creation of West Virginia. If it had not been apparent that the organization of West Virginia was an advantage to the loyal cause; if the border-State policy of Mr. Lincoln, so rigidly adhered to throughout the contest, had not required this link for the completion of the chain, the wishes of the people most directly involved would have never had the slightest attention from the Congress of the United States. * * *
> Nor should it be forgotten that the State of Virginia before the war might well be regarded as the creditor and not as the debtor of the National Government. One of her earliest acts of patriotism as an independent State was the cession to the Government of her superb domain on the north side of the Ohio River, from the sale of which more than $100,000,000 have been paid into the National Treasury. * * * In the formal and necessarily austere administration of public affairs there is little room for the interposition of sentiment. Yet sentiment has its place. We stimulate the ardor of patriotism by the mere display of a flag which has no material force, but which is emblematic of all material force and typifies the glorious Nation. We stir the ambition of the living by rearing costly monuments to the heroic dead. It may surely be pardoned if Americans shall feel a deep personal interest in the good name and fortune of a State so closely identified with the early renown of the Republic—a State in whose soil is mingled the dust of those to whom all States and all generations are debtors—the Father of his Country, the author of the Declaration of Independence, and the chief projector of the National Constitution.

Mr. Blaine, in the extract which I have read, alludes to the cession by Virginia of the northwestern territory, and it may not be improper to refer a little further to that subject. On March 1, 1784, the State of Virginia ceded to the National Government, then represented by an unstable and imperfect Union under the Articles of Confederation, that vast scope of country lying to the west and north of the Ohio River and between that river and the Great Lakes on the north and the Mississippi on the west. This cession was made without the payment of a single dollar from the Treasury of the United States, and at a time when the Federal Union was crushed with poverty and debt, and its paper issued to pay her soldiers in the Revolutionary War was purchasable at the merest trifle.

Within a year after the adoption of the Constitution the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to Congress a plan for the sale of all of these lands, which was adopted by Congress, and under it the disposition of the lands was inaugurated, and money began to flow into the Treasury, and from that time to the present the international credit of the United States has stood the highest in the world.

In stating that Virginia made this cession I do not ignore the fact that about the same time grants were made by other States of certain undefined claims held by them in the same territory. But I think I am authorized in the statement that the true ownership of the territory lay in Virginia. She had title extending as far back as the year 1609 of "the whole seacoast north and south, within 200 miles of Old Point Comfort, extending from sea to sea, west and northwest"; but what is still more conclusive she had, prior to her cession, reduced it to possession, and then held the same by an armed force under her great pioneer general, George Rogers Clark. The cessions made by New York, Connecticut, and two or three other States were only of claims, and were made for the purpose of quieting rather than creating title. I may say, however, that Connecticut, true to the reputation of her founders for enterprise and thrift, in her cession made a reservation of a large tract in Ohio, which seems to have ripened to such an extent that Ohio purchased the same from her. It is perhaps the only instance on record where title to real estate ensued from a reservation in a grant.

This territory now comprises the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and about 26,000 square miles, or one-third of Minnesota.

It is worthy of note at this time that the ordinance reported to the Continental Congress for the government of the Northwest Territory by a committee of which Thomas Jefferson was the chairman provided that "after the year 1800 of the Christian era there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States—to be formed out of that territory—otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall be duly convicted to have been personally guilty." The language proposed by Mr. Jefferson relative to slavery is almost identical with that contained in the antislavery amendment to the Constitution adopted at the close of the Civil War.

About the same time as the cession of the Northwest Territory Virginia also ceded for beneficial national purposes without compensation all that territory lying on the south of the Ohio River extending from the mouth of the Big Sandy to the Mississippi, now constituting the State of Kentucky, so that it may be said that the title to all land in States bounding upon the great Ohio River is held either immediately or remotely under the former ownership of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Certainly when Virginia made these cessions they carried with them all the future potentiality of the territory, and therefore I think I am warranted in saying that these gifts constitute the grandest cession without compensation ever made by one sovereignty to another. As you have heard, Mr. Blaine says that more than $100,000,000 have come into the Treasury of the United States from sales of land in the Northwest Territory. I have found it impossible to get the exact amount, as there seems to be no account in the Treasury Department fully covering it, but by calculation made from certain figures in the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office I estimate the amount at about $138,000,000. At a low rate of interest it will be seen that these sales have benefited the Government more than $500,000,000.

Let us look at it in another way. This Government has paid for the purchase of Louisiana, including interest and debts assumed, the sum of $27,267,621.98; for the purchase of east and west Florida, $6,489,768; for the cession from Mexico under the treaty of 1848, $15,000,000; for the Mexican purchase under Gadsden treaty, $10,000,000; for adjustment of dispute between Texas and the Government, $16,000,000; for the purchase of Alaska from Russia, $7,200,000; for the settlement of dispute between Georgia and the Government, $6,200,000; for the Philippine Archipelago and Porto Rico under Spanish treaty, $20,000,000; for the purchase of the Panama Canal Zone, $10,000,000. These territories represent all which have been purchased or acquired by the Government, either from foreign countries or inland States, except the District of Columbia and the Northwest Territory, and the aggregate of the several amounts named is $113,000,000. From these figures it is apparent that with the exception of the original colonies and some three or four States which have been carved therefrom, the State of Virginia, by her cession of the Northwest Territory, has furnished to the Government, directly or indirectly, every acre of its inland territory, its islands of the sea, and every other kind or character of real estate of which it is the owner or over which it has sovereignty, and there still would remain to the moral credit of Virginia in the Treasury of the United States $25,000,000, counting principal only. Virginia has been called the mother of Presidents, and the facts and figures which I have attempted to give indicate that she is likewise entitled to be called the mother of Territories and States. More than two-thirds of the inland States of this Union and all of its foreign territory have been virtually contributed by her.

Just a little more about Kentucky and the States of the Northwest Territory. The total internal revenue of the Nation for the year ended June 30, 1910, was $289,000,000, of which $148,000,000, or more than one-half, was paid by these States. The total production of corn in 1910 was 3,126,000,000 bushels, more than 1,000,000,000, or about one-third, of which was produced in the States referred to, and their production constituted considerably more than one-fourth of all the corn crop of the world. In the same year they produced one-fifth of all the wheat, one-half of all the oats, more than one-fifth of all the barley, between one-third and one-half of all the rye, one-third of all the potatoes, one-fourth of all the hay, six-tenths of all the tobacco produced in the continental territory of the United States. They have nearly one-fourth of the total population of the Nation and the three largest cities within the territory have a larger population than the Nation had at its organization. They have one-fourth of all the railroads and public-service corporations. They own about the same of all the gold and silver coin and bullion. The value of their real estate is $16,000,000,000, in a total of $62,000,000,000. They own about the same proportion in all the live stock and farm implements and machinery, and manufacturing machinery and tool implements. They also have one-fourth or more of all that wealth unclassified in the census records.

With the exception of two incumbents, every President of the United States elected since 1860 has come from this territory, and when the ones so excepted were in office the Vice Presidents were from these States, and from the year 1869 to 1873 they furnished both the President and Vice President. The three great men who suffered martyrdom while at the head of the Nation—Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley—all lie buried in this territory. The two living ex-Vice Presidents, as well as the two ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives, live in this territory, and it has furnished the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States since the death of Roger B. Taney, in 1864, until within a few months past, when the present incumbent was selected. Of the 112 sessions of Congress held during the last century, 48 were presided over by Speakers from these States; Henry Clay in different Congresses has presided over 13 sessions, while Joseph G. Cannon has presided over 10. This territory furnished both these men, Mr. Clay having the longest noncontinuous service and Mr. Cannon the longest continuous service of any who have held that great office. The minority leader of the House of Representatives is a Representative from one of these States, while both the majority leader and the Speaker were born in another of them. These States have 105 Members of the Congress of the United States as constituted at the beginning of this Congress.

I call attention to these figures, Mr. Chairman, merely to show the magnificence of that great gift which Virginia, in her ancient ascendancy, when rich, made to our common country in the time of its necessity and poverty.

I ask you, sir, when all these facts are considered, is it just and equitable that Mexico and Spain be compensated for territories taken from them, while Virginia, whose generosity I have pointed out, shall remain unrecompensed? Is it right to pay $16,000,000 to Texas and $6,000,000 to Georgia for lands of doubtful title, and to allow Virginia to be deprived of a valuable part of her territory without the shadow of recompense? Neither Mexico, Spain, Georgia, Texas, nor any other State or nation has ever contributed one single acre to this Government without adequate compensation and without provision being made for a large part of their outstanding obligations. Even in the purchase of Louisiana from France, this country, in addition to the money consideration, agreed to pay the obligations of the foreign country to all the citizens of this country for the spoliation of their ships and cargoes, and of these French spoliation claims large numbers have been allowed. Every appropriation which Congress has made in payment for property taken or destroyed in war—and such appropriations have been many—afford a precedent for the action we are asking.

It is true that this State of Virginia for four years was in rebellion against the Government. So was Texas, so was Georgia, and so was your own fair State. But, save the loss by Texas, Georgia, Alabama, and the other Southern States, of the valorous sons who fell in action and now sleep in soldiers' graves upon their sunny slopes and beside their summer waters, these great States sustained no permanent loss by the Civil War.

If it is claimed that this resolution is not for the benefit of Virginia, but of West Virginia only, I will answer that the debt to which it refers is the debt of the mother Commonwealth. As I have read from Mr. Blaine, no part of the money which it represents was spent for the benefit of West Virginia, and I further say that the honor of Virginia is involved as well as that of West Virginia, and if the great cession of the Northwest Territory is in any way to be considered, either in its legal aspect or as a cause for national gratitude and justice, then it is of the utmost importance to remember that when that gift was made Virginia and West Virginia were one.

Mr. Chairman, the Civil War has long been over, and between these two States all vestige of contention, strife, and hatred engendered by the Civil War is gone. The brother and the brother have been reconciled. Still this debt remains and is the subject of litigation and contention, not only in the courts but among the people. It is the only continual reminder of the Civil War; and it is to be hoped that this great Nation, in the exercise of that generosity which has prevailed in all its former dealings with public questions and of that justice which is evidenced by its unbroken line of precedents, will take such action relative to this matter as will render completely tranquil the civil relations between this glorious mother and the daughter of her sore travail.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey to preside over the session of the House to-morrow, at the memorial service to Mr. LOUDENSLAGER.

RULE FOR LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 521.

Resolved, That in the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and for other purposes, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order to consider without intervention of a point of order any section of the bill as reported, and an amendment authorized by the Committee on Appropriations as a committee amendment to read as follows: "Hereafter the administrative examination of all public accounts, preliminary to their audit by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be made as contemplated by the so-called Dockery Act, approved July 31, 1894, and all vouchers and pay rolls shall be prepared and examined by and through the administrative heads of divisions and bureaus in the executive departments and not by the disbursing clerks of said departments, except that the disbursing officers shall make only such examination of all vouchers as may be necessary to ascertain whether they represent legal claims against the United States."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the consideration of this resolution at this time because that resolution has never been before the Committee on Rules. I have not seen a copy of it as a member of that committee.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I saw nearly every member of the Committee on Rules, I think 9 out of 11, on yesterday, and the majority agreed to report the resolution. It is a fact that that committee did not actually assemble in the committee room, but they were on the floor of the House. I hunted for the gentleman from Wisconsin but was unable to find him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no such resolution has ever been introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules, and hence they could not act upon it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I introduced the resolution yesterday.

Mr. MANN. This resolution has not been referred and reported back.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It was introduced and referred there. Of course if the gentleman desires——

Mr. MANN. This resolution has not been introduced.

Mr. HENRY of Texas (continuing). If the gentleman desires to be so highly technical, the chairman of the Committee on Rules will call a meeting of that committee at once, and the resolution will be acted upon, I apprehend, and will be reported out.

Mr. MANN. That is all right.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the resolution.

MINORITY VIEWS ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 278.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to inquire whether there has been any variation of the rule under which the majority and minority reports presented together from a committee are printed together?

The SPEAKER. There has been no variation of that rule.

Mr. OLMSTED. On House joint resolution 278 I placed the minority report in the hands of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who filed them both together, and when I sent down for a copy of the report I only got the majority report.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about the rule and practice. Somebody made a mistake about it. The Chair does not know who it was.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that they be reprinted and printed together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the report (No. 635) of the majority and the views of the minority on House joint resolution 278 be reprinted and printed together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLMSTED. If it is a mistake in this particular case, I do not wish to make any fuss about it, but when people send for a report they ought to be able to get both sides of the question.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following in the office of the President of the United States: Secretary, at the rate of $7,500 per annum until March 4, 1913, and at the rate of $6,000 per annum on and after March 4, 1913; executive clerk, $5,000; chief clerk, $4,000; appointment clerk, $3,500; record clerk, $2,500; 2 expert stenographers, at $2,500 each; accountant, $2,500; 2 correspondents, at $2,250 each; disbursing clerk, $2,000; clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 6 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 5 of class 2; 2 of class 1; 1 clerk-messenger, $1,000; 2 messengers, at $900 each; 2 messengers; 2 laborers, at $720 each; in all, $71,336.66: Provided, That employees of the executive departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States, for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 28, in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, all the words that limit the salary of the Secretary to the President so that it will stand:

Secretary, $7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, strike out, in lines 10, 11, and 12, the following:
"Until March 4, 1913, and at the rate of $6,000 per annum on and after March 4, 1913."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take the time of the House in any discussion of this kind. It was discussed very thoroughly, at great length, and with much warmth last year, and the Secretary's salary was established at $7,500.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the gentleman objects to the amendment which provides that after March 4, 1913, the salary shall be $6,000?

Mr. GILLETT. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. That does not interfere with the present occupant of that position, does it?

Mr. GILLETT. It does not.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the gentleman ought not to concern himself about the next occupant, probably. It is our duty to take care of him. The gentleman knows it will be an entirely different political party then in charge.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, that is just where I differ from the gentleman. I am opposing this item and offering this amendment, not for any particular individual, but because I think it is the proper salary for the office, regardless of what party or what individual shall fill it. I think, as I stated last year, that the office of the secretary to the President, considering the length of his hours of labor, the quality of work required of him, the judgment, wisdom, and tact which he ought to possess, is well entitled to $7,500. I think it is a mistake to cut it down, and therefore I offer this amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 104 Members present—a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amendment before the House is to strike out the provision that fixes the salary of the Secretary to the President at $6,000 after March 4, 1913. In order that the action of the committee might be absolutely nonpartisan and impersonal, we made the regulation to take effect after the beginning of the next term. We can not know who the occupant of the White House will be, whether he will be a Democrat or whether he will be a Republican. We thought that $6,000 was proper compensation.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: The section that has just been read provides for the Executive offices—the clerical help of the President of the United States. The Committee on Appropriations for the current year provided for the President the number of people that they asked for and at the salaries they asked. There was not the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" in the request that came from the Executive offices, as it was put in the bill. But when the bill went over to the Senate, notwithstanding the House had given the President every employee that was asked for, and had given the salaries that had been asked for, the Senate increased the compensation of the secretary from $6,000 to $10,000. When the bill came back to the House during the closing hours of a short session of Congress, the House was practically compelled by way of compromise to put the salary at $7,500.

Now, that is how the present arrangement came about. This committee has endeavored to be absolutely fair. We did not want to do anything that would be considered as a personal affront to the President of the United States by reducing the compensation of his secretary. We did not want to do anything that would be partisan in its character. So that it might be fair, in order that it might be nonpartisan, we put it in the law that it should take effect March 4, 1913.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. We all know something of what the duties of the private secretary to the President are. The salary now fixed by law is $7,500. This proposes to decrease the salary after the 4th of March next to $6,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] understand that there is no law fixing the salary of $7,500 now? It is simply in the current appropriation law, but it has never been enacted.

Mr. CANNON. What is the salary by law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The salary by law is $5,000, I think.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, then, might have accomplished——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Loeb was the first man who ever received in excess of $5,000. The House increased his salary to $6,000.

Mr. CANNON. I was under the impression that the law provided for $7,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then a point of order would have taken this item out?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It would be too late now, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. MANN. It would not, anyhow. A point of order would not have taken it out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Not under the Holman rule.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says the law is $5,000, and a point of order would have taken it out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman had made a point of order against $6,000 it would have obtained, but the amendment has been discussed, and it is too late.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. It is not subject to the point of order. I favor the amendment. We pay the Librarian of Congress $6,500 a year. We pay the Superintendent of the Library, the man that just cares for the building, $5,000 a year. We pay Cabinet officials, I believe, $12,000 a year. Now, the gentleman seems to feel that out of courtesy to the President this salary should remain at $7,500 up until the 4th of March next, and then should be only $6,000.

I do not know who will be inaugurated on the 4th of March next. It may be the Speaker of this House. [Applause.] It may be the gentleman who presides over the Committee of the Whole, Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may be a Republican, a Democrat, or what not. [Laughter.] I did not intend to call Mr. Bryan by name [renewed laughter]; but, gentlemen, soberly now, and it is early in the morning, and we are all duly sober—the secretary to the President is one of the most important officials in the Government; in my judgment, after the President, the most important connected with the Executive office. And whoever is nominated and elected as President, he will be my President, as well as your President, and I will not care to play what seems to me—not speaking discourteously—peanut politics. [Laughter and applause].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. DYER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after March 4, 1913, the salary of the Secretary to the President shall be at the rate of $6,000 per annum.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. It is new legislation. The Holman rule would be the only warrant or justification for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair has not the statute before him. What is the salary in the present law now?

Mr. GILLETT. It fixes the salary at $5,000, I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Before the Chair sustains the point of order will he hear a word?

The CHAIRMAN. I will recognize the gentleman from Illinois after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has just read the paragraph in this bill, to which a point of order has been made, relating to the salary of the Secretary to the President, which for the next fiscal year is covered by an item which has just been adopted by the House, making the salary after the 4th day of March $6,000, and this provision is in keeping with that; and the House having permitted that to stay in, I submit that the second paragraph is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph which has already been passed in the committee is a mere appropriation. Whatever salary may have been fixed, the House is quite at liberty to appropriate either more or less. When no point or order is made the House can appropriate more, and it can appropriate less than the amount provided by law regardless of the amount fixed by law.

Now, the Holman rule provides that it shall be in order where the bill—

Shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

And if this paragraph proposing to fix the salary of the Secretary to the President proposes to fix it at a less amount than is now authorized by law, it would be a reduction in the compensation, and hence I think it is in order. But it proposes now to make a law increasing the salary.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand the Chair sustained the point of order on that ground.

Mr. MANN. I thought the Chair overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intended to sustain the point of order. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois misunderstood the Chair. As the Chair understands the law, the compensation provided by law is $5,000. The fact that the salary has been fixed at $7,500 by an appropriation bill in years past does not change the law of the land, and the Holman rule does not apply in this case. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert "$5,000" in place of "$6,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that paragraph is passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman wants to make a point of order on it, I will withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For commissioner, acting as president of the commission, $4,500; 2 commissioners, at $4,000 each; chief examiner, $3,000; secretary, $2,500; assistant chief examiner, $2,250; 3 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; examiner, $2,400; 3 examiners, at $2,000 each; 4 examiners, at $1,800 each; clerks—4 of class 4, 21 of class 3, 28 of class 2, 38 of class 1, 32 at $1,000 each, 20 clerks, at $900 each; messenger; assistant messenger; engineer, $840; telephone switchboard operator; 2 firemen, at $720 each; 2 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 3 laborers; 3 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $227,230.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], concerning the item where it says there are "three laborers and three messenger boys, at $360 each," what is the class of work done by these three laborers, and how many hours they have to devote to that class of work?

Mr. DYER. Page 29, at the bottom of the page, line 23.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. "Three messenger boys, at $360 each." I asked that question myself. They are boys who just put in a few hours a day; schoolboys who do this light errand work.

Mr. DYER. That applies to the three laborers also?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. I understand that in the case of the boys it is light work, just for schoolboys who want these temporary places. The laborers get $660.

Mr. DYER. There is nothing there saying that they shall get $660.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a general law that fixes the compensation of laborers at that amount.

Mr. DYER. Very well. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For Secretary of State, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Second and Third Assistant Secretaries, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; 2 Assistant Solicitors of the Department of State, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, at $3,000 each; law clerk, and assistant, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State, to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively; Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500; 2 chiefs of bureaus, at $2,250 each; 5 chiefs of bureaus, at $2,100 each; 2 translators, at $2,100 each; additional to Chief of Bureau of Accounts as disbursing clerk, $200; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; clerks—16 of class 4, 16 of class 3, 25 of class 2, 41 of class 1, 3 of whom shall be telegraph operators, 16 at $1,000 each, 19 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; 5 messengers; 22 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $420; packer, $720; 4 laborers, at $600 each; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; in all, $262,800.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, on line 18, page 31, against "Chief of Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations, $2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. GILLETT. That that is not authorized by law. There is at present a Bureau of Trade Relations, but subsequently in the bill, under the Department of Commerce and Labor, the present Bureau of Manufactures in that department is transferred or attempted to be transferred to the Department of State; and in anticipation of that the committee in this section has put in "Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations." But there is at present no such bureau, as I have no doubt the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] will admit.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. HAY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-four Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House is ordered. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

RULE FOR LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 521 (H. Rept. 658).

Resolved, That in the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and for other purposes, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order to consider without intervention of a point of order any section of the bill as reported, and an amendment authorized by the Committee on Appropriations as a committee amendment, to read as follows:

"Hereafter the administrative examination of all public accounts, preliminary to their audit by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be made, as contemplated by the so-called Dockery Act, approved July 31, 1894, and all vouchers and pay rolls shall be prepared and examined by and through the administrative heads of divisions and bureaus in the executive departments and not by the disbursing clerks of said departments, except that the disbursing officers shall make only such examination of all vouchers as may be necessary to ascertain whether they represent legal claims against the United States."

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Forty-one Members have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the other side.

The other side was taken, and 151 Members having arisen, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 107; answered "present" 6, not voting 140, as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the negative.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, and I ask that my name be called again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Call the name of the gentleman from Kansas.

The name of Mr. CAMPBELL was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution upon which the previous question has just been ordered makes certain legislative provisions now in the bill being considered in order and not subject to a point of order. All of those legislative provisions are in behalf of public economy and retrenchment in the expenditures of this Government. Those legislative matters to which I have referred are already in the bill as reported to the House, upon which the Members will be allowed to vote as to their merits after the adoption of this rule. And in addition to those there is a provision that one amendment, which is set out at the end of the rule, shall be in order and not subject to a point of order. It seems to me that this explanation is sufficient to inform the House about the effect of the resolution that is now under consideration. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, if I shall occupy as much as 10 minutes I will ask the Speaker to notify me at the end of that time, as I wish to yield to others. Mr. Speaker, I have often wondered upon what theory the Democratic Party called itself progressive. We have some illustration of it in the rule now before the House. Before those gentlemen who are now in a majority became the majority, so long as I have been a Member of the House, no special rule making new legislation in order on an appropriation bill was ever reported to the House until the point of order was determined by the Chair. After that was done it sometimes happened that the Committee on Rules did report a rule specifying that things that had been held out of order should be held in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield in the time I have.

Mr. PALMER. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to some instances——

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield. A short time ago we had the first illustration of the progress of the Democratic majority along that line, namely, the Post Office appropriation bill, when, even before any matters had been held out of order, the Committee on Rules was assembled and reported a rule to this House specifying a large number of matters that should be held in order notwithstanding the rules of the House. This morning we find that the majority has taken another step along these lines, and we now have before us a rule abrogating Rule XXI of the House and making everything in this legislative appropriation bill, a bill consisting of 135 pages, in order. Progress, Mr. Speaker, along that line may be satisfactory to the Democratic majority, but I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules, instead of reporting a rule of this kind making everything in order on this bill, why do not they squarely offer an amendment to the general rules of the House repealing Rule XXI? Why should everything be in order upon this bill any more than upon any other appropriation bill, and I hope some gentleman will answer in this debate. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can see some reason why the majority wants to do this thing. They want to get some legislation contrary to the general rules of the House in this bill reported by the committee without going upon record on a roll call of the House. We had an illustration only day before yesterday of the Democratic majority dodging an important question of a parcel post, and we now have another proposition—perhaps there are many more, but the one I have especially in mind is where they propose to dodge another question—namely, the revolutionizing of the classified service of the Government and throwing out upon the world every employee here in Washington over 65 years of age. Now, the majority knows that if they are compelled to vote on an aye-and-no vote on the question it would not command a corporal's guard upon either side of the aisle, because it would meet with the just condemnation of this country from one end to the other, but with this rule adopted, with the legislation being in order and no roll call possible upon it, they may do it and get away with it. Now there are times, Mr. Speaker, when I frankly concede that legislation and appropriations are so intimately connected that they should be considered together, but never, in my judgment, should general legislation of an important nature be considered in any appropriation bill. The rule that has been in force—I do not know how long, but I think ever since Congress began its life—prohibited general legislation upon appropriation bills. It was a wise rule, but if the Democratic majority shall progress further along the line they propose this morning then I see no reason why all legislation of the Congress of the United States should not be and will not be included in appropriation bills, thereby enabling the majority to avoid going upon record where the people of this country may have an opportunity of knowing how they voted upon the various questions, for it is a splendid method of concealing from their constituents how they stand upon important questions. [Applause.]

Now, I want to yield some of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed six minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order on this legislative bill, contrary to the ordinary rules of the House, an appropriation that is not authorized by existing law, and there are a number of such items in the bill. It also makes in order any legislative proposition in the bill, and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has just remarked, will allow an avoidance of a roll call upon the several items in the bill, because when the Committee of the Whole, where this bill is first considered, has reported to the House, a separate vote can not be demanded on any item which was in the legislative bill, and we had an illustration the other day of the operation of a rule that we adopted a few years ago for the purpose of giving the minority an opportunity of putting the majority on record by a roll call, because the Speaker of the House refused to recognize the minority leader to make the motion to recommit the Post Office appropriation bill, stating that he felt obliged to recognize a member of the committee first, and under that same rule any member of the committee may declare himself opposed to the legislative bill upon a motion to recommit and receive recognition, although in that case, as in the case the other day, the gentleman who obtained recognition and declared that he was opposed to the bill did not vote against it on the division which I demanded. The theory of legislation is that Members of the House shall go on record on legislative propositions. That is avoided in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because we all know that it is not possible to have a roll call upon every item of appropriations in a long appropriation bill and ever finish the bill, but by this rule which you bring in you show that, through cowardice, you are afraid to go on record on a legislative proposition in your bill; you are afraid to vote upon these different propositions, knowing well that the minority can not vote against the bill in the end which provides the money with which to carry on the Government. However, I am inclined to think that if you keep on adding these legislative provisions to appropriation bills, cowardly refusing to place yourself on record on the items of legislation, that the President will be called upon to do what President Hayes did do many times, veto the appropriation bills, and let the country decide whether you should deprive the Government of existence through cowardly refusing to go on record on legislative propositions.

You might as well say here that we have adopted rules of the House and we now abandon them. Why do you not provide that you do away with the rules and let everything be considered on appropriation bills? Here is an appropriation committee with no legislative jurisdiction over the subject matter in this bill, reporting a bill covering these matters of legislation that belong to other committees, and you are afraid to vote on it, afraid to vote either "aye" or "no," afraid to go on record; but you hide behind a Committee of the Whole, where a roll call can not be called.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] use some of his time?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, every provision in this legislative bill is intimately connected with and relates to appropriations and tends to economize in the public expenditures.

As to the section of the bill to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has referred, and which will be fully debated when we reach it, in regard to the classified service in the District of Columbia, I would say that the committee proposes—and that may allay your alarm—when that section is reached to strike out "65 years" and make people who are in the classified service eligible for reappointment as long as they are able to discharge the duties of their office. We propose to go further. We are dealing with a great question and we are not trying to do it in a cowardly way or a partisan way. We are willing to strike out "1914," when all the people who are now in the service would be eligible for reappointment without further examination, and insert in lieu thereof "July 1, 1917," so that two presidential elections will intervene between the time that we pass this law and the time when any Government employee will come up for reappointment. The difficulty about this thing is this: What the committee had in mind is not the age limit, which has been seized upon to alarm the public. The age limit is of no importance. What we have in mind and what we want the House to consider is whether in the classified service of the Government hereafter men shall be appointed for a definite period of time or for life.

We believe that it is in the interest of efficient administration, we believe it is in the interest of economical adminstraton, that people shall be appointed for a definite period of time.

I do not care whether you make it five years, or seven years, or nine years. There is no politics in it, and it is simply those who conjure up things in their imagination that can find either cowardice or politics in it.

I have never known the day, whether in the majority or in the minority, in Washington or in my district, I was afraid to say honestly where I stood.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me say one word more about legislation on an appropriation bill. Under the great Magna Charta, to which we trace our liberties, the English Parliament has wrung from kings rights for the people. Parliament has secured those rights because it attached to the money bills to run the Government the laws that the people demanded. This Congress ought to repeal the rule which prohibits legislation on appropriation bills. We have a right to say to the Government upon what terms these moneys are granted. Of course, special privilege objects, because they can keep their hands in the Treasury until the House and the Senate and the Executive are all against them. But if you can put your legislation on bills that must be considered by all branches of the Government, that must be acted on, then people must show their colors, and sometimes, perhaps, they would permit special privilege to lose its hold rather than to starve the Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has 9 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina has completely misinterpreted the spirit and purpose of the rule which prohibits new legislation upon general appropriation bills. General appropriation bills are passed to support the Government. They must be passed in order that the Republic may live. Every Member of the House is anxious that the Government shall live, and therefore anxious to support the general appropriation bills. But when there is coupled with such a bill other legislation to which he is opposed on principle an honest legislator is put in this dilemma: He must either vote for the entire bill, including the objectionable legislative riders, or else vote against the bill, and so vote against appropriations necessary to sustain the Government. This is a species of legislation by coercion.

Once on this floor, when men had declared that a House general appropriation bill containing new legislative provisions must be enacted into law, and had threatened that if the Senate did not pass it containing those provisions the House would refuse to pass the general appropriation bills, Gen. Garfield, in a speech, very powerfully brought home to certain gentlemen the evil possible in this method of legislating when he said:

> You tried for four years to shoot this Government to death, and now because upon a general appropriation bill necessary in part to sustain the Government you can not have your way upon irrelevant subject matters, you propose to starve it to death.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. New legislation on a general appropriation bill like this is absolutely without excuse except where it is of an unimportant character or there is a general acquiescence in the proposition involved in the rider; but not where the legislation proposes, as in this case, to change a law which experience has demonstrated to be of very great importance to the proper administration of the civil service of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it has just been stated by the gentleman from South Carolina that the British Parliament wrested certain good laws from the King by attaching those laws to appropriation bills, and likened the necessity of attaching laws in this bill to the necessity that existed in the British Empire in the years that have so long gone by.

There is no similarity between the conditions existing then in that country and now in this country. We are the sovereigns here. We have rules by which we can pass laws for our own government. We have the pursestrings in our hands and are empowered to make appropriations for the maintenance of the Government, and we have wisely from the beginning recognized the wisdom of separating general legislation from appropriation bills. Nothing could more emphasize the wisdom of that separation than the attempt that is being made here to pass important laws on this appropriation bill.

Take the matter of the change that is proposed in our civil service. Let it be understood that the civil service as it is now established in this country is not the growth of a year or a few years, but is the work of years and the efforts of the highest type of American citizenship. The campaign that was made against the spoils system was inaugurated years ago in this country and in behalf of reform in the civil service. It is proposed to undo on an appropriation bill in this year of grace 1912 all that has been done for civil-service reform, without a hearing by a committee, and that without a roll call. It is proposed, in effect, to abandon the benefits of all the reform in the civil service that has come as the result of so many years of work and to substitute in its place the spoils system of the old days.

Oh, gentlemen, your prospects in the November election are not sufficiently brilliant to justify you in taking that step in order to provide you with spoils to divide up among your adherents. The country is not yet ready to abandon the merit system of civil service for the spoils system.

The country is not yet ready to abandon the civil-service system for the spoils system.

You are proposing to do another thing, you say, solely for the sake of economy—for the purpose of saving money. Without a hearing, without reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, without reference to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, you propose to abolish the Court of Commerce.

Oh, that is popular. The Court of Commerce decided a case adversely to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in some newspapers and magazines it has made itself unpopular. But you are not depriving the judges of life terms at the salaries they are now drawing for performing the services required of them in the Court of Commerce. You give them their salaries for doing absolutely nothing but wait for vacancies on the circuit bench. You save nothing by abolishing the court, except that you give these gentlemen liberty to pass perhaps the remainder of their lives in leisure. Why, it is nonsense and shows the folly of legislating in an appropriation bill. This gag rule should therefore be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time—10 mintues—to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. How much time has the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. All the time on that side has expired, has it not?

The SPEAKER. All the time allotted to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this rule proposes to make in order certain provisions reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations. For the information of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], let me tell him that it is based upon a rule reported and adopted by a Republican House of Representatives at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, a rule for which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] voted and on which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did not vote, because he was paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Now, I will take up——

Mr. MANN. You will not explain the circumstances.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I will explain the circumstances. Certain gentlemen made points of order against certain provisions of the bill, as a result of which many provisions were taken out. The Committee on Rules was appealed to and brought in a rule making it in order to insert the provisions eliminated; the rule was adopted. I opposed it, because the rule was being used to take care of certain favorites of the Republican Party for whom provision had been made in the bill. In this bill there is no increase of salary proposed except to one person, and that is to remedy an error made last year by a misprint by which the salary of a laborer was reduced.

At the time referred to, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, there had been suggested a legislative provision in reference to the departmental clerks. Section 8 of the legislative appropriation bill of that year, reported from a Republican committee, provided that all the employees in the departments in Washington should go out of the service at 70 years of age, and provided that no employee over 65 years of age should be continued above a certain designated salary, and that no employee over 68 years of age should be continued above another salary. There was no minority report by the Republican members against that provision, although the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], now a member of the committee which considered this bill and a member of the subcommittee, was a member of the committee which considered that legislative bill and was a member of the subcommittee at that time, as I recall. There was some discussion when the provision was reached in the bill about the propriety of eliminating men who had attained a certain age in the Government service.

Perhaps the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] does not recall the good speeches he makes as well as other Members of the House do. On the 13th of March, 1906, in the course of that debate, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] said:

> Mr. Chairman, has the committee given any consideration to the proposition to have the civil-service rules applied to the admission of persons into the public service, have them serve for a specified time or term, and then go out and make their way in the world before they have reached the age when they are incapacitated to take care of themselves?

Later on, being recognized in the debate, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] made this statement:

> Why not make a term, say, of six years, and have able young men and women coming in and going out constantly after a six-year term in the public service?
> [Applause on the Democratic side.]
> Then the question of a civil pension list will never worry the Government, and the question of having done injustice to an old employee who has given a lifetime of service to the Government will not be a matter of consideration here or elsewhere.
> [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

When a Democratic committee proposes such a provision, making the term five years instead of six years, the gentleman from Kansas declaims against this outrageous attempt to put into force the old spoils system. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Sometimes men have occasion to change their minds, and this is a very progressive age. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and judging from the gentleman's conduct, he is progressing about as rapidly as any man in public life. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] protests against making legislation in order on an appropriation bill. He voted a few days ago to make in order a provision to require the publication of the names of stockholders and editors and publishers of newspapers, which was contained in the Post Office appropriation bill. So did the other gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] also voted to make in order upon an appropriation bill a proposition to condemn the express companies. That is progressive, indeed. That was becoming decidedly progressive in this age of progressiveness. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I know that the gentleman does not wish to state an inaccuracy. I did not vote for the condemnation of express companies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I spoke of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] voting for the provision making the publication of the names of stockholders of newspapers compulsory, and his colleague [Mr. COOPER] voted to make that in order, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] not only voted for that, but he also voted to make the express-company provision in order.

Mr. Speaker, who has made a single legitimate criticism of the provisions of the bill which under this rule will be in order during the consideration of the bill; who has pointed out in this discussion obnoxious and injurious provisions in the bill as reported from the committee; who has urged any argument against it except the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], of short memory [applause on the Democratic side], who thought he could make some political capital by resurrecting a ghost, as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], who, like many old-time Republicans, most of them long since dead, when they had no other argument to make waved the bloody shirt and attempted to stir up sectional strife [applause on the Democratic side] and arouse the bitterness and rancor which originated in an unfortunate division among the people of this country?

He referred to a speech of Mr. Garfield's about legislation on an appropriation bill. He might have read that magnificent speech made by Mr. Garfield during the same session of Congress in which he contended that all of the legislation which he was condemning at that particular time should in the name of peace and amity be repealed so as to show that this was one country, one common brotherhood, one united country, which had forgotten and forever put aside to rest without disturbance the scars and divisions of the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If he had read that patriotic utterance of that distinguished gentleman he would not have reiterated the bright epigram with which in the heat of a five-minute debate Mr. Garfield had electrified the House.

There is no danger that the Democratic House will attempt to starve this Government. If it has no higher motive than mere partisan advantage, it would not do so. It expects to have control of it soon and to use these appropriations itself. It will make every appropriation essential for the proper and economical conduct of the Government.

But it will commence now, and, so far as it has the power, it will eliminate useless and unnecessary offices that have encumbered the Public Treasury so many years. [Applause.] Gentlemen will have an opportunity to vote on some of these questions. They will have an opportunity to vote on the question which their distinguished long-time leader offered to the bill and had adopted in the late hours of the afternoon yesterday. We will see how many Republicans will vote on a roll call to increase the compensation of their own employees in this House.

Certain methods are well understood. Such attempts to embarrass the majority by offering amendments that men can not be induced to vote for on record if you held before them all the wealth of Crœsus will not accomplish much.

The provisions made in order by this rule will be debated when they are reached. The Committee on Appropriations has not committed itself, so far as any provision is concerned, that it is not willing to discuss and debate them. It is as ready to accept recommendations as to make them. Certain important reforms in the administration of the public service are essential; they are proposed in the bill; this is the only way they can be considered by the House; and I favor considering them and enacting them into law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 101, answered "present" 5, not voting 144, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following House bills:

On April 30, 1912:

H. R. 22580. An act to authorize the change of the names of the steamers Syracuse and Boston; and

H. R. 13988. An act to authorize the Director of the Census to collect and publish additional statistics of tobacco.

On May 3, 1912:

H. R. 18336. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

ROBERT W. ARCHBALD (H. DOC. NO. 730).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

To the House of Representatives:

I am in receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by the House on April 25, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of any charges filed against Robert W. Archbald, associate judge of the United States Commerce Court, together with the report of any special attorney or agent appointed by the Department of Justice to investigate such charges, and a copy of any and all affidavits, photographs, and evidence filed in the Department of Justice in relation to said charges, together with a statement of the action of the Department of Justice, if any, taken upon said charges and report.

In reply, I have to state that, in February last, certain charges of improper conduct by the Hon. Robert W. Archbald, formerly district judge of the United States Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, and now judge of the Commerce Court, were brought to my attention by Commissioner Meyer, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I transmitted these charges to the Attorney General, by letter dated February 13, instructing him to investigate the matter, confer fully with Commissioner Meyer, and have his agents make as full report upon the subject as might be necessary, and, should the charges be established sufficiently to justify proceeding on them, bring the matter before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

The Attorney General has made a careful investigation of the charges, and as a result of that investigation has advised me that, in his opinion, the papers should be transmitted to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, to be used by them as a basis for an investigation into the facts involved in the charges. I have, therefore, directed him to transmit all of the papers to the Committee on the Judiciary; but in my opinion—and I think it will prove in the opinion of the committee—it is not compatible with the public interests to lay all these papers before the House of Representatives until the Committee on the Judiciary shall have sifted them out and determined the extent to which they deem it essential to the thoroughness of their investigation not to make the same public at the present time. But all of the papers are in the hands of the committee and therefore within the control of the House.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 3, 1912.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 24023).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose there was a point of order pending, made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], on lines 17 and 18, page 31, in reference to the Bureau of Manufactures and Trade Relations. Since the committee rose the House has adopted a rule that would make this provision in order, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to line 3, page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, line 3, strike out the figures "600" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "720."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that that it is new legislation and increases the compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the provision of law in regard to it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The current law is $600.

Mr. DYER. That is in the preceding appropriation bill. There is no law that fixes the salary at $600 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rules of the House where there is no general law authorizing the salary the appropriation in the preceding appropriation bill carries authority of law which is construed to be the law and any proposed increase is a violation of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 5 of the act of February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," is repealed, and the duties therein prescribed in relation to the promotion and development of the commerce abroad for the manufactured and other products of the United States, including the gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying of valuable and useful information in regard to industries and markets abroad shall hereafter devolve upon the Department of State, under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, and all laws inconsistent herewith are repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 5 and ending with line 15.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when we created the Department of Commerce and Labor a few years ago we provided in that department a Bureau of Manufactures.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to ask unanimous consent that this section of the bill be passed until the section dealing with the same proposition later in the bill is reached, for two reasons.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has had special interest in these matters, and he will not be here until next Tuesday. It will save debating the matter twice.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman, but will the gentleman's request include the next paragraph as well as this one?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In so far as it deals with the subject, let us debate it all at one time.

Mr. MANN. This paragraph and the one next to it which relates to the same subject?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; this section and the next section. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass, on page 33, the section beginning with line 5 and ending with line 15; also the section beginning with line 16 and ending with line 33, until we reach later in the bill sections dealing with the same subject matter under the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I anticipate that we will, later this evening, reach page 62, which contains items in regard to the mints and assay offices. I would like to know if we can not agree that those items shall go over, and not consider them this afternoon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When we reach that provision I think there will be no trouble in reaching an arrangement that will be perfectly fair to everybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We want to read as much as possible of this bill this afternoon. Of course, if there are sections that will involve debate we will be very glad to pass them

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I agree with the gentleman exactly, and that is all I want to do, but I desired to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire what the understanding was. We can not hear over here.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina is to pass the two paragraphs on page 33, commencing with line 5 and ending with line 23, until a similar provision in the bill relating to the same subject matter is reached. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $5,000 each; clerk to the Secretary, $2,500; executive clerk, $2,400; stenographer, $1,800; three private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; Government actuary, under control of the Treasury, $2,250; clerks—one of class four, four of class three, two of class two; chief messenger, $1,100; assistant chief messenger, $1,000; three messengers, at $900 each; four messengers; in all, $60,510.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman having this bill in charge to the fact that this provision carries an appropriation of $12,000 for the Secretary of the Treasury; and as I am informed he is over 65 years of age. Does not the gentleman think we ought to include him in the class we are going to legislate out of office on account of age?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman has not availed himself of the vast fund of information I gave the House this morning or he would not have asked that question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not happen to be present when this vast fund of information was turned loose on the House, but I will avail myself of the opportunity to read it in the RECORD tomorrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I stated to the House there was a principle involved which we desired to discuss and not what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I can not see the policy or the justice of framing an appropriation that will legislate out of office men who have been devoting——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. I told the House this morning that we were going to strike out the 65 years and leave people eligible to reappointment as long as they live, if it is 120 years of age. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was not present and did not hear his assurance with reference to extending the age limit for filling public offices.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of chief clerk and superintendent: Assistant and chief clerk, including $300 as superintendent of Treasury Building, who shall be the chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the assistant secretaries of the department, $4,000; assistant superintendent of Treasury Building, $2,500; clerks—four of class 4, 1 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 2 of class 1, 1 at $1,000, 1 at $900; 2 messengers; 3 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $360; storekeeper, $1,200; telegraph operator, $1,200; telephone operator and assistant telegraph operator, $1,200; chief engineer, $1,400; 3 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; 8 elevator conductors, at $720 each, and the use of laborers as relief elevator conductors during rush hours is authorized; 3 firemen; 5 firemen, at $660 each; coal passer, $500; locksmith and electrician, $1,400; captain of the watch, $1,400; 2 lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 65 watchmen; foreman of laborers, $1,000; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $720 each; wiremen—one at $1,000, one at $900; 34 laborers; 10 laborers, at $500 each; 1 plumber, and 1 painter, at $1,100 each; plumber's assistant, $720 (in lieu of watchman-fireman, $720, Cox Building); 85 charwomen; carpenters—2 at $1,000 each, 1 at $720. For the Winder Building: Engineer, $1,000; 3 firemen; conductor of elevator, $720; 4 watchmen; 3 laborers, one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the conductor of elevator; laborer, $480; and 8 charwomen. For the Cox Building, 1709 New York Avenue: Two watchmen-firemen, at $720 each; and 1 laborer; in all, $170,460.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 19, strike out the word "three" at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight," and strike out the words "five firemen, at $660 each" in line 20.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina make the point of order that this is a change of existing law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir; that it is an increase in salary over the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, certainly, if the gentleman desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. KOPP. But the gentleman reserved the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not want to cut the gentleman off.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If it is impossible in this House to get justice for poor laboring men, and gentlemen on the other side will not even reserve a point of order so one can present what is seemingly an injustice to these men, I think we have reached a plane in legislation that our constituents will not justify. Here, Mr. Chairman, is something that I conceive the Democratic majority, or at least some on that side of the aisle, want to correct, but those in charge of the bill apparently will not give ear even to have it explained. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what law there is or what reason there is for carrying five firemen for this particular place at $660 each?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are carried at those figures because that is what the law fixes them at.

Mr. KOPP. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the law fixing them at that amount, and I would like for him to produce the law. Now, Mr. Chairman, the law provides firemen at $720 each. This is the only place in this bill where firemen are asked to work at $55 a month. In the Post Office Department there are 17 firemen. They draw $720 per year. In the State War and Navy Building there are 10 firemen and they draw $720 per year. In this one place, because years ago these were put in as helpers, they are drawing but $55 a month. Mr. Chairman, I am not acquainted with the personnel of these places, although two years ago I did happen to know one man who worked there. They are white men, they are doing the work of firemen side by side with those who are drawing $720. Now, Mr. Chairman, with all our cry for economy, and I believe there is plenty of room for such economy, I do not believe we want to say to these five men that they must work for $55 a month in this day and age, and I did think, Mr. Chairman, this would be corrected in the present bill.

Last year I brought the matter up, and because I was unfortunately absent when it was reached in the bill I could not secure unanimous consent to return to it. As I stated a moment ago, I have no interest in the matter, but I believe as legislators acting for 90,000,000 people that our constituents do not want us to attempt economy which is not real economy; that our constituents do not want us to ask hard-working, honest, white laboring men who are trying to honorably support their families in this day and age to work for $55 a month. I will ask any man on this floor whether he thinks a man with $55 a month can even pay the rent of a home to live in decently and furnish the necessaries of life. Now, this is only a raise of $5 a month and will make these firemen all the same, so the bill will be a harmonious bill from the beginning to the end, and all the firemen will receive $60 a month. Mr. Charman, knowing of these conditions, I would not feel I was doing my duty to the House if I did not present the facts as I know them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to page 35 of the bill, where it says, on line 20:

Five firemen, at $660 each; coal passer, $500.

Mr. KOPP. The amendment I have offered is at that very point, to strike out and make it eight firemen, at $720, which is an addition of $5 a month.

Mr. DYER. What about the coal passer?

Mr. KOPP. I do not desire to ask any man to give his exclusive time to the Government for $500 a year. I do not think the amendment will be adopted, because the gentlemen in charge of the bill are so magnanimous as to not reserve a point of order, but have already made it, and thus prevented the House from passing upon it.

Mr. DYER. I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that when the Post Office bill was up we made an amendment to increase the salaries of laborers and watchmen to $700 and $720, the minimum; some of them at $840, but the minimum was raised to $700, recognizing, as we ought to recognize, that it is impossible in this day, when the cost of living has so increased, to ask a man to give all of his time to this Government, be he a laborer or watchman or coal passer or what, and pay him such a salary as $500 a year. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest assets that this Government has to-day is in its personnel in the various departments of this Government, located mainly here in Washington, and to ask them to take less than they have been receiving, to reduce them $100 or so, is outrageous, and no man ought to ask that it be done. There is not a single increase of any man in the Government in this entire bill, excepting one, who was omitted or neglected to be corrected in the last appropriation bill. The gentlemen on that side know that the cost of living in the last two years has greatly increased. To-day to expect a man to rent a decent house and house his family, to provide something for them to eat and to wear, and to send them to school, and to rear them decently in this city of Washington, high as everything is, on the sum of $500 a year ought to be considered disgraceful.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman the committee has not cut any of these salaries. They are as they were estimated for by the heads of the departments.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is a member of that committee, and he knows that the head of a department goes to this Committee on Appropriations with the fact staring him in the face that this Democratic House of Representatives wants to cut down salaries.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say further that these salaries are what the gentleman's own party allowed to the various employees in the bill for the current year.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman, regardless of any party, it is wrong. I ask the gentleman if he is willing to vote for a man to rear his family upon $500 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not remember that the gentleman made any complaint last year when this matter was up. I submit that the head of a department knows better what a laborer's services are worth than we do, because he is familiar with the work done by him.

Mr. DYER. If I had been here, I would have made it, Mr. Chairman. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of this great committee, knows it is outrageously unfair for a man to receive a salary of $500 a year or $600 a year. I ask the gentleman from New York if he does not think we ought to increase these salaries to the minimum of $720 for the laborer, the fireman, or a coal passer, working for the Government of the United States. The gentleman can not answer it, Mr. Chairman, satisfactorily to his own party or satisfactorily to this committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know there is great activity and anxiety among the Republicans during this session of Congress to increase compensation of employees. For years we reported this bill, fixing in it the compensation originally fixed by the heads of the departments, and neither one of these energetic gentlemen raised his voice about the men who it is now claimed are underpaid. Now, in a hypocritical attempt to make it appear that the Democratic Party in its program of economy is doing an injustice toward Government employees, they are making motions that they know are not in order under the rules, and that they would not dare to make if the Republicans were in control, just for the purpose of giving vent to these eloquent periods. If the gentlemen have gratified their desire to make these statements, realizing that the Democratic Party has not reduced a single salary, with one or two exceptions that can be justified, and that in its own good time when it gets complete control of the Government, it will do that justice to the Government employees to which they are entitled and which, if they have not, has been refused for 16 years under complete Republican control, we will now proceed, I hope, to dispose of the public business without wasting our time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. The Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations intimated that because the previous Congress had not seen fit to raise the salaries of these men, that the Republicans have no right now to say anything. I say, Mr. Chairman, that conditions have changed since then, and while I was not a Member of Congress then, if I had been I never would have voted to ask a man to give his whole time to this Government for $500 a year. The gentleman says that the Democratic Party will administer the Government along these lines in a short time. They may do so, but I have too much confidence in the decency and good sense of the American people to believe that they will turn the Government over to men who want these men to live upon such indecent wages as $500 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 35, line 20, by striking out the words:

At $660 each.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point of order that this changes existing law. The Chair is informed that this bill is written in accordance with the existing law. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP] has anything to show that this is not a change of existing law, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the gentleman has offered is to strike out certain language in the bill. There is no obligation on the part of the committee to retain everything in a bill which is reported here. The Appropriations Committee reports certain language in the bill. Now, if you wish to insert language in the bill, of course that would be subject to a point of order, but here is a proposition merely to strike out of the bill certain language contained therein. Certainly the Chair can not hold that the committee does not have the power under the rules to strike out a part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Under that section of Rule XXI, known as the Holman rule, which authorizes a reduction, the Chair overrules the point of order and holds the motion in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not strike out any positions. It only strikes out a rate, an amount, and fixes the salary. If you strike that out, it changes the law. I think I can demonstrate that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York desires to be heard on that, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law, if "$660" is stricken out the compensation paid to them is $720, unless the compensation be specifically fixed in the bill. The striking out of the $660 does not drop the firemen, but it increases their compensation by $60 a year. By taking off the limitation of $660 the salary will be paid under the general provision, which fixes the amount at $720.

Mr. MURDOCK. But it reduces the appropriations in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not. It increases them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. MANN. After all, Mr. Chairman, the point is whether the rules are so constructed that the House can neither add to a provision reported from the Committee on Appropriations or subtract from it. Have we reached the point where the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union can do nothing except to let the bill be read from the Clerk's desk, and that you can not add to or subtract a word; that you can not add the word "the" or take away the word "a"? Are we so completely under the control of the Committee on Appropriations that we have no power to change a bill? Where is the rule that contains a provision which says you can not strike out a part of a bill that is reported? You can strike out an appropriation and you can strike out any word in the bill. What authority has the gentleman for saying that the rules are so provided under this administration of the House that the House can not even strike out the word "at"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nobody suggested that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Just one suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will turn to section 2 of this bill, on page 137—a section which is now the law of the land—the Chair will observe that it provides that "the pay of telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, except those employed in mints and assay offices, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows," and then it provides that the salary for telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen shall be at the rate of $720 per annum, and that the pay of laborers shall be at the rate of $660 per annum, so that if you strike out "$660," under the section of the bill, section 2, which is the present law of the land and the existing law, you give them $720 each, which would be an increase over the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that the appropriation is made for these employees twice in this same bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. No, sir; I do not. I simply say that section 2 of the bill provides what they shall receive when not otherwise specifically provided for. Section 2 is the current law, the law of the land, so that it would be an increase from $660 to $720 if you strike out $660, because the bill provides and the bill carries the current law of the land, providing that the compensation shall be $720 when not otherwise specifically provided for.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. A while ago we had up a provision for the salary of the Secretary to the President, where the law fixes the salary at $5,000 and the appropriation act for the current year carried the amount at $7,500. Does the gentleman think it would be subject to a point of order if an amendment were proposed to leave it at $7,500.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think when the law fixes a certain salary for a certain officer and the Congress appropriates more or less than that amount in a bill that it is subject to a point of order in the next session or the next Congress to fix the salary by law?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly not, if it is less. The law fixes the salary.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference whether it is more or less. Under the rules of the House the law fixes the salary. We may appropriate more or less, but the law fixes the salary, and if we strike out the salary, the officer is entitled to the salary fixed by law.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is exactly what I stated.

Mr. MANN. But it is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP] provides for striking out after the word "firemen," in line 20, page 35 of this bill, the words "$660 each." The Chair does not think that this amendment is directed at existing law. This House has the right to make an appropriation or refuse to appropriate for the salary of any man who is employed by the Government. If the Chair were to hold that it would be a change of existing law for the gentleman to move to strike out a line that carries an appropriation, it would prevent the House from refusing to appropriate for the salary of an officer who is on the pay roll of the Government. This House has repeatedly——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is not the appropriation. The amendment is to strike out the rate at which the compensation is to be paid. If they desire to eliminate these laborers, the proper amendment would be to strike out "three laborers, at $660 a year," the word "at" being understood. Six hundred and sixty dollars is the rate of compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair does not find that that differentiates the question of striking out the rate of compensation and the compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this rate be stricken out, another rate takes effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes that. But it is within the power of the House, when it reaches the other rate, to strike that out. It seems to me it is necessary for the House to have control of the proposition as to whether it will pay the salary or not pay the salary. If there was nothing else in this bill except the "$660," to strike out the amount would clearly carry the salary with it. Now, there may be some other clause in this bill that fixes another salary, but that leaves it to the House to attend to that proposition when it reaches it in the proper order. The Chair must hold that the House has the authority to refuse to appropriate, if it desires to do so, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, this will leave the bill, if the amendment should be adopted, in this shape: "Three firemen; five firemen," which would be the same as "eight firemen." The salary of firemen is fixed by law at $720 per year, or $60 per month.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is immaterial to me what the House does. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] attempted to found this upon a partisan basis by saying that gentlemen on this side of the House were anxious now to raise the salaries since his side of the House is in the majority.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I stood here last year and the year before and tried to correct this injustice. Here are five firemen, and the only firemen who have been asked to work for $55 per month side by side with other firemen drawing $60 per month. The gentleman from New York said a moment ago that the only changes they had made in raising salaries was to right wrong and wipe out injustice. I ask you gentlemen to wipe out one more injustice, and if you feel that your record for economy is so great that you can not afford to pay $5 per month for five hard-laboring white men trying to make an honest living for their families, why then vote against it. I feel that my duty is performed when I have presented for the attention of the House the facts of the case.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that the heads of the department, who made the estimates for the firemen and the coal passers and other unskilled employees, know about what their services are worth?

Mr. KOPP. If that were true I do not know how the Committee on Appropriations has cut this bill down $2,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We have not reduced the salaries.

Mr. KOPP. You have cut out a lot of things that the department had estimated for, and if the gentleman is correct that they know best, why should the Committee on Appropriations refuse to follow the estimates?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman misunderstood my question. My question was whether or not the heads of the departments did not know better what the individual services of certain employees were worth than the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOPP. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking another. Does not the department know about the number of watchmen required better than the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not necessarily, especially since it appears in the hearings had by the committee that there are two or three times as many as are necessary, a fact which was not seriously controverted.

Mr. KOPP. I do not care what the estimates are, if we find that men are asked to work for a great Government at wages that are not living wages, I do not believe we can shift that responsibility onto the heads of the departments or anyone else. It is our duty to see that justice is done to all, and especially those who are not in a position to help themselves.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I remember last year when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP] called attention to this case, and at that time, I think, it was generally understood in the House, and expression was given to it privately, that if the facts were disclosed, as the gentleman, in his enthusiasm, had stated, that it would be corrected another year. My understanding was that the department itself would recommend an increase of salary to these firemen. I do not know whether the estimates were made for an increase or not. I am told that these are the only white firemen in the Government service in Washington who are working at this small salary, and they are working side by side with other firemen who receive a larger salary. In the first place, it was either inadvertence or lack of money that their salary was placed at this sum, and it was never called to the attention of Congress until a year or two ago, when it was stated among a number of us privately—I think, on both sides of the House—that if that was the situation we would endeavor to correct it another year.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman remember what the last appropriation bill carried?

Mr. MANN. The same as this, $660.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the bill before that?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember anything about the matter until last year. I remember the gentleman from Wisconsin last year called attention to this case and there was considerable discussion in regard to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The last appropriation bill is the same as this.

Mr. MANN. I so stated; it was not changed then, but it was discussed on the floor at that time and among gentlemen privately, I think, on both sides, it was agreed that it ought to be corrected.

Mr. BARTLETT. As far as I am concerned these are the people whose salaries I should like to see raised.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, they do the same work as the others, who get $720?

Mr. MANN. Yes; they work side by side; there is no difference at all. This is not an ordinary case.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I think they ought to have the same pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 45, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to take care of my coal passer. I move to strike out the figures "500," in line 20, page 35, and insert the figures "600."

Mr. FITZGERALD. To that I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Comptroller of the Treasury: Comptroller of the Treasury, $6,000; Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; 9 law clerks revising accounts and briefing opinions—1 at $2,100, and 8 at $2,000 each; expert accountants—6 at $2,000 each; private secretary, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 1 of class 2; stenographer and typewriter, $1,400; typewriter-copyist, $1,000; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; 1 laborer; in all, $73,460.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 41, after line 2, insert the following:

"Hereafter the administrative examination of all public accounts, preliminary to their audit by the accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be made as contemplated by the so-called Dockery Act, approved July 31, 1894, and all vouchers and pay rolls shall be prepared and examined by and through the administrative heads of divisions and bureaus in the executive departments and not by the disbursing clerks of said departments, except that the disbursing officers shall make only such examination of all vouchers as may be necessary to ascertain whether they represent legal claims against the United States."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is such an important matter in one way that I wish the gentleman from South Carolina would briefly tell us what this does so that we can be informed about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, when the subcommittee was engaged in making up the bill we found a marked difference in the cost of disbursing money in the different departments. For instance, the Treasury Department which disburses about $17,000,000, does it this year at a cost of about $15,000. We found that the Department of Justice, which disburses only about $4,000,000, and that largely in salaries, cost very much more, possibly twice as much, as to disburse the money in the Treasury Department.

And so we examined the facts and found that there was no comparison to be drawn between the expense in the different departments. We thereupon inquired into it. We found this state of affairs. The Dockery Commission, which went through all the departments very thoroughly a few years ago, in order to do away with the cumbersome system of auditing, provided that the auditing should take place in the office of the auditor for the respective departments, but that there should be an administrative audit in the bureaus; the auditors themselves and the bureaus both having the right to appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury for his construction of the law before they took any steps to expend the appropriation or the matters might be appealed to him after action was taken.

So the Dockery Commission, in order to prevent this duplicating of auditing, the work in the auditors' offices was combined, and it had to go through the channel and to the Comptroller of the Treasury before the money was paid. They provided that the bureau should have an administrative audit. Nobody is better qualified to certify to a disbursing officer that certain people are on the pay roll at a certain sum a month and are entitled to receive a certain amount than the man at the head of the bureau himself.

Now, when we looked into the question of this marked difference in the cost of disbursing money we found that the disbursing officers had from time to time come to the Committee on Appropriations and asked for so many clerks of class 4, so many of class 3, and so on, and that they had built around themselves a complete and perfect auditing system—that is, in some of the departments—so that they ceased to be disbursing officers and became auditing and disbursing officers.

We sent for the Comptroller of the Treasury and we went over this whole question with him and got the benefit of his views as to the trouble. We had the benefit of his suggestions as to what would cure the trouble, and in consequence of the conferences we had with the Comptroller of the Treasury and in consequence of the investigation which I have endeavored to call to your attention, we framed this amendment, submitted it to the full Committee on Appropriations, and I think it meets with the unqualified approval of every member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One of the evils that is complained of is in the settlement of accounts against the Government, the auditors claiming to be behind in their work. Does the gentleman believe that this amendment, as suggested by the committee, will facilitate the settlement of accounts of individuals against the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think it will expedite it, because instead of having an auditing office in each department we simply require the disbursing officer to ascertain to his satisfaction that it is a legal claim and that there is an appropriation to pay it when the warrant goes to him, not that he will, like an Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury, go to examining the facts and inquire into the expediency and propriety of the claim.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is aware that some claims are held up for many years, and frequently when efforts are made to settle, either by law or otherwise, the argument is made that there is not sufficient help to make up the accounts or they are not accessible. Of course we hear a good deal about circumlocution in Government offices, and I would like to know if it is the gentleman's interpretation of his amendment that its passage would mean that accounts with the Government will be settled more expeditiously?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe that will be the effect.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I think there is no great complaint about the payment, if the gentleman will allow me, for money that is due by the Government for services performed. The complaint to which the gentleman refers, I think, is in the matter of claims that rest against the Government, many times not under contract, many times and most times growing out of the Civil War, the war for the Union, with two and a half million men in the field, matters of bounty pay and settlement, and in the main they were paid. But there is a class of claims arising from future legislation and future decision; and I may say further, if the gentleman will indulge me, that there are lawsuits pending all the time in the Court of Calims and legislation touching longevity and touching many things where the people have been paid for their services, but these claims come by virtue of future legislation or judicial determination, and in a Government such as ours it takes time. I do not believe this amendment will materially affect that class of business which is in large part a business that is ordinarily disposed of by the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I meant to say that in the case of claims that are well founded in law and are payable out of current appropriations there would be less delay in having the bureau make such audit and pass it on for payment rather than to make an exhaustive audit.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, as I understand the gentleman, he desires to have an administrative audit, so called, and to cut out any other audit substantially until it reaches the Treasury Department and the auditor's office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of collecting the corporation tax authorized by the tariff act approved August 5, 1909, $150,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the $150,000 for collecting the corporation tax. Does that contemplate suits that will have to be brought to enforce the collecion of penalties against corporations that have failed to make their returns in the time and manner required by law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated, in response to a question as to why he wanted such a large increase, that it was important for the Treasury to send special agents to examine the books of large corporations. It is not for the purpose of bringing suit, but it is for the purpose of making minute examinations of corporations which would otherwise escape the taxation, and he said, if I may add, that if we would give him the money he asked for that he felt he could assure the committee that for every dollar of that money it would result in the collection of $25 for the Treasury that would otherwise not be collected.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with that statement, and I made the inquiry and moved to strike out the last word in order to be recognized for this purpose. Mr. Chairman, there are some 8,000 corporations that are now subject to penalties for failure to make returns or to make returns by the 1st of March under the first enforcement of the corporation-tax law. There may be some that ought to be punished. The law provided that if any corporation that was subject to the tax failed to make a return by the 1st of March that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should ascertain what their returns should be and automatically add 50 per cent to the tax that they did return or should have returned; or in case a corporation returns its tax on the 2d day of March, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue added as a part of the tax the 50 per cent, and it became part of the tax. Also, there was a provision in the bill which made it a criminal offense not to make the return by the 1st of March. There are quite a number of small corporations that are not subject to this tax that failed to make return, and they became liable to be indicted and prosecuted, or their officers, under one of the sections of the law.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by the general law to settle and compromise with that particular class of cases. There are a number of corporations, small corporations, I know of my own knowledge in my own district, while there is quite a number that would not be subject to the tax, yet they were compelled, in order to settle a threatened prosecution, to pay to the Government $25—some less, but not over $25—some escaped by the payment of $10 or $15, because they failed to make the return on the 1st of March, not that they were subject to the tax, but showing that they were not subject to the tax. I have one or two cases in my district to which my attention has been called in which the return reached the internal-revenue collector's office in Atlanta on the 2d of March, and they have been compelled to pay the 50 per cent additional tax as a penalty or the 50 per cent additional tax as a penalty for failure to make the returns on the 1st of March, and it can not be remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, although in several cases which I presented to him he was desirous of being able to remit the penalty. I call the attention of the committee to this because of this question. There are bills pending, and I think there ought to be some legislation which will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise or to remit these penalties as well as to settle the so-called quasi criminal offenses, and that is the reason I asked the question, in order that the attention of the committee might be directed to it. I hope the legislation will be enacted in some way that will not permit these hardships, not upon the people who seek to evade the law, not upon people who are subject to the tax, but simply through some sort of misfortune or accident they were prevented from the return being made by the 1st of March, or did not make the return because they were not subject to the provisions of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,250; coin teller, $2,000; vault clerk, $1,900; bookkeeper, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,700; redemption teller, $1,600; clerks—1 at $1,600, 2 at $1,500 each, 3 at $1,400 each, 1 at $1,300, 5 at $1,200 each, 1 at $1,000; chief guard, $1,100; 6 counters, at $900 each; 6 watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $48,470.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 10, after the words "paying teller," at the end of line 9, strike out "$2,250" and insert "$2,300."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think perhaps this is a clerical error. I do not believe the committee intended to save that $50 difference in salary. It looks to me like a clerical error.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What salary is that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You have fixed the salary of the paying teller at $2,250.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a difference of $50. I question if that is what the committee meant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was on the recommendation of the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To save this $50?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. For the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and all those in the House who are interested in the subtreasuries, I wish to make this statement. The Secretary of the Treasury has sent from his office certain experts to all of the subtreasuries throughout the United States. He endeavored to standardize the work and to equalize the compensation, and he sent down to the committee as the result of the labors of his department in investigating all the subtreasuries these estimates. In a few instances—but I think very few, maybe half a dozen—there was a slight change in the compensation of some of the officials. I did not remember at the time the particular one to which the gentleman refers, and whatever changes were made have been very slight, and it is done by the Secretary in the belief that he was treating them all alike for the same kind of work, taking into consideration the size of the town and the compensation for like services.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I notice the compensation for paying tellers varies. It is $2,000 in New Orleans, for instance, and $3,000 in New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And $2,250 in Philadelphia, according to this bill, but the difference was so slight that I thought, perhaps, it was a typographical error.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I stated a moment ago that the information brought to our committee was that they tried to adjust these salaries so as to be absolutely fair to every man, treating them all alike, taking into consideration the conditions of their work and the amount of responsibility, the amount of money handled, and all that sort of thing. They told us how much each man handled in New York, Boston, and different places, but I do not remember the amounts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So it is on the recommendation of the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We wrote this as we were asked to write it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The change is made on the recommendation of the department itself?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir. There has been no change made at the instance of the committee. Whatever changes were made were made on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I notice that the salary of the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis was reduced a very small amount, $100, but I would like to ask the gentleman just why that was done? I see that the salary of the subtreasurer at New Orleans and at San Francisco is fixed at exactly the same amount as the salary at St. Louis, and I know that the volume of business done in the city of St. Louis is much greater than that at either San Francisco or New Orleans. Now, if, as the gentleman says, these salaries have been adjusted in accordance with the volume of business, the salary at St. Louis should certainly be increased.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It has not been reduced.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It has been reduced $100.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understood it had been reduced $100.

Mr. MANN. The clerks that have been carried at $900, I think, are now carried at $1,100.

Mr. Chairman, in reporting this bill the committee have made a number of changes in the office of assistant treasurer at various cities, as stated by the gentleman, in accordance with the organization and reorganization plan of the department. I called attention a few years ago to the gross inaccuracy and unfairness of corresponding salaries in different subtreasuries. And evidently the department this time has endeavored to make recommendations to put salaries upon a somewhat more reasonable and fairer basis as compared with the work in the different cities. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] calls attention to a reduction of salary of $50 in one instance. In Boston they have reduced the salary of a vault clerk from $2,000 to $1,800.

Mr MOORE of Pennsylvania. I observe the Boston paying teller is rated at $2,250.

Mr. MANN. The paying teller was $2,500, and it was reduced to $2,250. In New York the assistant cashier is reduced from $4,200 to $4,000, and the vault clerk from $3,200 to $3,000, and various changes are made there besides the one to which the gentleman has called attention. In New Orleans the receiving teller is reduced from $2,000 to $1,800.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a reduction of——

Mr. MANN. That is a reduction of $200. Some years ago I called the attention of the House to this situation: That some official in one city which transacted one-third of the business was paid a higher salary than a corresponding official in another city transacting three times the business in the subtreasury, which, of course, was something that had grown up through a course of years and through the raising of salaries, probably on the floor of the House or in the Senate, or perhaps in the department, because some person had been in the service for a number of years and they wanted to increase his salary temporarily. Of course when he went out his successor received the same salary. This reorganization carried in the bill is certainly a desirable and fair thing to do in the effort, at least, to put the salaries in the different cities somewhat on the same basis for the same work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In some instances, while there was some slight decrease, not very great, in others there were increases to equalize the service. The committee accepted the recommendation of the department.

Mr. MANN. At Boston there is a decrease of $60. In Chicago there is an increase of $2,500 altogether.

Mr. DYER. What is the decrease at St. Louis?

Mr. MANN. Last year it was $40,540; this year it is $41,060.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I notice that the salary of the paying teller at San Francisco, for instance, is $2,400 and the salary of the paying teller at St. Louis is $2,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, if the salaries, as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] says, have all been adjusted on an absolutely equitable basis, I do not see why there should be a difference in those two salaries, particularly when you take into consideration the fact that the volume of business done at St. Louis is greater than that done at San Francisco.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the paying teller at San Francisco has always acted also as assistant cashier, and he has additional duties to perform over those of the paying teller at St. Louis.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The bill does not state it.

Mr. MANN. But that is the fact. He always has been assistant cashier and acts as assistant cashier in addition to acting is paying teller. The San Francisco office was originally the highest-paid office in the country, a fact growing out of conditions prevailing there, probably, at the time when the office was created. But the salaries at San Francisco have been reduced since then from time to time. The gentleman can not always tell by the title in these Treasury offices just what an official performs, because a person performing the same duties in one office may be called by one title in one office and by another title in another office. They do not string out the titles so as to include all the duties that are performed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in corroboration of what the gentleman from Illinois has stated, that the officer at San Francisco is really filling two positions, at a salary of $2,400. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is mistaken, I think, in stating that the volume of business done in St. Louis is larger than that done at San Francisco.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have seen the figures recently, and they are certainly larger than at San Francisco.

Mr. HAYES. They are not very much larger, if at all.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have not the figures here; but that is my impression.

Mr. HAYES. I think the officers in the Subtreasury at San Francisco are doing substantially what the officers of the Subtreasury at St. Louis are doing.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman will see from the titles that there is a great deal of difference.

Mr. HAYES. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], some of the officers at the San Francisco Subtreasury are filling two positions.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the paying teller at Chicago receives $2,000, and still he probably does 10 times as much work in that capacity as the officer at San Francisco. And yet the officer at San Francisco is entitled to the salary he receives for the work he does, because he has additional work besides that of merely paying out money through the window.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I notice here, on line 24 of page 61, "two janitors, at $600 each." I notice in line 15 of the same page "six watchmen, at $720 each." There is no provision in that paragraph as to the subtreasury at Philadelphia for janitors. Do I understand that those who do janitors' work at the subtreasury at Philadelphia and also at the subtreasury in New York and in other subtreasuries are carried as watchmen?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know under what title they are carried.

Mr. DYER. Well, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] about that.

Mr. MANN. I can give the gentleman some information on the subject. While the subtreasury at Chicago has a great many more rooms to look after and a great deal more business to transact, the bill carries only one janitor for Chicago and two for St. Louis. The fact is, however, that a proportion of the work done by the janitors in public buildings is done not directly through this appropriation, but through an appropriation for the custodian of the public building, and it does not necessarily indicate that all the janitor work is done by these officials. The custodian of the building under the Treasury Department has control of the janitors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In Philadelphia it is the collector of the port.

Mr. DYER. Do not these watchmen do janitor work?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The care of building in Philadelphia is under the control of the collector of the port.

Mr. DYER. What I want to call to the attention of the gentleman is this: Here in the subtreasury at St. Louis two men are carried as janitors at $600 each, whereas they are carried in the subtreasuries at Philadelphia and New York and other places as watchmen at $720 each. I think it is no more than fair that these two janitors at St. Louis who receive $600 each should be carried at the same amount, namely, $720; and I ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] if he will agree to that amendment?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that it is not in order to offer an amendment to that item at this time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If you want to increase the salary of the janitors at St. Louis, then you want also to increase the number of janitors at Chicago, so that if you want to make the salary at St. Louis $720, those two should not be expected to do only the work of one janitor at Chicago. I know that we are fast in Chicago, but I did not know we were so much faster as that would indicate.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We have one more watchman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They need it at Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. We have not any more. We have three watchmen and you have two watchmen, a guard, and two janitors.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Amend, page 61, line 15, after the words "at $900 each," and preceding the word "watchmen," strike out "six" and insert "seven."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 61, line 15, after the words "at $900 each," and preceding the word "watchmen," strike out "six" and insert "seven."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, I desire to state——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment on the ground that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the present law provides for six watchmen?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a moment until I can discuss the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina made the point of order, and the Chair ruled on it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I not know what the point of order is?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the existing law provides for six watchmen.

Mr. MANN. I understand it does not provide for six watchmen at Philadelphia. I understand it provides for seven watchmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from South Carolina if his point of order was that the amendment changed existing law, and the Chair understood him to answer that it did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The existing law provides for seven watchmen at Philadelphia.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws the point of order. The Chair was misled as to the condition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the same condition holds in regard to these watchmen as obtained in regard to the paying teller; whether this recommendation for a reduction in the number of watchmen comes from the department? This is a case of taking away a man's position. The other was a matter of adjusting salaries. I think I am justified in offering the amendment with a view of trying to save this place to the employee, if possible. Was this reduction of the force recommended by the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The committee was so thoroughly impressed with the fact that the Treasury Department had made an honest effort to examine into these subtreasuries and to equalize the pay and adjust the force to the work done that we accepted these estimates as they came down from the department. We believe they are trying to do right, and we believe they did do right, and we gave them what they asked for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the department made a recommendation that the force be reduced from 7 to 6?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it is not at the suggestion of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we acted on the suggestion of the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman understands that I must do the best I can to hold the place. If the department recommended it I will have to submit the matter to the House. We feel that we need this watchman at the subtreasury. There is a large amount of money in the treasury, and these men have to make relays to protect the deposits. I hope the House will permit this watchman to remain and will adopt the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Considering the fact that the business in the subtreasury at Chicago is much greater than it is in Philadelphia, what excuse can the gentleman offer for having six watchmen at Philadelphia when we only have three in Chicago?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will frankly admit that Philadelphia is a much more peaceful city than is Chicago, but occasionally the inhabitants of Chicago migrate to Philadelphia.

Mr. MANN. If that is the only excuse the gentleman offers I shall be compelled to vote against his amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I have stronger grounds than that. The gentleman asked his question in a humorous vein and I answered it in the same manner. This watchman is needed in Philadelphia for the protection of the money of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania to understand that I made the point of order under a misapprehension of the number that the law provided.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,800; change teller, $1,600; 3 clerks, at $1,500 each; coin teller, $1,200; bookkeeper, $1,500; 7 clerks, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $1,100 each; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 3 clerks, at $900 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 2 janitors, at $600 each; guard, $720; in all, $41,060.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina why it was that they reduced two clerks from $1,200 last year to $1,100 this year? Was that recommended by the Secretary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Just for the same reason that I have explained in regard to all the subtreasuries. We believe that the Secretary of the Treasury, for his subordinates, made an earnest and honest effort to adjust the salaries on a fair basis, and adjust the force in all the subtreasuries, and whatever has been done in the matter of reducing anybody's compensation, if it has been reduced, was at the instance of the department.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman will agree that that is the fact, that two clerks with salaries of $1,200 have been reduced to $1,100?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but we have followed the request of the department in doing it. We made no personal investigation of the St. Louis office.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman will object, under the circumstances, to an amendment putting them back to $1,200?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I should have to object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 61, line 24, strike out the figures "600" and insert in lieu thereof "720." I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, page 61, strike out the figures "600" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "720."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that $600 is the current law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the current law.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order until I ask a question? The current law provides that janitors shall get $660 a year, does it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; the janitor gets whatever compensation is fixed where he is provided for. If you change the compensation, you change his pay, of course. This was fixed, and this particular item is the current law not only as to number, but as to pay.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows that some time ago they got $500 in some places, and the pay has been increased on appropriation bills to $720.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no law fixing the compensation of these officials, but their compensation depends on the law as it reads at the particular place they are provided for.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think that these salaries ought to be increased?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Secretary of the Treasury has investigated all of these officials and their salaries, and the committee has followed the recommendations.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For paper for interest, transfer, redemption, pension, and other checks and drafts for the use of the Treasurer of the United States, assistant treasurers, pension agents, disbursing officers, and others, $9,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass without prejudice over that portion of the bill beginning in line 12, page 62, "mint and assay offices," down to and including the bottom of page 65. These matters will provoke some discussion, and I have promised gentlemen interested in them not to take them up this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to pass without prejudice that portion of the bill beginning at line 13, page 62, to the bottom of page 65. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina indicate that when the House meets the next time to consider this bill he will return the first thing and commence where we leave off to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I could not indicate when we will return to this section, but I will say to the gentlemen that no advantage will be taken of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon a number of Members are absent. This bill will be continued, and the purpose will be to dispose of these matters as rapidly as possible. There will be no agreement not to take them up in the future. Members must be here when the bill is under consideration. The next time that the bill will come up will be next Tuesday.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I agree with the gentleman from New York that Members should be here, but the gentleman from South Carolina was making a statement as to when the bill would be taken up again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina I did not wish gentlemen to be misled. We will start on Tuesday, and the disposition will be to proceed with this bill and to dispose of all the parts as they are reached as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not disagree to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not want Members to be misled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, can we have the assurance that this will not be taken up before next Tuesday?

Mr. MANN. No, you can not; because we might reach it on Monday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. The request is that that portion of the bill beginning at line 13, page 62, to the bottom of page 65, be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I only want some assurance that it will not be taken up again to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we will not take it up again to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 59 for the purpose of offering some amendments in relation to the office of assistant treasurer at New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 59 for the purpose of offering amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59 of the printed bill, under the caption "Office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans," in line 10, after the words "receiving teller," amend by striking out the figures "1,800" and inserting the figures "2,000."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, the object is to restore the salary which exists under the present law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I also offer the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 59, line 11, after the word "clerk," by striking out the words "fourteen hundred" and insert the figures "1,500."

Mr. DUPRÉ. In that case the official was previously known as a bookkeeper at a salary of $1,500. He is changed in this to a clerk with a salary of $1,400. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: Furniture, light, telephone, stationery, record casings and files, printing and binding, indexing records, postage, ice, water, clerk hire, mileage of members, and incidentals, pay of chaplain, clerk, sergeant at arms, stenographers, typewriters, janitors, and messengers, $30,000: Provided, That the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall not draw their compensation of $200 or any mileage for an extra session, held in compliance with section 54 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is this proviso that the Legislature of Hawaii shall not draw their compensation of $200, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The legislature only meets every two years. The sessions of the legislature are biennial.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but what is the object of putting in a provision they shall not draw their compensation for an extra session held in compliance with the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, that is as it came to us from the department.

Mr. GARNER. That is in the last legislative act.

Mr. MANN. No; it is new language here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The department asked for it.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

On or before the 30th day of June, 1912, the Secretary of War shall cause a reorganization to be made of the clerical and other office force of the War Department, herein provided for, so as to reduce the whole number of said force not less than 10 per cent, and the salaries or compensation of all places herein provided for in said department that may be embraced within such reduction shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The item providing for a reduction of 10 per cent directs that the Secretary on or before the 30th day of June next shall reorganize his force. Of course this bill is not likely to become a law very much before the 30th of June, if at all. Suppose it did not become a law until the 30th of June? Would the Secretary be able to effect this reorganization?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Of course the law would not be operative. He could not be expected to comply with a law that was not in existence.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it became a law on the 29th of June and the Secretary did not reorganize his force, is there any sort of penalty in here? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no penalty, and if it became a law after the 1st of June——

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether we wanted to pass a law which very likely could not be executed. I doubt whether it will be possible for any Secretary to reorganize his force between the date when this bill becomes a law and the 30th of June, and whether we should pass a law knowing the officers could not comply with it.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman suppose the Secretary has some idea of this being in the bill, and that it might possibly become a law? He may take cognizance of it at this time.

Mr. MANN. Well, he will not know what is to become the law. Here is an item which might be in conference until the very last moment, and the Secretary can not make his plans accordingly. He usually has enough to do to take care of the things that he has to do, without taking care of dreams. I only call it to the attention of the committee so it may at least be considered whether he is under an obligation to execute a law where it was impossible for him to do it, in order to have the matter cleared up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say this to the gentleman, that as this is such a meritorious bill, we anticipate it will become a law several weeks before the end of June.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is sometimes very facetious.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am not.

Mr. MANN. And I have never seen him so facetious before as he is on this occasion. The gentleman does not believe for one second that this bill will become a law before the 30th of June.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope it will.

Mr. MANN. I hope it will become a law by the 1st of June, but, hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to express any view that would indicate there is going to be any sort of obstruction to the passage of such a meritorious measure——

Mr. MANN. Well, in the ordinary course of events——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman realizes that if the difficulty to which he refers should appear to be inevitable that we will do our very best to make provision that would enable the department to have what was a reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. I call attention so the gentleman might state on the floor that if the bill becomes a law too late to effect the reorganization within the time here prescribed that the Secretary would not be to blame if he did not comply with the strict terms of the provision in the bill.

Mr. GARNER. But if he did comply with the spirit of the law he might reorganize the force after the 1st day of July and save the 10 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman realizes, and I think the committee realizes, that it may be possible that some modification of this provision in reference to time may be necessary, and that could be adjusted, probably, on the deficiency bill, which is usually the very last bill to be agreed upon. Nobody would expect the Secretary to do that which was impossible. The committee expected that he would carry out this law in good faith, and the committee put no penalty in the bill for a failure to comply with this provision, because it believed that if the Congress enacted such a provision, no matter who were Secretary of War, he would try in good faith to carry out the direction of Congress.

Mr. MANN. In other words, if this becomes a law and the Secretary is unable to comply with it before the 30th day of June because it is not in force before the 30th of June, the gentleman expects the Secretary to do that which the law requires him to do before the 30th of June after the 30th of June.

Mr. GARNER. As soon as possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman and myself are in agreement as to what would be expected. Not only that, but the majority members of the committee as well as the minority proceeded upon the assumption that there would be no disposition on the part of the Secretary of War to ignore or to defy an act of Congress, and that he would in good faith endeavor to carry out the law as enacted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think the War Department wants it.

Mr. MANN. I know; but I have on more than one occasion heard the gentleman criticize a department officer for not doing a thing which was clearly understood he should not do in the way the law provided under certain conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I never did that knowingly——

Mr. MANN. I will not say that——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may have done it unintentionally, but I think the spirit of this provision is understood.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Judge Advocate General: Chief clerk and solicitor, $2,500; clerks—1 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 6 of class 1; copyist; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; in all, $20,800.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 69, after the semicolon, insert "2 law clerks, 1 at $2,000 and 1 at $1,800."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment shall be adopted I shall offer another to strike out, in line 6, the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three," and in line 7 to strike out the word "two," after the word "three," and in lieu thereof insert the word "three." I have offered this amendment because there is a peculiar situation in the office of the Judge Advocate General, as is shown in the hearings on pages 312 and 313. The office of the Judge Advocate General is the Law Division of the War Department. As the chief law officer of the War Department, it becomes his duty to pass upon a very great number of important legal questions growing out of the several jurisdictions of the office. For example, the War Department must approve the plans and locations of bridges and dams on navigable streams under existing statutes. Of course those questions are referred to the Judge Advocate General's office for opinions thereon; also questions as to the alteration of bridges, involving hearings which frequently have to be held in order that information may be secured. Then there is the question of establishing harbor lines, upon which there will be arguments and hearings. Under the jurisdiction of this office are permits for the construction of piers and wharves on navigable streams and questions growing out of the removal of sunken wrecks. Of course in the determination of all these matters there must be hearings and arguments and frequently involved legal opinions and documents must be prepared.

Also a great deal of legal work grows out of the river and harbor improvements and the preparation of opinions relative thereto; also legal questions relative to military reservations, national cemeteries, the soldiers' homes, and questions concerning civil employees, among them the applicability of the eight-hour law to the civil employees of the War Department. All of these important questions are within the civil jurisdiction of the Judge Advocate General; and then, of course, everybody knows that the Judge Advocate General has extensive duties to perform growing out of the military and criminal jurisdiction of that office. In other words, then, it is perfectly clear that this is the legal division of the War Department, and I invite attention to the fact, as set forth in the hearings, that, although it is a legal division, there is absolutely no provision for a law clerk. It seems to be a peculiar situation, inasmuch as we have an office here that has to do entirely with legal questions, yet there is no adequate provision for legal assistance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The clerks authorized may be law clerks. The classification of clerks merely fixes the compensation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I will call attention to the fact that Gen. Crowder stated that his chief clerk and solicitor were lawyers of ability, and several other clerks now in the office had attended law schools and were lawyers.

Mr. WILLIS. In response to that, I want to suggest, both to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who are excellent lawyers, that it is perfectly apparent that it is not possible to get and retain for any length of time very much of a lawyer for the salaries paid to this grade of clerks. It is conceded that the present office force is efficient, but it is inadequate for the kind and quantity of work to be done.

I am familiar with the statement made here by Gen. Crowder. He says there are two clerks who have recently graduated from night school, and they are performing the duties of law clerks. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that is hardly an adequate equipment for this great office, which has to deal with important and far-reaching legal questions involving millions of dollars of the people's money. And the best evidence of that, if any further evidence be necessary, is the fact that the Judge Advocate General himself, in his statement, asks for this specific increase which I have undertaken to provide for in these amendments.

And, further, it has been stated here a number of times by the chairman of the subcommittee that reductions have been made only as they have been recommended by the heads of departments. I may say in passing that I think the heads of departments and the committee have rendered an important and patriotic service in seeking to reduce expenditures, but I call the attention of the committee to this fact, that in this particular case the Secretary of War recommends this specific increase I am now suggesting. I will not take time to read all of his statement. With the permission of the committee I shall insert some of it in the RECORD, however. Gen. Crowder says:

You will notice I have asked for an increase, and it is for the purpose of directing your attention to the necessities of the bureau in that regard that I would like to speak for a moment.

It will be noticed, in looking over the clerical force of the department, that, notwithstanding it is a law office, it has not an appropriation for a single law clerk, and when you take into consideration the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the War Office, it appears almost impossible to carry on the work without some provision being made in this regard. The highest salary in my department is $1,800, and I have two at $1,600, two at $1,400, and six at $1,200.

The CHAIRMAN. Are any of these clerks lawyers?

Gen. CROWDER. Yes, sir. Some of them have attended night law schools, and I think two of them have succeeded in getting diplomas, but they were not brought into the service as law clerks. My chief clerk is a lawyer of ability, and I have in the $1,800 position temporarily a man who is rendering very excellent service, but whom I can not retain at his present salary.

* * * * * * *

In this estimate I have asked for two additional clerks, one at $2,000 and one at $1,800, of the law-clerk class. I took the initiative at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, who examined into the affairs of the office, and made the suggestion based upon the work that his desk was sending to my office. Since then he has looked into the matter more thoroughly, and he authorized me to say this morning that he does not think the increase asked for here is at all sufficient. I prepared a memorandum showing the work coming into the office for consideration in greater detail than I have stated, and he has approved this memorandum and authorized me to submit it to the committee as a part of my statement to you this morning. I would like to have authority from the committee to do that.

The increase asked for is primarily necessary to meet the demands for legal services in respect of the civil jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and more particularly with reference to the duties with which he is charged in respect of navigable waters and under annual river and harbor acts. Extensive legal hearings are held before the Secretary of War, at which parties in interest are represented by attorneys, and it is not infrequent that lengthy printed briefs are filed for the consideration of the Secretary of War, raising issues of law and fact upon which he must reach a conclusion and base his administrative action. Not infrequently river and harbor appropriations are conditioned upon the cooperation of communities which involves their participation in the work, and the Secretary of War is directed not to release Federal appropriations until local communities have complied with conditions. Sometimes bond issues are required by local communities, and rights of way are to be acquired, necessitating condemnation proceedings, or bonds are to be given for the performance of the obligations of the community. The legal question as to whether or not there has been compliance upon the part of local communities is always submitted to this office for opinion.

This is only one branch of the civil work coming to this office, but furnishes perhaps more technical questions to resolve than any other. In the disbursement, however, of Army appropriations the supply departments make many contracts, and the contracts, bonds given for their performance, and all questions arising in the execution of contracts are considered and passed upon by the Judge Advocate General.

In other words, here is a recommendation——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIS. This recommendation is, I think, in the long run in the direction of real economy. I believe it will give better public service. I believe it will make it possible better to deal with the work which properly comes within the jurisdiction of the office of the Judge Advocate General. And I invite attention again to the peculiar fact that this office, which is the legal end of the War Department so far as the appropriation is concerned, has no provision whatever for law clerks. If this amendment is adopted it will provide two.

I submit another observation. Now, you take the similar office in the Navy Department that has substantially the same kind of work to perform—not so much, I may say in passing—and I find on examination that in that similar office in the Navy Department there are 19 employees, the total salary of whom aggregates $29,310, or an average salary of $1,543, whereas in this department, that has this tremendously important business to attend to, and which is now behind in its work and is hampered and cramped because of the lack of sufficient law clerks in this division—the office of Judge Advocate General of the War Department—there are only 16 employees as compared with 19 in the similar office in the Navy Department. And whereas the total salary of those employees in the Navy Department is $29,310, here in the office of the Judge Advocate General it is but $20,800, an average salary of only $1,300 as compared with $1,543 in the similar division of the Navy Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Where did the gentleman get his information as to the clerks in the corresponding office in the Navy Department?

Mr. WILLIS. From the hearings. If the gentleman will take the number of clerks in the office of the Solicitor General of the Navy and in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy Department, he will see that those two offices—the office of the Judge Advocate General and the office of the Solicitor General of the Navy Department—perform the same duties in the Navy Department that are performed in the War Department by the office of the Judge Advocate General of that department, yet in the Navy Department the number of employees is 19, drawing an aggregate salary of $29,310, an average to each employee of $1,543 per annum, while in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the War Department the total salaries aggregate $20,800, or an average of $1,300 per annum for each of the 16 employees. The adoption of this amendment will save the people's money by giving them more efficient service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a pro forma motion to strike out the last word.

I was unavoidably absent when the provision in regard to the War Department force was reached. This bill provides for a flat 10 per cent reduction in the force in the War Department. I am aware that the Chief of Staff recommended a 25 per cent reduction in that force and that the committee did not go further in its investigation except to examine or give hearings to the heads of the various bureaus—The Adjutant General's office, the Commissary Department, and the Quartermaster's Department, and so on. I am informed, after rather careful inquiry, that they all did not agree with the Chief of Staff in his statement, but each one insisted that the business of the Government could not be transacted properly with any reduction of force, and in some instances they insisted on an increased force. As I understand, it was just a flat statement on the one hand and a protest on the other by the head of every bureau. It seems to me that the committee did not go into detail at all. But by this provision on the 1st of July next 10 per cent of the force of that great department is to march out if the provision should be enacted into law. My own judgment is that the committee should have ascertained bureau by bureau in what manner the 10 per cent should be made up, whether at the head or the bottom or between. I have no objection in the War Department or any other department to any diminution of force that will not embarrass the public service. Just why the majority of the committee did not provide for the decrease of the force one-quarter, as recommended by the Chief of Staff, instead of one-tenth, I do not know. I will be glad to pause for information upon that point. If his recommendation was good enough to provide a 10 per cent reduction, was it not good enough for a 25 per cent reduction?

Mr. GARNER. They wanted to give it in broken doses, so the effect would not be so hard on the patients.

Mr. CANNON. In broken doses? I am now talking seriously about the public service. I say again, it may be that a 10 per cent reduction is apt, but, for anything that appears to this committee, if it is apt, a 25 per cent reduction is apt. Nobody disputes that proposition.

That is about all I desire to say. I do not aim in my remarks to criticize from an unfriendly standpoint the Chief of Staff. I have the honor of an acquaintance with him, and he is a very able man.

Just whether he knows more about this service than the heads of the various bureaus who insist that no decrease in the force should be had, but rather an increase on account of the necessities of the public service, I do not know. In this condition of contradiction I suppose I am a little in the position of the colored man who, when there was a dispute about religious matters and he was "jacked up" and requested to explain what he thought about it, said, "I think this darkey will take to the woods." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this to the committee: In three years the Treasury Department has reduced the clerical force of the department by about 16 per cent, reducing the number of clerks from 3,800 to 3,396. That was done on the initiation of the department, and yet all the time the heads of the respective bureaus and divisions in the department were insisting that the force could not be reduced, but that, on the contrary, in many instances, it should be increased.

The Chief of Staff of the Army went before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and made quite an extensive statement as to the clerical force needed in the War Department and the reduction that could be made therein, and it came to the attention of the members of the committee in charge of the legislative bill. They sent for the Chief of Staff. They asked him if he stood on what he said before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and he said that he did.

The Committee on Appropriations did not then attempt to review the situation in the War Department in the same way as it did with respect to the Treasury Department. An official who states he is the official advisor, both as to departmental and military affairs, to the Secretary of War insisted that the clerical force in the War Department was too large. The heads of the various bureaus insisted either that they had only the force that they needed or else that they had an inadequate force. The committee did not attempt to single out the places to be abolished, but instead inserted a provision to the effect that the department itself should reorganize and eliminate the places that are not necessary.

It is hardly fair to criticize this side of the House for accepting the recommendation of the Chief of Staff. When the Army appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole this side of the House was criticized because it attempted to propose legislation to which the Chief of Staff was opposed, and which, under the advice of the Secretary of War, he said was ill advised. This time the committee, thinking perhaps it might be possible to satisfy those who were criticizing us when the Army bill was under consideration, accepted the opinion of the Chief of Staff as to what would be best to do. Nobody on this side of the House, I will say to the gentleman, has any desire to cripple or impair the efficiency of the governmental service. I do not care how much money is required; I am willing to vote all the money that is necessary to enable this Government to be conducted properly.

My opinion, based on the investigations which I have been a party to, is that there are in many instances duplications of service, unnecessary employees—grown up perhaps without responsibility to be fixed upon any particular branch of the Government; and I think that this opportunity, given to the department to eliminate those employees that are not necessary and to organize its force so that its business may be efficiently conducted, will not harm the service, but will do much good.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. All through the report which accompanies the bill are statements here and there about a clerk cut off, or a watchman cut off, and a charwoman cut off. Were all of these reductions made by the committee respecting the various bureaus of the Government upon the recommendations of the heads of the respective departments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. It is rather exceptional to find any department of the Government, outside of the Treasury Department, recommending any reductions in its force. During the past three years the Treasury Department has done excellent work in this direction, as we frankly concede. But outside of that department it is rare to find any department recommending reductions in force. I might say, in addition, that the Post Office Department has in some places at this time made recommendations to reduce the force and effect economies. The reductions made here are reductions made by the committee after investigations by which it was convinced that these services could be dispensed with because they are unnecessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Were these reductions, then, made against the protests of the heads of the respective departments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, these places were not provided for any more than additional places were not provided for which the department asked, and the committee did not assume that simply because the places exist that that is conclusive evidence that they are necessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. But where there was a conflict between the heads of departments who were granted hearings by the various subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations, and where the heads of departments stated that these positions were necessary for the proper and efficient management and conduct of the respective departments, did the committee, without any indications of that kind, take its own judgment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There never was any conflict. The department representatives appeared before the committee and presented such information as they possessed as to the necessity for the places, and then the committee determined whether the places were necessary. If the committee determined that they are not necessary, it recommended accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire recognition to make a brief statement. I want to ask the gentleman from New York how many decreases have been made in the Treasury Department employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five hundred and six in three years.

Mr. CANNON. In three years. Where?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the departmental service.

Mr. CANNON. I know; let us particularize about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In various bureaus.

Mr. CANNON. I know; but let us particularize about it. Does the gentleman mean in every bureau?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the details before me at present.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can ascertain if he will only ask the gentleman sitting by him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think either myself or the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Illinois refers carries the details of these reductions in his head. I shall be glad before this bill is completed to place in the RECORD a statement showing the reductions effected in the last three years in the Treasusy Department.

Mr. CANNON. I will say this, if the gentleman does not give me an answer——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not answer because I have not the information ready.

Mr. CANNON. I think the clerk to the gentleman's committee can get it in a few minutes. The gentleman says that aid is not given by the heads of bureaus in effecting reductions, and so forth. The largest reduction of force, according to my recollection, that was made in the Treasury Department grew out of the introduction of machinery in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and by an invention that numbered the notes as they were printed and put the seals on the notes. That, I think, dispensed with a number of people aggregating, perhaps, 100, who were employed in the Treasury Department, the same work being done now in another branch of the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

I think also there was some decrease in consequence of certain reforms in the method of auditing in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, which used to be called the office of the Sixth Auditor.

I am very glad those reforms have been brought about, but they were made upon the suggestion of those who were at the head, as I recollect, of the various bureaus, and by the use of machinery and by intelligent printing and sealing. It was by those means that those retrenchments were made.

Now, we have no such showing in the War Department. I am not here by any manner of means to criticize, save alone that I do not quite indorse the plea in set-off that the gentleman from New York has made, because that side of the House went against the advice of the Chief of Staff on the Army appropriation bill, and now the gentleman seeks to bring in a set-off by acting according to the advice of the Chief of Staff in this bill. [Applause.] I do not exactly know——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be more consistent if we were going to follow the advice of the Chief of Staff to follow it in matters military rather than in this matter, which is purely a civil administrative matter? In the case of the Army bill, where the Chief of Staff made recommendations in regard to military matters in which he is supposed to be an expert, the House did not follow his advice. Now in a matter in which he is not supposed to be more of an expert than any other bureau head we are following his advice.

Mr. CANNON. It is not for me to comment on that statement.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT (continuing). That the Secretary of War is not simply the adviser of Congress in reference to the detailed matters of keeping up the Army, but also the discharge of his official duties connected with the Department of War.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know what recommendation the Secretary of War may have made; whether he coincides with the recommendation of the Chief of Staff or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have now the "statement of the new offices created," the document familiar to Members of the House.

Mr. CANNON. And also the decreases?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and it shows that last year in the Treasury Department there were 75 places created with salaries totaling $83,807 and 316 places omitted with salaries aggregating $283,259. The net decrease is 241 places and about $200,000 in salaries.

Mr. CANNON. Was not the bulk of that decrease due to the fact that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, by the use of additional machinery in the sealing of the notes and securities, was able to do the work with less labor by half than had theretofore been required, and they were enabled to do away with a number of low-priced employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that there were two divisions affected by that change. One was the Division of Loans and Currency and the other was the office of the Treasurer of the United States. In the office of the Treasurer of the United States there were 13 places created and 60 dropped, and in the Loans Division there were 64 places abolished and 1 created.

Mr. CANNON. Almost 140 in the aggregate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman give us the information from the Sixth Auditor's office on account of the substitution of accounting machines.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not referring to that.

Mr. CANNON. I will see that the table is made and subsequently placed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will be glad to place the table in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to put the statement in the RECORD for three years past.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit as a part of my remarks, to be printed in the RECORD, extracts from the annual statements of "new offices created and offices omitted" for the two regular sessions of the last Congress, covering the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, showing in detail and by offices and bureaus the reductions made in the force of the Treasury Department, and also an extract from the report on this bill showing the further reductions proposed by this bill:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have two or three other matters to attend to——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois does not object, we want the Clerk to read down to the Navy Department. I do not think there will be a word of debate before that.

Mr. CANNON. Why not consider it read by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. There are three propositions that will take a little time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Of course, if the gentleman wants to rise—Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24023, and had directed him to report it had come to no resolution thereon.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS FROM FLOODS.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to call up the following joint resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up the following joint resolution——

Mr. BARTLETT. And I would ask that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman asks that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let us have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 312) making appropriations for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys.

Resolved, etc., That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, namely:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Under the Quartermaster General: For providing tents and other necessary supplies and services and for reimbursement of the several appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, from which temporary relief has already been or may be afforded, $277,179.65.

Under the Commissary General: For rations issued and to be issued by the Commissary Department and for reimbursement of appropriations for subsistence of the Army from which temporary relief has already been or may be afforded, $420,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to make any remarks.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and I at the same time introduced the first two bills asking for $250,000 each for the relief of distress and destitution among the people resulting from the recent unprecedented floods. The districts represented by us, upon opposite sides of the Mississippi River and immediately below the mouth of the Ohio, were by reason of their location the first to suffer. The stage of the water at the mouth of the Ohio and in the adjacent territory was about 2 feet higher than ever before, and our constituents were the first to learn that the levees upon which the Government and the people had expended hundreds of thousands of dollars, and that had withstood the menace of all former floods of recent years, were now insufficient and furnished no security. The first to meet the wrath of any unexpected pestilence or calamity naturally encounter more dangers and suffer more privations and distress than those who are afterwards forewarned and, to some extent, prepared for their coming and their ravages. So, too, our constituents were the first to face the dangers of this flood and doubtless sustained greater losses than any other like territory in the Mississippi Valley. The actual property loss in my district alone will far exceed a million dollars.

There has been nothing during my brief service in this House of which I was expected to take official cognizance that has so touched my feelings and enlisted my sympathies as the distressing messages and appeals for assitance from county and city officials, and other citizens of my district, all of whom I know to be honorable and reliable and many of them my near neighbors and lifetime friends.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not ask to consume the time of the House to advocate the passage of this bill, as I believe that to be unnecessary. I hope and believe there will not be a vote cast against it. But I speak more to commend President Taft for his willingness, his earnestness, and his promptness in responding to the appeals and in relieving the distress of suffering humanity.

When innumerable telegrams were pouring in upon me, asking for assistance and advising me that some were lost, some were starving, some were driven by the raging waters to housetops, and that thousands had fled from their homes to places of safety, to me it seemed to be an extreme emergency. I conferred with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], to the hills of whose district many of my constituents had fled, and we introduced our bills asking for an appropriation for relief. We both appeared before the Appropriation Committee and made arguments in support of our bills, and were given a respectful hearing by that committee; but this method seemed too slow for the distressing necessities of the hour. We went to see the President and showed to him some of the messages received and made our statements, and in his own words he said, "Boys, I will try to help you out." I shall never forget his assuring words, nor cease to thank him for giving expression to them. He at once sent for the Quartermaster General, and in our presence said to him, "General, get busy. Send the necessary men into the flooded districts; send tents, blankets, and provisions necessary to relieve the suffering people, and I will trust Congress to protect me in the expenses necessarily incurred."

Mr. Speaker, I am in a sense a partisan, but I am glad that I have never been so blinded by partisanship that I could not see the virtues or the noble qualities of one of a different political faith, and am glad here and now not only to express my thanks and the thanks of my constituents, but am glad to make public acknowledgment of his noble qualities of heart that I believe led him to take such prompt action and to render such timely and efficient service in extending relief to the suffering and distressed.

During those days of trouble and suffering among my constituents I also conferred with the officers of the American Red Cross Society in this city, Miss Mabel T. Boardman and Mr. Charles L. Magee, and through them and other officers of that most worthy society very much was done in cooperating with the Government officials and the local relief committees for the flood sufferers in the district that I represent, and I now, for my constituents, desire to publicly express their grateful thanks to them for their benefactions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 524.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and is hereby, authorized to inquire into and concerning the official conduct of Hon. Robert W. Archbald, formerly district judge of the United States Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania and now a judge of the Commerce Court, touching his conduct in regard to the matters and things mentioned in House resolution 511; and especially whether said judge has been guilty of an impeachable offense, and to report to the House the conclusions of the committee in respect thereto, with appropriate recommendation; and

Resolved further, That the Committee on the Judiciary shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to subpœna witnesses and to administer oaths to said witnesses; and for the purpose of making this investigation said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of this House; and the Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 23774) providing an appropriation to check the inroads of the Missouri River in Dakota County, Nebr., when the Speaker signed the same.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 5624) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which bill is now on the Speaker's table, and I move that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to take from the Speaker's table the pension bill, S. 5624, and agree to the conference asked.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio, and Mr. FULLER.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Sunday, May 5, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 5, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, life of our life, soul of our soul, spirit of our spirit, our God and our Father, we thank Thee for the blessed assurance that as the child born in the manger was an incarnation, so is every child born into the world an incarnation. And just so surely as the Jesus rose from the dead, so surely is death the resurrection for every man.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

"For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

"Now, He that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the spirit."

Blessed truth, which bridges the gulf and makes the continuity of life a living reality.

Cold in the dust the perished heart may lie,
But that which warmed it once can never die.

We thank Thee for the splendid personality of the Member in whose memory we assemble. Pronounced in his convictions, pure in his motives, an indefatigable worker, he served his State and Nation with fidelity and singleness of purpose. He may not return to us, but we shall surely go to him. Be this the comfort of those who knew and loved him.

Be graciously near to the bereaved wife and grandchildren, and help them to look forward with imperishable hope.

I walk with bare, hushed feet the ground
Men tread with boldness shod;
I dare not fix with mete and bound
The love and power of God.

In the spirit of Christ, the Lord. Amen.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, when, on request of Mr. BROWNING and by unanimous consent, the further reading of the Journal was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, several Members of the House who have signified their intention of speaking to-day have unexpectedly been called from the city. I ask unanimous consent that any Member who desires may print in the RECORD remarks on the life, character, and services of the late Representative LOUDENSLAGER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Members of the House may print remarks in the RECORD on the late Representative LOUDENSLAGER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 525.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, late a Member of the House from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, again we are called together to pay tribute to the life and service of a dead Member. These frequent occurrences impress us anew each time with the fact of man's mortality. They awaken and revivify, also, the recollection of those hundred others whom we admired, with whom we were in close friendship, and some of whom we loved. The memorial service comes as an afterglow to a life's sunset and is often beautiful in its reflections.

To-day we commemorate the life and work of a citizen of my own State of New Jersey. For her interests his zeal never flagged. He felt, too, a deep regard for the permanent welfare of his country and, actuated by patriotic motives, followed the light as it was given to him to see the light.

In the Fifty-third Congress, which first assembled in special session in August, 1893, there were few Republicans. Most of them had faced a storm and all had survived a tidal wave.

Among those taking their seats, for the first time, in that session was HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, of New Jersey. He was then 41 years of age. Along some lines he had studied hard and acquired much. Though he was not highly educated according to the common standard, his mind was already disciplined. His experiences had been varied and were a valuable part of his equipment. The 20 years of his majority had been active, even strenuous, years. He had not shunned the tumult. The circumstances of his election made his commission to a seat in this House a certificate of inborn power.

Every wide environment produces its type, every period its men and the institutions of a country their representatives. And HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, national counsellor, retaining influence and interest in his State and local affairs, was a product of American environment, institutions, and opportunity. Our life and institutions, measured by the world's standard, have been more than successful. Our country has, beyond precedent, been fruitful in successful men, in wide variety, and in all lines of endeavor. The field of effort here has been less restricted; the promise has been greater and the trammels have been less than elsewhere at any known time. The right of initiative has been without class restraint. Birth has neither given the rank nor fixed the station. Every path leading to a goal has been free to every foot. Strength to continue and courage to receive the occasional thorn and still press on have been the only requirements. Our country has been the field and our flag the emblem of individual opportunity. Our great men have risen by native power.

A depressed beginning has not been a bar to distinction. A clouded life's morning has not hindered the gilding of the noon. Birth and inheritance have not been a guarantee nor have poverty and humility been a bar to a future for the American child. The shadows cast by most of the monuments to our great men are typical of the clouded beginning of the lives that the shafts commemorate.

Out of the shade and into the field of activity LOUDENSLAGER stepped in youth. He was charged with energy, inspired by hope, and steadied by determination. He was emboldened by a yet shadowy appreciation of his own powers. He was armed by nature to battle with the adverse influences that assail the striving young man, and he was victor in his earlier struggles for recognition, standing, and place, until one day the opposing forces parted and he stepped into this Hall to begin that long and influential service destined to end only in that tragedy which at last overtakes and destroys every life. His entrance into the national council, as already suggested, was not a fortuitious event. It was a recognition. It came with the succession of events in a career that had taken on momentum. His was a district distinguished for its learned and able men, where ambition was not wanting, where success meant triumph over forces very worthy and very formidable.

That his service here was marked by energy and industry goes without statement; that he was gifted with keen insight and a penetrating foresight in public matters was and is recognized; that he was a counselor of more than ordinary sagacity is known to all who knew him well; that the interests of his district were thought out, watched, and contended for with energy and success members of the committees of the House having them in charge well remember.

LOUDENSLAGER'S reputation became national; his influence great; his ability admired. He had attained recognition, rank, and influence in the first legislative body in the world. He began without the equipment that opportunity of learning gives, having been educated chiefly in the school of affairs, but he had fought the fight and won. He illustrated in his career the opportunity of American manhood.

A notable characteristic of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was faith in himself, and he inspired this faith in others. So it came about that when he led in a movement his followers believed his efforts would bring success, if that were possible, and they supported him with enthusiasm. If, as sometimes happens to all, success was not achieved, they accepted failure as inevitable. Their confidence in him remained unshaken.

During Mr. LOUDENSLAGER'S last years dark shadows fell thick across the bright pathway of his life. One after the other the children, to whom he had been devoted, for whose welfare he felt a worthy father's solicitude, and whose promise had been an inspiration to him, were called from him and earth. The disease that death took up as an arm with which to conquer him added torture to his grief. His powers wasted until at length on the 12th of August, 1911, the heart that never quailed in the combat was stilled and the body lost its courageous soul.

Further upon the tender relations of his domestic life I shall not advance. I would not touch the wound that the parting leaves. If sweet memories, the balm of sympathy, devoted friendship, the mending hand of time, and the peace that is of heaven may heal or soothe the broken heart, let the effect of these beneficent influences be undisturbed. Our expression of grief might fall as grating discords upon those afflicted by bereavement more deeply than we can feel or know.

Our departed friend may have left no song to float for generations in our national atmosphere. He may have left no burning oration that will inspire the ambitious youth of coming generations. His effigy may or may not rise on the national landscape, but he has left the lasting marks of a successful congressional career, which has been felt in the Nation and in his State. His district has been advanced by his labors.

His efforts and the crown of success that followed them remain an inspiring example to American youth, who may need encouragement to break over the bounds of their surroundings and create their own opportunities for success.

LOUDENSLAGER'S name is in the splendid and imposing picture of our new Navy. And if, which may God forbid, it shall come to pass that out of the waywardness and greed of nations our proper defense shall require that we make reply to "the last argument of the powers," he will be heard in the grim oratory of the American Navy when in action it speaks to the world for the perpetuity and dignity of our own institutions and the honor of our flag.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was very well acquainted with the late Representative LOUDENSLAGER. In fact, I believe during the whole of his service we were colleagues in the House. He was a good legislator, a good citizen, and a good friend. There are many traits or factors that unite to make a good legislator, and perhps no one individual has all the necessary factors to make him, even approximately, a perfect legislator; in fact, perfection is in Deity alone.

Some men are good legislators, some men have magnetic force, some men, without knowing why or how, are great leaders. Oratory does not necessarily mean efficiency, and in many instances the individual who by nature is equipped for oratory relies upon the tension of the vocal chords that set the air to vibrating, and when the vibrations cease to travel, and the emotion aroused for the moment has subsided, the permanent effect of the oratory is not to be found.

I do not mean by this to discourage the orator, because if he has that gift, and knowledge, character, devotion to a cause, and other qualities of leadership he is fully equipped to affect his brethren, whether in church or state, or, broader than that, in the affairs of the world.

But, as a rule, my observation has been that in matters of legislation, in the courts, in business life, in fact, almost everywhere, the men who are efficient and industrious are those, as is the common expression out West, and perhaps as well in the East, who "have their feet in the soil." By that is meant those who have trod the paths that every individual must tread who relies upon his own industry and ability for bread—the class of people, especially of the United States and largely in the world, who make the civilization.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was not an orator, but he was a man of affairs. He had character, and he was loyal. He understood that a twofold cord is strong, that a threefold cord is stronger, and that a fourfold cord is not easily broken. He never believed for a moment that one could issue a mandate and the village, or the city, or the township, or the county, or the State, or the whole country would hasten to obey the command. He cooperated with his fellows and was a strong factor in legislation and in the affairs of life, because he realized that without cooperation of all men who have substantially similar views no progress can be made.

Such men as HARRY LOUDENSLAGER can ill be spared from public life, and it is especially unfortunate when in full vigor they are called to the great beyond. Perhaps I am not an impartial witness, because during my service in the House I was in close touch with Mr. LOUDENSLAGER in the House and in political campaigns, but his colleagues, those who opposed him politically as well as those with whom he cooperated, admired and respected him.

I do not know that I can with profit say more than I have said. If the relatives, friends, and associates of a man can say that he did the best he could, that he did not let the singletree to which he was harnessed drop behind while the force that controlled the other singletree forged ahead, perhaps that is as high praise as can be given to any of us in life or after we have crossed over. I am not fond of funerals. I am not fond of a memorial session like unto this. There was much in the saying of the Master, "Let the dead bury their dead." We are compelled practically to acknowledge the wisdom of that saying, otherwise, with two or three generations coming and going in each century, the world would be one vast world of mourning. I say I am not fond of funerals.

I am not afraid of them as the years come and go. I was at one time when I was a younger man, but I play the philosopher now. If the man with the scythe should come, I would dodge through the door if possible. I would turn and fight him if I were able, but if he prevailed I should lift my hat and say, "I have had my swing." I realize that one of these days there will be a funeral to which I have to go, and I shall be quite content if when I go my associates can feel as kindly toward me as the associates of HARRY LOUDENSLAGER feel toward his memory.

I do not speculate as to the future. I do not know any more of the future than I know of the past. So far as the future is concerned, Lowell voiced, I think, the faith and the hope of most men in a brief sentence or two when he said:

> Every mortal man of us holds stock in the only public debt that is absolutely sure of payment, and that is the debt of the Maker of this Universe to the universe he has made. I have no notion of selling out my shares in a panic.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, to-day we come to pay a just tribute of respect to the memory and the life services of our late colleague, HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, once a distinguished Member of this House. Upon a memorial occasion like this it occurs to me that everyone who has a just appreciation and a proper respect for the memory of one whose character he rightly understood and whose merits he well knew would avoid foolish praise and fulsome flattery and speak the words of truth as they relate to the character of the man to whom we pay the tribute. HENRY LOUDENSLAGER, as we all familiarly called him, was every whit of him a man. When I say a man I do not simply mean flesh and blood, bone and sinew, but I mean he possessed those elements of manhood, those attributes of character, those essentials of integrity, of virtue, and of high-mindedness that constitute and make up those resultants which in a general way we term character, which are in truth the distinguishing marks that make the man and not the animal.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a man of fine intellect. He had the capacity to understand and grasp intelligently the questions that presented themselves to him in the faithful discharge of his duty as a Member of the Congress. He did not grope in darkness; he did not spend his life in misunderstandings; he was not satisfied to live on a low plane of ignorance and a base conception of those great principles, these splendid truths, which exhibited themselves in the national life and national character of the American people during the long years in which he served as a distinguished Member of this House. Endowed, as I say, by nature with a fine mind, he was capable of rising to a high plane of intellectual conception and to take a broad and comprehensive grasp of the questions that affected the history of the country which he was helping to make and to the success of which he was contributing by his labors. Not only was he a man of fine intellect, but he was a man with a good heart. Base purposes, ignominious loves, did not fill his heart. His impulses were good; his aspirations were inspired by a noble instinct. He possessed a heart in which the red blood of human kindness flowed, that manifested itself in the contact and touch of his life with the touch of the lives of his fellow beings, a heart that was generous, a heart that was kind, a heart that beat in generous sympathy with his fellows and his friends. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a man of high ideals. Mr. Speaker, after all, the ideals of life are much of life.

Our ideals are the standards by which we gauge our character. Our ideals are the measures that show the length and the breadth, the height and the depth, of our thoughts and our purposes and our impulses and our conduct. As we think we act. The thoughts that come out of the heart and intellect move us to action. These acts beget our characters, and our characters are such that they either receive the commendations and plaudits of our fellows or their condemnation.

We who knew him can say that the life and character of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, late our colleague and associate in our work here, were such as to command and generously to receive our commendation and our praise. Not only was he a man of a good heart; he was a man of generous purposes. He did not have malice and vindictiveness and hatred. A smile was upon his face, a kind word was upon his lips, a warm clasp was in his handshake. He was a man who had friends because he himself was a friend, generous, kindly, warm-hearted in his association and in his disposition.

For six years I served with him as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I think during that six years of intimate association I had an opportunity to know something of the make-up of the man. In addition to that, for six years we lived in the same hotel, and were associated day and night in our official relations and in our social intercourse. I felt as I stood by his open grave that not only could I pay sincerely a tribute to his memory, but I felt that I had personally lost a friend.

Mr. Speaker, we have just passed through the winter. The trees had given up their foliage. They looked bare and dead. There were no signs of life to be seen in vegetation. The birds ceased to sing and there seemed to be a hush and a silence in nature. The springtime came, the life returned with the beauty of the foliage and the blooming of the flowers and the music of the song birds; and so it is, Mr. Speaker, the thought comes to us of death and life. Death is the chill of winter. The eye ceases to sparkle, the tongue is silent, the ear is leaden, the body is motionless, the music is hushed. The grave and the resurrection. Only one day separated Calvary and Easter, death and life. The Master said:

> Except a grain of wheat perish it can not grow.

I hold in my hand a little, rugged, unsightly object, which they say is a seed. As long as I hold it there such it remains. We place it in the soil; it breaks down its tissue; it decays; but out of its death there comes the plant that grows into beauty of foliage, beauty of flower, and richness of fruitage. Here, sir, we are circumscribed and hampered and bound by the limitations of the flesh. Methinks when the flesh breaks down out of it will come the fullness of life that will bear the beauty of its foliage and the fullness of its fruitage. Only a broken and an emptied vessel, broken that He might heal me, emptied that He might fill me—fill me with the fullness, the richness of that life, with all of its opportunities unbounded and untrammeled, as full as the limitations of eternity, as great as the powers of Omnipotence.

Mr. Speaker, we can only take the word of the poet who said:

> I know not where His islands lift
> Their fronded palms in air;
> I only know I can not drift
> Beyond His love and care.

And that is the thought we have of our friends who command our respect, our reverence, and our love here—that over there is the fullness of that life which we crave when we say, "'Tis life, not death, I crave; a richer, fuller, grander, nobler, better life I would have."

For his family I am sure that I reflect the feelings of everyone who knew him when I say that to Him who numbers the hairs of our head, who permitteth not a sparrow to fall to the ground unnoticed, who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb—to His love, to His care, to His mercy we commend them.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, desire to pay a brief tribute to the memory of our late colleague, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, with whom I was associated in my congressional service.

As has been stated, he became a Member here in the Fifty-third Congress and served until this, the second session of the present Congress. He had been elected to ten successive Congresses, and had served more than 18 years.

Very few Members have enjoyed such a long service as this. In looking over the Congressional Directory I find less than ten of the present House who had served longer than he at the time of his death. His long service demonstrated the confidence which the people of his district reposed in him.

And then, too, his service here was during one of the most important periods in the history of this country. With the exception of the earlier period of the formation of our Government and the great Civil War period there has been more important legislation passed in the last 20 years than ever before. Great issues and great national problems have been considered, debated, and solved. Let me briefly enumerate: Questions of finance; the establishment of the gold standard; four revisions of the tariff; the annexation of Hawaii; the War with Spain and the problems growing out of it; the expansion of territory; the acquisition of Porto Rico and the Philippines, and the government thereof; the enlargement of the Army; the building up of the Navy; the reorganization and improvement of our Diplomatic and Consular Service; the creation of the new Department of Commerce and Labor; the regulation of railroad rates; the extension of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over sleeping cars, express companies, pipe lines, telegraph and telephone companies; the establishment of a special Commerce Court; pure-food act; meat-inspection legislation; the establishment of postal savings banks; excise tax on corporations; conservation of public lands; preservation of national forests; national irrigation projects; extensive river and harbor improvements, greater than ever before; four great States added to the Union; and many other things that I have not time to mention. Truly, he lived in a great period in the history of our country, and when he reviewed his life's work as he lay waiting for the final call, he must have contemplated with some satisfaction that he had played a part, and a strong part, in the doing of things during this golden period of our national growth, influence, and power.

A Member's service here might be divided into three parts: First, attention to his correspondence and the numerous requests made of him, most of them outside of his strictly congressional duties. No one paid more attention to these than Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He told me once that he always wrote the last letter to his correspondent, even when no reply was expected. He kept in the closest touch with his constituents, and hence his political strength at home. Secondly, his service on the floor. He was always punctual at roll calls. While he did not often take part in debate, yet when he spoke he had something to say and to the point, and spoke with splendid effect. Thirdly, the work in the committees. We all realize how important this has become, and more so with the increased membership of this House. The time for consideration of questions in the House is so short, if it were equally divided, it would not amount to much more than 30 seconds daily for each Member. Each committee is practically a little house in itself. Fully nine-tenths of all the bills reported pass without material amendment. The analytical study of a measure in the committee is regarded as entitled to more weight than the largely superficial consideration of it on the floor amid the noise and confusion of this large body.

In the work of the committee Mr. LOUDENSLAGER largely excelled. His judgment was exceptional. He viewed matters from a great variety of standpoints. For many years he was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and took a great deal of satisfaction in that work, because his heart was in it. He was responsible in a large degree for the building up of the American Navy. When he first became a member of the Naval Committee, we had a very small Navy—probably not over 300,000 tons. He took delight in building it up to its present tonnage of about 1,300,000 tons and contributed of his thought and labor to that end. At least 75 per cent was authorized during his membership on the committee.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a very agreeable gentleman in every way. He was always cheerful, genial, and companionable, and made many friends who to-day mourn him.

He was a strong partisan and fought valiantly for his party. He had rare political foresight, and his judgment was of great service to his party in political campaigns.

In his death his constituency lost an able Representative, this House a popular Member, his party a tireless worker, the Navy a warm friend, and the country a patriotic citizen and excellent public servant.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am here to pay my tribute to the memory of our deceased colleague, whom I loved, respected, and admired, and who was my good friend.

It happened that when I came to Washington to enter upon my duties in the beginning of my service, which was the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, that almost, if not the first, Member I met was the Hon. HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER. It was going to Paterson, N. J., to attend the funeral of Vice President Hobart that I met him. He had then been a Member of the House for some years, but he introduced himself, greeting me so cordially and during that day showed me so much attention that he made me feel as if I belonged in the senior instead of the freshman class. All of us remember our first service in the House, and we each have a tender spot in our heart for some old Member who treated us with kindness and showed us some attention and consideration during our initiation. I never forgot Mr. LOUDENSLAGER'S kindness toward me on the occasion referred to, and from that time on I was his devoted friend. This trait in his character undoubtedly had much to do in making him so popular and drawing to him so many friends, and naturally the longer he remained here the more friends he had, as he possessed the faculty of retaining the friendships he formed. In my early experience I often consulted and went to him for information and advice, and it was particularly refreshing to consult him when discouraged and troubled because of my inability to accomplish something I had hoped I might obtain speedily. He was always the same—approachable, patient, and considerate—and would inconvenience himself and spend his time willingly to ascertain your trouble and tell you what to do and how to do it, and if he saw you were disheartened and discouraged he would greet you so pleasantly, offering you a few words of cheer, that you would leave his presence inspired with renewed hope and feeling so much better by reason of his words of encouragement and advice that what seemed difficult or hopeless before appeared easy.

His willingness to do for others was taken advantage of, as is usually the case with one of his disposition, and much responsibility was placed on his shoulders in addition to his official and personal duties, and undoubtedly these responsibilities contributed in a large measure to his early demise. He gave many years of faithful work in serving his party, being an active member, and later secretary of the congressional committee, and no one questions but what the success of his party in many of the campaigns was due in a large degree to his wisdom, his energy, his determined activity, and his strong personality. He seemed to know no limit to his endurance, and therefore overtaxed his strength. He was a partisan in politics, but always fair toward his political opponents, and never permitted political considerations to influence him in doing what he believed to be right upon matters of legislation. The merit of the proposition was his guide in determining any measure upon which he had to pass, and he apparently knew no friend or enemy in the discharge of his legislative duty.

The people of the first district of New Jersey learned to love and admire him as a friend and a true man early in his career, and, appreciating his sterling qualities and his usefulness, they chose him as their Representative in this body in 10 consecutive elections. This indeed was a great tribute to his worth, and it is a mark of distinction that few receive who obtain membership here. It may be of interest to know that of the present membership of this House only 9 Members have been elected 10 or more consecutive terms, and I think that number is above the average.

No district ever had a more faithful Representative, and because he was faithful and possessed of a strong personality and great ability he was continued. It is no easy matter now for one holding public office, especially membership here, to maintain the confidence of a constituency for any considerable time. There is more or less disposition to detract, condemn, and criticize, and to destroy reputation, and to impute evil motives to what men do in the discharge of public duty, and not infrequently they are maligned and libeled, and one who survives it must indeed have character and the confidence of his constituency.

While Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was always approachable and cordial, he would not tolerate a slight or an insult, and would resent it so promptly and with such firmness that there would be no likelihood of its being repeated. He despised deception and hypocrisy and had only contempt for the demagogue. He had his griefs and sorrows, having lost his only daughter after she had grown to womanhood, and later his only son, who was just on the threshold of his early manhood; and while those who knew him intimately knew that he suffered as only a devoted parent can suffer who has been so afflicted, he bore it bravely and patiently and outwardly presented his usual pleasant manner, greeting you with a smile oftentimes when it must have required great effort to do so.

For a long time he suffered at intervals from the disease that finally resulted in his untimely death; and while he seemed to know that he might not long survive, it apparently made no difference in his happy disposition. He met you as usual, speaking lightly of his condition and apparently having no fears, and I understand that he maintained this attitude to the end.

No matter how much he accomplished or how great his success in any undertaking, he never boasted, and his extreme modesty was only another of his many virtues. He was charitable to the extent of being generous, and those who approached him for aid or assistance invariably were rewarded.

I do not believe he ever intentionally did anyone a wrong. He was happiest when doing for others; and if these qualities do not constitute a religion, they do constitute, in my opinion, the requirements of a true Christian. He was possessed of a sweetness of disposition and a nobility of character such as only few have. To his legion of friends who knew him only as "Harry," he was always congenial and companionable, and his life to them was an inspiration. Living as I did for many years at the same hotel, I had an opportunity of seeing him almost daily during the sessions of Congress, and therefore was in a position to observe him in private life. One of his many attractions that always commanded my admiration was his gentleness, his devotion, and his extreme consideration for his estimable wife, his manner toward her always being that of a gallant knight toward his lady.

His untimely death is not only a great loss to the district that he so long represented, but also to his State, to the country, and to this House. Those of us who were privileged to be his colleagues miss his attractive and delightful companionship and feel keenly the absence of his wise counsel; and so long as any of the membership of which he was a part remains here, his high character, his great industry, his devotion to duty, and his strong personality will ever be remembered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Mr. LOUDENSLAGER commenced in the Fifty-sixth Congress. During that term of Congress I was assigned to the Pension Committee over which Col. LOUDENSLAGER presided as chairman, and for more than 10 years I was ranking Democratic member of the committee, and by virtue of that position I was a member of the various conferences with Mr. LOUDENSLAGER that took place between the Senate and the House of Representatives Pension Committees. In that capacity our relations as public servants were intimate and I had unquestioned opportunities to observe and know the man. I do not hesitate to say now that there are but few official positions among Members of Congress that hourly tests the innate sense of justice and the obligations to duty than does the position of chairman of the Pensions Committee. Col. LOUDENSLAGER was in every respect a kind, generous, tender-hearted man. He knew, in a broad, comprehensive manner, that the duty of the committee over which he presided was to revise the unfavorable action of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Pensions, which apparently gave him great discretion. In the performance of this delicate duty Col. LOUDENSLAGER was always guided by the law and established precedents.

He was firm and decided in his convictions, and while his generous heart would cause him to listen to the pathetic appeals of the sorrow-stricken widow and her helpless children, yet he would not depart from the stern dictates of the law. I honored him as an honest, just, and good man. In his life as a public servant he was faithful, conscientious, and vigilant in attention to his public duties. He recognized, without the touch of humiliation or servility, the true obligations existing between a Representative and the constituents who honored him with public position. In these relations he would spurn subserviency or the sacrifice of his independence. Free from stubborn persistence, he was always ready and willing to listen patiently to those who differed with him. His constituents honored and loved him, and he went to his untimely grave with the great and comforting commendation of his grateful constituents and his admiring colleagues from all sections of the Union, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

In his congressional career, Col. H. C. LOUDENSLAGER made but few speeches. He was given to but few words on the floor of the House, but when he felt it was his duty to speak, but few Members could express themselves more vigorously and in more apt and expressive words.

Col. LOUDENSLAGER not only enjoyed the confidence and respect of the Members of this House, regardless of party alignments, but in his own party and with the national leaders he was honored with high position, on account of his fidelity to his party and by reason of his fine judgment and sagacity as a political leader. For some years prior to his death, even midst the discharge of official duties, he was a great sufferer from the encroachments of bad health, but he was reluctant to give up, and he stood at his post at the jeopardy of his health. His friends saw the ravages that disease was rapidly making on his impaired constitution, and he resisted their importunities until he truly yielded up his life to the responsibilities of his duties as the public servant of his people.

But he has gone to his eternal rest, followed by the profound regrets of his indulgent constituents, a grateful public, and his devoted colleagues.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in no language is the certainty of death more tersely and graphically expressed than in the Arab saying, "Death is a black camel which kneels at every man's door."

In nine years of service in this body I can but recall how often has the dread summons sounded and how many of our colleagues have gone over there.

While HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER stood on the summit of life and was in the bloom of his faculties he heard his Great Captain's call. He ascended on high. It has always seemed to me that the incompleteness of life, its disappointments, and its unrealized ideals are the strongest proofs of the immortality of the soul. Surely in the divine economy of human life there must somewhere be a state or condition where the blasted hopes and ungratified aspirations of our life here are made good and man's heroic efforts are ultimately crowned with success. So we all believe is the finished destiny of our deceased friend and colleague. HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER did not live in vain, nor did he die without leaving behind him the fragrant memory of a life well spent and a career which illustrates the ennobling possibilities of American life. Our friend was born amid lowly surroundings. His youth was spent as a strong and sturdy boy on his father's farm. Before he had reached his majority he left his humble tenement and launched in a business career. In 10 years we find him elected to and discharging the arduous duties of county clerk in his native county. Such was the impress he made by the efficient and successful administration of the difficult duties of that responsible office he was reelected without opposition. At the expiration of his second term he was elected by an overwhelming majority as a Representative in the Congress of the United States in the Fifty-third Congress. For nine successive, continuous terms he was reelected as Representative of the first congressional district of his native State, New Jersey.

There are at least two well-defined classes in the House of Representatives. First, are those Members who have the divine gift of eloquence, who are great in debate, and who, on all the acute living issues which stir their countrymen, can blow a trumpet call to their party followers. This class bulks large in the public vision. They fill the speaking trumpet of fame and are cheered in the battle by the exultant shouts of their party followers and applauding colleages.

But there is a larger and more useful class of Representatives. The hard-working, tireless, industrious Representative, who, unappreciated, unnoticed, uncheered, slaves at his work for his country's good through the long day and far into the silent watches of the night. He never attracts popular attention and never wins popular applause, but all his colleagues can testify to the transcendent importance of his service. HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER was a typical representative of this class. He brought to the discharge of his duties all the virtues of his sturdy ancestry.

He was for years chairman of the Committee on Pensions. While he was warm and mellow hearted, he was inexorably just. He was never the slave of sentiment. Duty was the presiding genius of his life. How well and faithfully he discharged the duties of the chairmanship of that vexatious committee the public never knew. But all his colleagues know. For long years he was a leading and influential member of the important Committee on Naval Affairs. For six years I was associated with him on that committee, and I cheerfully bear testimony to his fidelity, to his unwearied industry, and to his broad and liberal views as to the policies which should be carried out in the administration of naval affairs. He felt a patriot's genuine pride in his country's grandeur, and thought, mistakenly, I believe, that the only adequate expression of the greatness of his country was a large and magnificent Navy, a Navy which could not only defend us against all foes, but one which would strike with awe all foreign nations.

He had a talent for business and a genius for organization. In recognition of his eminence in these qualities he was elected as secretary to the Republican congressional committee for two terms—1906–1908. An efficient secretary to a campaign committee is far more useful and necessary than its titular head. Under Mr. LOUDENSLAGER's efficient management, and largely through his efforts, his party was victorious in the two elections of 1906 and 1908.

In 1910, just after he had been triumphantly reelected to the Sixty-second Congress, in the high tide of success, in the flush of victory, he was suddenly stricken. He realized at once that the end was death. Heroically, without hope, he bore the agony of a long and painful sickness. Realizing that the end was near, he returned to his home, and there, on the 12th day of August, 1911, surrounded by his loved ones, without a murmur, unshudderingly, he boarded that mysterious bark which touches at every man's port, and then, we trust, he sailed through radiant seas to the far-away, happy islands of the noble, the true, and the blessed of all the ages.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, after many years' acquaintance with HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER, I can look back upon our friendship with no other feeling than joy and gladness that I was privileged to know, and know well, so strong and true a character. He was not a man who bestowed his trust and confidence lightly. With him friendship had a real meaning, and only after deliberate study did he take one to his bosom and call him friend. That relationship once established he was all that the word friend implies. He had many excellent and, in this day, somewhat unusual qualities. That which most strongly appealed to me was the tactful and kindly way he had of pointing out one's failings or shortcomings, and this took courage of the highest order. His admonitions were never given in an offensive manner, but as from a father to a son, with a genuineness that made one love him all the more and feel that he was a friend indeed. Nor was he always looking for flaws to correct. He was equally generous in according praise where merited and never in any fulsome or ostentatious way.

Another of his qualities, and one which exemplified his breadth of mind, was the readiness with which he accorded credit to or acknowledged ability in those in opposition to him. He had a keen discrimination in this respect, and was able to subordinate his own antipathy to such a degree that he could survey the field calmly and discern the good which would be lost to the sight of the ordinary man because of his personal prejudice or rancor.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was an extremely intense man, equally so in his work or his play, and coupled with his intentness was a fixedness of mind and a tenacity of purpose that enabled him to successfully accomplish almost any task which he undertook. When once embarked upon an undertaking he was tireless in his efforts and so great was his energy that he was always a host in himself in its behalf. His mind was singularly keen, clear, and analytical. Had he cultivated the art of public speaking his mellow voice, splendid physique, sound logic, and fine gift of imagination would have made him a formidable debater and a powerful orator. In committee or before small gatherings he was always ready, fluent, and convincing, but he rarely spoke before large audiences, seeming to distrust himself when in the presence of so many, a distrust which was wholly imaginary and without foundation. The few times I have heard him speak in Congress and before large gatherings gave ample evidence of the latent power within him, and his words were couched in language so sincere, logical, forceful, and well chosen as to lift his effort to the plane of real oratory.

In politics he was an uncompromising partisan. A firm believer in government by parties, he was a hard and resourceful fighter for party principles and party success. To him his party was above any individual in it and to it he gave freely, fully, and gladly the best of effort and judgment that was in him, often to the jeopardy of his own personal success and to the certain detriment of his health. Had his devotion to his party been less his years among us would have unquestionably been prolonged. Not only did he achieve distinction as a worker in the party organization, but in its councils as well; for he had a singularly clear conception of the trend of national events which caused his judgment to be sought by party leaders and his advice carefully considered and in many instances followed.

As a legislator he was broad-minded, liberal yet not extravagant, and extremely conscientious. Surrounded and beset, as are all legislators, by selfish interests, each looking for its own advancement, he could not be swerved from his conception of right and duty by any appeal to friendship or threat of personal disadvantages; yet no man I have ever known in public life was more susceptible to an appeal based on friendship than was HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER.

He was devoted to the interests of the district he so long and so usefully represented, proud of the State of his nativity, untiringly seeking to advance her to a place of still greater prominence in the sisterhood of States, and New Jersey and the first congressional district of that State may well mourn the termination of his long and honorable career.

Guile, deceit, treachery—three failings only too common in humanity—were utterly abhorrent to his nature, and he never hesitated to denounce either when known. His word was more sacred to him than his bond. When once he announced his attitude or gave his promise, there never was any doubt as to where he would be found when the time for action arrived. He always stood without hitching, and that means a great deal in the everyday affairs of life as well as in politics and statecraft.

His cheery greeting, genial smile, and strong, true handclasp were never absent, even in the late days of his final illness, and made all who came in contact with him feel the sincerity and genuineness of the man.

After all is said and done, the one commanding and domineering quality which makes a man stand out conspicuous among his fellows and causes him to be remembered long after all others have faded from the mind is that of absolute and unwavering loyalty. This was preeminent in the character of HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER. He was loyal to his country and its institutions; he was loyal to his high sense of public duty; he was loyal to his friends. To have known him was but to respect him; to have known him well, to admire him; to have known him intimately, to love him with a love that lingers long and with increasing fragrance in the memory of those admitted to his intimate frendship.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, this man possessed so many qualities that he was always thought of by us as a friend. We treated him as a friend and he never failed to respond in kind. When he came to Congress a score of years ago, he brought with him a disposition to kindness, a trait which came to him with his birth, one that never can be acquired with the fullness possessed by him. As our knowledge of him developed so did our liking for him grow until we reached a period in our acquaintance when we felt ourselves privileged to give him the lovable name of "Loudy," the nickname familiar to every one of us who sat with him during his membership.

In this feeble tribute to HARRY LOUDENSLAGER'S memory I have no desire to add to his merits and at the same time I hope I shall in no way take from them. The effort to speak of one—toward whom our affections constantly drift—with candor and according to his deserts is not without difficulty because of the inclination which our impulses give us.

I knew HARRY LOUDENSLAGER before I came to Congress; our districts lay opposite each other across the Delaware River. We met here as neighbors with good feelings toward each other. He held out his hand to me and asked to be my friend and wished my friendship in return. The compact was made with promptness and kept without an interruption during our service of almost 15 years. His constituency, like that of my own, naturally had interests which our combined efforts could well serve. His people manufactured, so did mine. Their product was similar and therefore the same law affected both. They alike asked for an extension of commerce and we labored together for their common benefit. Together they demanded increased internal improvements, and again their interests were mutual. The fields of our agricultural constituents yielded the same product and was sold in the same market. They visited each other across the river, and in some instances became attached through the bonds of matrimony. Thus our labors, lying along common lines, were oftentimes divided, of which my friend always assumed the larger share. I went to him with all my troubles, which he took upon himself with a cheerfulness that shamed the selfishness within me. I received from him a willing assistance which I was anxious but unable to return. When I complained, he cheered; when I despaired, he encouraged.

His time belonged to everybody but himself, and it was always used by others without the slightest respect for its owner. His service was rendered without bargain or expectation of return. How he accomplished so much in the space of time given man to work was the wonder of us all.

His purse had no string to it and he lived with the knowledge that his "shroud would contain no pocket." He shared to the extent of his means and with a spirit that makes generosity real. His cordiality furnished a reason for the attention which he always had. He would not live alone; he would not be alone. He had no trouble finding companionship; indeed, it was always ready. Yes; it awaited him.

With all this lovable spirit, HARRY LOUDENSLAGER had a courage that propped the weak and led the hesitating. His arguments were convincing and always at hand, as he would use the little familiar sentence, "Now, wait a bit." A man of strong sense, with a wit natural to himself alone, and armed with facts, he was an adversary who was seldom selected the second time.

Mr. Speaker, what can I say of this man which is unknown to all those who live in his little world? They knew him to hate a lie; so did we who lived with him here. They had learned of his candor; it was soon made familiar to us. They appreciated his energy that never wearied; we soon discovered it and then employed it in affairs that were ours, not his. They felt his influence over men; those of us who strove to promote or defeat some measure, sought it for the good of the cause we advocated.

This man worked for the common good, and his efforts received the response which comes from grateful hearts. I know that he demanded justice at the same time that he dispensed it. In nothing did he pretend. He worked for a constituency that employed as well as one that was employed. He never feared contests between capital and labor, because he was strong enough to be fair to both. Where interests conflicted, he solved the problem as his good judgment directed, having but one regret, that his conclusions might have brought disappointment or inflicted pain. It will always be said of him that no Member of the House during his time was more generally useful in disposition of its business than he, and but few had greater influence over its conclusions.

HARRY LOUDENSLAGER was a Republican of the old style. He believed in the rule of the majority and always cheerfully submitted to it. When beaten he raised his hat to his adversary and when successful he naturally demanded the same treatment in return. He never left his party or its councils, but always obeyed its decrees. He was one of the active party men of New Jersey who assisted in placing the majority in that State on the Republican side. He took his political baptism during this struggle. While not a political intolerant, from party questions and party issues he never wandered. On tariff questions he was not only zealous but an extreme partisan. He sincerely believed in the doctrine of protection, and no argument could persuade him to abandon views he formed during the great political struggle for party supremacy, which have made New Jersey famous. His party stood by his leadership for more than a score of years; God's hand removed him from it. His battles have been furious, but no man appeared who could overcome him. Much of his strength, which was unusual, is attributable to those traits of character of which I have spoken—loyalty to cause, with a fellow feeling for its enemy.

The domestic life of my friend was simple and sincere. He had many sorrows which at times greatly depressed him. As he gave his full share in his official life, he did the same in the confines of his family, to which he was greatly devoted. His public life was in the open, and his frankness disclosed his reflections; yet with this, no man ever said that he abandoned his friend or violated the confidence of him who gave it.

HARRY LOUDENSLAGER made no pretense to genius or great leadership of men. He did not claim to rank among the statesmen who sit in select councils where policies are proposed affecting all the men and all the things of the world. But he did reign among the men who accomplished results and who at this time—one year since he went away—speak of him with emotion and with recollections that are tender and lasting. Only two days ago at a luncheon in the House restaurant, where his personal friends had gathered, his name was mentioned, when the remark was made "Don't disturb the poor fellow; he was tired when he left and has earned the rest which God has given him."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, it has often seemed to me that a fair and just measure of a man's good qualities may be taken from the estimate in which the man is held by his own people—the men, the women, the children, who are his neighbors. This thought was much in my mind when, with my colleagues from this House, we went to pay the respect of Congress to the memory of the late HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER. As we drew near the residence of our late brother we could not help being impressed with the many signs of deep and general sorrow for their departed friend shown by all classes of the people in that neighborhood. They who knew him best and knew him longest were the ones who grieved most over his loss. Not only in that immediate neighborhood where the man had lived, but throughout the district on that day, we saw these unusual signs of sorrow and of respect for the memory of the departed. That, Mr. Speaker, is to my mind as fine a tribute as can be given to a man's character; it is a thing we all strive for and value most after we attain it—the esteem and liking of those who form our own local communities. It was a tribute to the character of HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER which could not be higher, which could not be of more consolation to the members of his family. There must of necessity be much that is good, much that is gentle and kind, much that is high-spirited and just in a man to earn and keep in so marked a degree, as we observed that Mr. LOUDENSLAGER had earned and kept, the high esteem and affection of all those who, throughout his life, had best opportunity to judge him for what he really was.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here to-day to pay the tribute of respect to our departed colleague, Mr. HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER. We are again reminded that there is an end to human life. That sooner or later death must come to all, and we see those of our friends who are active to-day gone to their rest to-morrow. We then ask, is this all of life? Is this the end of mankind? Certainly no one here to-day feels that all of our existence ends with the grave, but that we must look beyond this world to see the perfect man. This life is short, yet we are reminded that men accomplish much good in the world in what we call the short space of time of man's life. It is men who spend their lives trying to make the world better; men who are trying to do something to help mankind; men who stand for high ideals, who look ahead and beyond self, who are altruists in the fullest sense of the term. It is not always the one who lives the longest who accomplishes the most, but it is he who lives the best, and who lives so that the world is made better by his life well spent. We must first act by starting out to be true and honest with ourselves; we may deceive others, but ourselves we can not deceive. When the sunset of our lives come and the twilight of death gathers about us, we should have the consciousness of mind that leads us to know that we have accomplished something in the world; that our lives have not been lived in vain.

On my entrance to Congress it was my fortune to be placed on the Committee on Pensions, of which Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was then the chairman. During my four years of service on that committee I found him kind and considerate of every Member. Always ready and willing to give everyone a fair hearing, and never did he show the least partiality, whether Democrat or Republican. He was always fair to everyone having a case before the committee, and the most humble Member of the House always had just as fair a hearing as the most prominent. He was an ideal chairman in the conduct of the business coming before a committee. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was always true to his convictions. He did not try to deceive anyone. He was always kind and courteous in his treatment of all. He was a strong partisan, but that did not cause him to show any of it in his treatment of any member of the opposite party.

I am always glad to say a good word for a true man, one who had the interest of his fellow man at heart; one who was ready and willing to say and do something that would help those who needed help. Who of us does not at some time need some help of those with whom we come in contact? The one who is ready to say something and never ready to do is not always the best, but it is he who is ready to help, as well as to say what should be done; not to only say but to do is what counts. Sometimes persons make great professions of their love for mankind, but with only the selfish motive—with the hope of doing something for self.

Our success in life depends on what we stand for and advocate. The question should come to us all, Have we done the best we could for the world, and have we done our full duty to mankind? It is not the amount of money we may accumulate in this world that makes us successful, but it is how well the money that has been accumulated has been used. Some men are very rich in property, yet poor in the success of life; theirs have really been lives of poverty. All their lives they have struggled to make one more dollar to add to what they already have, yet after it is all over and they pass from this earth they have not been missed, and no particular act of theirs can be pointed to as one intended to make the world better. But the generous, whole-souled man whose heart beats in sympathy for his fellow man, who is ever ready to do something for others and never misses an opportunity to help some one, is the person who is appreciated and really counts for something. We must not forget that things in this world do not come to us while we sit down and wait, and one who does so will find the procession has moved by and he is left behind. Things in this life are not worth much except what we work for ourselves. God has placed us on this earth endowed with certain talents, not all the same, it is true, but we should make the best of what we have. We never know how much we can do for the world until we go out and make an honest effort. I can not better express this idea than to quote these beautiful lines—

> Trust in thine own untried capacity
> As thou wouldst trust in God Himself. The soul
> Is but an emanation from the whole.
> Thou dost not dream what forces lie in thee,
> Vast and unfathomed as the greatest sea;
> The silent mind o'er diamond caves may roll;
> Go seek them—but let Pilot will control
> Those passions which thy favoring winds can be.
> No man shall place a limit on thy strength:
> Such triumphs as by mortals may be gained
> May yet be thine if thou wilt but believe
> In thy Creator and thyself. At length
> Some feet will tread the loftiest heights attained;
> Why not thine own? Press on; achieve; achieve.

There is no place in this world for the person who thinks he can slip through this life, have a good time, do nothing, and live off the labor of others. Every young man should realize that there is no room for anyone who is not willing to make an honest effort, who is not willing to work for what he gets. Our colleague started in life on the farm; he knew what it was to work; he was taught that when a young man, and the lesson of industry he did not forget. He did his duty in every position in which he was placed. Let us this day remember that we must live so that the world will be better for our having contributed something to help mankind, and when we are gone our friends can truthfully say a good man has passed to his reward.

We should not forget that—

> We live in deeds, not years, not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
> We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives
> Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitation that I venture to say anything upon this occasion about one with whom it was not my pleasure to have had a personal acquaintance, but it is not inappropriate even under such circumstances to join in the tribute being paid to-day to the memory of one who for so many years was honored by one of the districts of my State by an election to this House.

At the beginning of the extra session, a little more than a year ago, the grip of that illness which resulted in Mr. LOUDENSLAGER'S death was firmly fixed, and he did not thereafter come into contact with any of his old friends here nor with those who were then for the first time sitting as Members of Congress, but that he was being missed by those old friends of his was soon known to the new Members, especially to those from his own State, and when the end came the expressions of sorrow-were many and genuine and not confined to Members on his own side of this House.

I think probably there are few places where the measure of a man is more completely taken than right here among Members of this House, and it is said of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER that no man had more real friends, not only among his party associates but among those of the opposing political faith.

Some one may say that Members with whom I have talked were mindful of the maxim, de mortuus nihil nisi bonum, but the expressions of praise of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER are so hearty, and of sorrow at his loss so genuine, that I am certain that they were uttered without restraint or reserve.

To those to whom Mr. LOUDENSLAGER'S loss means so much more than it can mean to anyone else, it must be an infinite satisfaction that none here named him but to praise.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, those of us in this House who were associated with HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER in the daily work of Congress, the various activities of committee duties and general parliamentary proceedings, who were thrown in contact with him in political contests, whether as friend or adversary, and who shared his companionship when cares of state were relaxed, can truthfully pay tribute to him as a competent public servant, a political opponent worthy the steel of any man, a generous foe and a glorious friend—in fact, a true and admirable man in every sense of the word.

During his long term of service in this House he won the friendship of men of all parties, who were attracted to him by his worth and personal merits and paid him the respect thus commanded regardless of party affiliations. One of his most notable traits of character was a downright straightforwardness which never deviated. It was either "yes" or "no" with him, and whichever it was the verdict was to be depended upon to the end.

He had an extraordinarily clear sense of public duty, and he adhered to it rigidly. He believed that he owed it to his constituents and to his country to fulfill the tasks allotted to him, and he made it his daily concern to do so. He was methodical to a degree and a punctual and constant attendant upon sessions of committees and of the House. While he was chairman of the Committee on Pensions he applied his orderly and methodical business mind to the details of every case before the committee and saw to it that justice was done every applicant, however humble.

As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs he took a deep and sincere interest in the upbuilding of the American Navy, and was one of the most indefatigable workers in the task of framing the great appropriation bills. He was devoted to the interests of his State and his district. I venture to say that no Member of this House had a wider personal acquaintance among his constituents or was more attentive to their demands and welfare.

He was a staunch believer in the principle of a protective tariff which would safeguard American industries and bring the greatest meed of prosperity to American workingmen. As a business man he was level-headed and conservative, and in politics the same; but a catholic disposition gave him a wide tolerance of the opinions of others. Indeed, it was this catholicity of nature which won him friendship in the opposing party that endured to the day of his death.

From close personal association with him in the direction of Republican campaigns for the election of Members of Congress, I am competent to speak of his invaluable services to his party—work which indeed shortened his days and, I believe, hastened his untimely end. In 1906 he was secretary of the Republican congressional campaign committee, and when JAMES S. SHERMAN, the chairman, was taken sick upon Mr. LOUDENSLAGER fell all the duties of the chairmanship. In 1908 and 1910 he was in full charge of eastern headquarters.

He was a man of remarkable political judgment and a master of political diplomacy. He had the rare faculty of composing differences among the factions and bringing men together. In campaigns he never asked anyone to do more than he was willing to perform. He was the first man to take up the work in the morning and the last to leave at night. A splendid physique enabled him to do more than ordinary men could accomplish, and he taxed it unmercifully in the interests of his party and of his country.

He possessed a rare personal charm of manner, the natural result of a kindly and generous disposition. He enjoyed dispensing hospitality, and it gave him pleasure to make others happy. It must not be understood that this inferred any weakness of character, for he could be adamant upon occasion and stern and inflexible when circumstance required.

Another admirable trait of his nature was his demeanor of rare and punctilious courtesy toward everyone, regardless of rank or social position. Indeed, the humbler the individual the more marked would be his consideration of that person's feelings and rights.

He was one of God's noblemen and a friend to mankind. In his death his State and country lost a worthy son and his friends a companion whose presence will be missed, but whose memory and influence will survive long afterwards.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I have always regarded the custom by which the House of Representatives sets aside a few hours in which Representatives may pay a tribute to the memory of those who pass away while in the service of the House as a beautiful and touching one.

During the few years that I have been in Congress I have seen the hand of death strike down a De Armond and Missouri weep for her illustrious son.

Three times has death visited the delegation sent here by Tennessee—a Brownlow, a Gordon, and a Taylor have passed to the great beyond.

Kansas has mourned the judicial Madison, and the Keystone State lamented the loss of George W. Kipp and that kindly old gentleman so long the father of the House, Gen. Henry H. Bingham. Vermont has been visited and death called the genial Foster to his reward. Nor does the list, Mr. Speaker, end here.

On this present sad and solemn occasion we have gathered to pay our tribute to the memory of an honored son of New Jersey. To few indeed was it given to serve our State for greater length in Congress, and still fewer gave her a more distinguished and honorable service in this House.

HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER was first elected to Congress in 1892, and if he had lived until the present session expired he would have served his district for 20 consecutive years.

If I were to state his dominating characteristic, I believe I would say that it was absolute frankness. No one ever doubted where he stood, and he always made his fight in the open. Intensely loyal to his friends, but always fair to his opponents. He was particularly kind and gracious to new Members, especially to those coming from his own State, and the fact that one belonged to a party other than his own did not make the slightest difference with him; he was always ready to aid a younger Member in every way that was in his power; affable and ever accessible when his advice or aid was needed.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER rarely spoke in the House, but when he did address Congress he always received close attention, having the faculty of being able to express himself in concise, clear, terms and always to the point. He was ever watchful of the needs of the people of his district and of his State, always prompt in his attention to congressional duties, and singularly successful in obtaining the Federal assistance requested by his people.

Few men that I have ever known had his facility for making and retaining friends. His candor and honesty won for him the respect and confidence of the leaders of both political parties in his State and Nation. Realizing the value of his conservative and intelligent judgment, those in charge of his party's affairs appointed him secretary to the Republican congressional committee for three successive terms. His duties in this connection he faithfully carried out.

I remember well the day he left Washington for French Lick Springs, Ind., where he hoped to regain his health. Little did we think when he bade us good-by that day and we admonished him to return to us shortly in his old-time health and vigor that that good-by was to be our last. The House at that time had under consideration tariff legislation in which he and his people were deeply interested. He hesitated to leave Washington then, having refused the entreaties of his friends to leave months before in order to care for his health. He believed that his duty to his district required his presence here. He sacrificed his health and, as events proved, he lost his life as a result of this devotion to his constituents.

Mr. Speaker, the outpouring of people of all denominations and all political parties who attended the funeral services at his home in Paulsboro, N. J., on August 16 last and the evidence on all sides of the grief which was in their hearts spoke more effectively than can any feeble words of mine of the affectionate esteem in which Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was held by those who had so signally honored him in life.

A loyal friend, a generous opponent, a faithful Representative.

I will always count it a priceless heritage to have known him and to have served in Congress with him.

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, with no hope of adding to the splendid tributes that have been paid to the memory of HENRY CLAY LOUDENSLAGER, but prompted by the high esteem in which I held the deceased, I must give some expression of that esteem on this occasion.

My friendship for Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, overreaching party and sectional lines, originated in my admiration for his manly qualities and his official integrity. I was a member of the Committee on Pensions with him for more than seven years. His kindly and receptive heart held out no barriers to the true man who sought his friendship.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was preeminently a man of affairs, intensely practical, and always active. In his public career was illustrated the type of the Representative of to-day.

In what may be termed the heroic period of American history, when Representatives in this body became world-famed for their eloquence, their logic, and their fervor of speech, legislation was deliberative rather than active. A primitive country, an agricultural population scattered over vast territory that had not yet felt the touch of industrial development, were not only productive of men of the meditative and deliberative type, but laid few duties on the national legislator, except such as affected the shaping of a new government. Glorious as are the pages of our history that are adorned by names of statesmen of this type, and priceless as is the legacy that they have left us, the fact that they were attuned to the task by environment should not be forgotten. Supreme in their day and generation, it is doubtful if they would have harmonized with the fevered pulse beats of this electric age.

In this day of steam and electricity when in travel months have been reduced to days, and men commune instantly for thousands of miles in mid-ocean, when the happenings of the civilized world may be known each day by the humblest citizen, when commerce and manufacturing have multiplied a thousandfold, legislation has changed with the changing times and the type of legislator has changed accordingly. So vast and varied are the business interests that now affect or are affected by government, that legislation is necessarily made up largely of business details, which has called into public service a large per cent of business men. Our friend was of this type—clear cut, decisive of speech, quick of action, and of mature judgment. He legislated with a purpose and with a directness that was usually effective.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was an orthodox Republican, but party allegiance carried him only where his judgment approved.

> Statesman, yet bound to truth of soul sincere,
> Of action faithful and in honor clear.

There is a lesson of hope and promise to the youth of our land in the public service of our friend. Born on a farm in Gloucester County, N. J., May 22, 1852, he left his home at an early age to engage in business in Philadelphia. He was in business for 10 years, when he was elected county clerk of Gloucester County, N. J. Then followed his election to the Fifty-third Congress and later his election as secretary of the Republican congressional campaign committee. He served continuously in Congress to the day of his death. A strong factor in his promotion was loyalty to his friends. This was a marked characteristic. He selected his friends with unerring judgment, and he held them by constancy. To the intelligent young man of fixed and honest purpose, advancement is not accidental, but is the result of a perfectly natural law.

In every new responsibility assumed by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER he proved worthy of the trust. Only the right can issue from an honest motive. The philosopher poet enunciated a principle as everlasting as the ages—that the man who is true to himself can not be false to anyone.

But, Mr. Speaker, we must turn from the life work of the deceased to dwell for a few brief moments on the sad providence that has removed him from our midst.

The march of civilization has done little to rob death of its terror. Stoicism may sear it over, philosophy may garnish it, and religion may point across the dark abyss to the other shore, but to the intelligent man it will ever be a grim and terrible monster.

He who was the light and life of the world, the morning star to which all coming generations will look for guidance, was also the Son of Man, and though the great beyond was to him an open book, he approached the "valley and shadow" with human dread. In this he has taught us to value life, and when its mission is ended to lay it down, not lightly, but in the fear of God.

Nothing can take away the pang that we feel in separating from those we love. The more intense our love the more trying the final separation. But a life well spent and love in life requited is a balm for the broken heart.

Those who the death of our friend touched most closely will not cease to lament their loss; but to recount his virtues will ever be a compensating pleasure. They gave to death what was mortal; they have with them the essence of his being, that which is immortal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have chosen to wait until others have spoken, because my relations with the late HENRY C. LOUDENSLAGER were of long duration, our personal friendship having extended over nearly a third of a century. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER represented the district in New Jersey in which I was born. He also was a native of that soil. I had therefore watched his career with more than ordinary interest. I knew him first as county clerk, and after his election as a Member of Congress aided in making him better known and appreciated on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware River. It is therefore a matter of great satisfaction to me, knowing his early history as I knew it, to hear his praises sounded by men distinguished in national affairs, as those who have spoken to-day. The address of the distinguished senior Member from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] attests the esteem in which Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was held by those who associated with him in the New Jersey delegation.

The ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], has paid a touching tribute to him, whom he respected as an able legislator and a loyal friend; and among others who have spoken are the present and the former chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], representing both of the great political parties, each of whom, rising above the spirit of partisanship, has given expression to the high esteem in which he held our departed colleague. I have been impressed by all these addresses, and particularly that of our good friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], a typical son of the South and a brave soldier of the Confederacy, who succeeded Mr. LOUDENSLAGER as chairman of the Committee on Pensions. The significance of these speeches and of others made by his admiring friends evidence the strong position held by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER in this House and demonstrate the hold he had upon its good will.

In view of all these kindly expressions it is fair to say that when Mr. LOUDENSLAGER entered the Fifty-third Congress and started out upon that career which was to earn for him a national reputation there were those who had their misgivings as to the wisdom of sending an inexperienced country boy to these great Halls, but, as step by step he progressed and as term after term he returned to this House, the doubts and fears as to his capacity for the work he had undertaken gave way to sentiments of confidence and admiration. He knew how to work, and he was not afraid to undertake large tasks; he was skillful and quick to seize upon opportunities; he became the firm friend of Speaker Reed and was intrusted by that great man with the execution of many of the important details entering into the proceedings of Congress. He had the friendship of Speaker Henderson, and upon the advent of Speaker CANNON had so developed as a useful factor in guiding legislation that he became one of the trusted men about the Speaker's chair. His activities invited the attention of the national leaders, and for many years he was the friend and associate of Mr. SHERMAN, now Vice President of the United States, but then directing the congressional campaigns. He learned to know the congressional districts of the United States as intimately as he knew his own, and his effectiveness as a manager was generally recognized.

During the course of the addresses this afternoon it occurred to me that some lessons were to be drawn from the life of our lamented friend which might be of advantage to the yeomanry as well as to the youth of the country. First of all, the action of the first New Jersey district in regularly returning Mr. LOUDENSLAGER to Washington demonstrated the wisdom of keeping a good man in Congress. If Mr. LOUDENSLAGER had confined his efforts solely to the first district of New Jersey his usefulness would have been limited and might have ended with his first term. He preferred, however, to broaden his sphere of influence. I well remember helping, in my feeble way, to strengthen his friendships upon the Pennsylvania side of the noble Delaware. There were times when he helped us upon the Pennsylvania side, and there were times when we helped him upon the New Jersey side. But he reached out even beyond the boundary lines of New Jersey and of Pennsylvania. He made friends everywhere, and in making these friends he was able to do tenfold for the people of his district what he would have been able to do had he plodded along in his solitary way. I remember that the people of New Jersey sometimes hinted that the Representative of the first district had become "the seventh Member from Philadelphia," but I noticed then, as has been easily demonstrated, since I followed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER into Congress, that, while he was considerate of his friends in other districts and entertained in his heart a warm spot for Philadelphia, his statesmanship was never so broad that he did not first of all attend to the wants of "the folks at home."

Reference has been made to the humble beginning of our departed colleague. Like many of us he was the product of the farm and the pathway of his early life was not strewn with roses. He struggled against unfavorable conditions. He had to combat them and to overcome them; his success in life was due to his industry, to the power of marshaling his forces, and to his capacity as an organizer. He was not only an organizer of business and of politics, he was an organizer of friendships. It has been said that he answered every letter. In his own way of stating it, he "always wrote the last letter." He watched the little things as well as the big things and never failed to keep in touch with his constituents. What finer lesson for the youth of the country than this—success based upon industry and performance of duty? Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a public servant who deserved well of the people, and for 10 successive terms the people set their seal of approval upon him by sending him back to Congress. While they honored him they also assured themselves of an invaluable experience and of a devotion upon the part of their Representative that was not to be questioned.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a man of lovable traits. I can see him now entering the doorway yonder, with stalwart form and smiling countenance, passing down the center aisle to the Speaker's table, and there wheeling about to greet friends and survey the House. I observe the whispered conversation, the friendly quip, and the other evidences of a cheerful mind. Even in this memorial hour we can not overlook the associations of yesterday, the friendly handclasp and cheery tones of him who is gone.

The former Speaker of the House has told us of his reluctance to attend memorial occasions. None of us relish the necessity which brings us into the realm of sorrow, but it is through such sorrow as settles round us now that we can best appreciate the cheer and the fellowship we once enjoyed. Indeed, we are met to praise and commend rather than to grieve and to pine. The fate of our friend is but the common fate of us all. There is but a difference in the number of the days. In the end we are brought to a common level. Neither wealth nor poverty is treated differently. The luxurious Titanic sinks in the Polar seas, carrying with her the richest and the poorest. Steerage passengers or cabin de luxe, it makes no matter. All alike must face the great Creator of all.

Rich and lowly, beggar and lord, over the bridge they go.

And so, as we meet to memorialize our friend, it would seem better that we should look upon the brighter side; that we should think of the good he had done; that we should speak of his generous impulses.

His life was not without its sorrows, not without its clouds; but neither pain nor sorrow nor dread of the evil day could rob him in life of those fine characteristics of fellowship and good cheer which made his friends cling to him "as with hooks of steel."

One more thought. It is pardonable upon an occasion like this. We have had assembled here the representatives of great causes and of all parties. They have striven with each other in times of turmoil and in hours of bitterness, but there has been on this occasion a unanimity of thought, a oneness of purpose—the sprinkling upon the grave of our departed friend the roses of love and appreciation. Would, Mr. Speaker, that we might practice more in daily life the precepts of this day, and that to the living, as the honors come and go, we might extend the garlands so often and so ungenerously reserved for the grave.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, there can probably be no greater tribute paid to the character of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER than a mention of the fact that he was known and addressed as "Harry" by his friends, his neighbors, his business and political associates, and his comrades in all walks of life. And so it is of HARRY LOUDENSLAGER that I shall speak briefly to-day, giving a short sketch of his career and adding a few sentences of personal remembrance and appreciation.

He came to Washington in 1893, a Member of the Fifty-third Congress, was reelected to every succeeding Congress, and would have served for 10 consecutive terms or 20 years had he lived till the 4th day of March next. Only four of the present Members of this body have exceeded that service. He was the first man to serve more than two terms or four years from the first congressional district of New Jersey.

The Fifty-third Congress was Democratic, and of course Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a minority Member during his first term, but in the next Congress he was assigned by Speaker Reed to the chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions and to membership on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. He retained his chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions until the present Congress, but was transferred from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which he became the ranking member.

Beginning with his first term he was a member of the Republican congressional committee. In 1895 he was placed on the executive committee, and in 1906 he became the committee's secretary and for a time acting chairman.

He also served as secretary of the Republican caucus.

He attained eminence in the Order of Red Men, was a thirty-second degree Mason, a prominent Odd Fellow, and a member of the Benevolent Order of Elks. He was a member of the Union League of Philadelphia and the Republican Clubs of New York and Camden. He was at all times an influential factor in the social, industrial, and commercial life of the cities of Camden and Philadelphia and throughout the counties of his district.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was a man who believed that "an ounce of work was worth more than a ton of talk," and he could be found at his desk from early morn till late at night solving the intricate and perplexing problems that must ever come to the public man who serves his country loyally and faithfully.

As chairman of the Committee on Pensions his heart was in his work and his sympathy was always with the petitioner, and while his judgment and duty oftentimes compelled him to stand for and render adverse report, the performance of such duty grieved him deeply, and I have heard him many times express regret that he felt obliged to take adverse action in any case affecting a soldier or the widow of a soldier.

His pride of country and devotion to the upbuilding of our great Navy was shown year after year as the annual appropriation bill was framed. His work was mainly done in the committee room, but his remarks on the floor of the House were in no uncertain tone. A paragraph from his speech of April 17, 1900, will illustrate his convictions, which never left him. He said in supporting the naval bill:

I deem it an honor to be a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whose work forms so important a part of the duties of the House of Representatives, which has to do, perhaps, more than any other committee with providing means for defending the national honor and protecting the vast business interests of the United States, both at home and abroad.

I derive no little pride from the fact that since I have been associated with that committee I have stood at all times with those of my colleagues who have steadfastly pursued the policy of building up a navy for the United States that will be adequate to the needs of so great and glorious a Nation; for if ever a public policy has been vindicated; if ever the foresight of man in providing for the exigencies of the future has by subsequent events been demonstrated to have been wise, the history of the year 1898 can not be truthfully written without according honor and credit to those public men who since 1883 have planned or aided in the schemes for the construction of a navy for the United States that would be commensurate with the urgent needs of this, the most important branch of the public defense.

"Loudy," as he was affectionately called by his closer friends, was not only repeatedly honored by his district and by his associates in Congress, but by many others, and on occasions that are rarely equaled. One of these affairs was an interstate testimonial in the form of a dinner at the Union League Club, in Philadelphia, December 13, 1902. At the dinner were the governors of the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware; the mayor of Philadelphia; the entire membership, both Republican and Democratic, of the Naval Affairs and Pensions Committees of the House—21 States in all being represented.

During recent years his office, as you know, was at the end of the corridor fronting this Hall and was the Mecca of his fellow Members and newspaper men, who seldom passed his door without stopping a moment. It was said that his door was always open and that he was always in.

But his record as a public official is too well known to need my further comments. He served his country faithfully and well, performed every duty with zeal and fidelity, and gained the appreciation and gratitude of all, from the President of the United States to his humblest constituent.

In 1906 Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was made secretary of the congressional committee, and during the campaign of that year, as well as those of 1908 and 1910, he was found at headquarters in New York City giving his best energies to the work of the campaign.

In 1906, because of the illness of Chairman SHERMAN during the closing weeks of the campaign, all the work devolved on the secretary. Again, in 1908 and 1910 he had full charge of eastern headquarters and literally gave his life to what he considered his duty, sacrificing his health and his personal interests that he might make the best effort possible to perform the task imposed upon him by his party colleagues.

In this work he was the same genial and approachable HARRY LOUDENSLAGER as at Washington. He was a master of detail, had infinite patience with callers, used exact judgment in his decisions, and was indefatigable and tireless in his effort to gain success for his colleagues. He was usually the first to appear at headquarters in the morning and often worked far into the night. No one had a clearer perception of the exact condition of affairs, and his close prediction of the results in 1906 and 1908 showed his grasp of the situation. In 1910 he made no forecast of the result, and hopeful as were his associates, we all felt that his judgment spelled defeat.

Because of this close attention to work at headquarters he jeopardized his own election in 1910, and for a while on election night there was doubt of his success. An incident of that night will serve to illustrate the love he gained and held from all who were associated with him in his work. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning, and the returns from his district were far from satisfactory. So interested in his success were his friends that the rooms at headquarters were filled with not only members of his family and close friends from home, but everyone of the working people at headquarters had remained, each eager to congratulate "Loudy" on his reelection. It was perhaps nearly 3 a. m. when, after conflicting messages indicating now victory and again defeat, positive word came from an authoritative source that he was reelected by a safe plurality. Immediately a shout went up from every throat, and each and every one crowded around to shake the popular and lovable man by the hand, with a word or two of sincere congratulation, and then the tired but happy group of friends and office associates and employees departed with perhaps the most cordial good night that "Loudy" ever heard.

Of his personal traits generosity easily took the lead, and many a poor dweller in his district was made happier and more comfortable because of his help, given without the knowledge of any but the recipient. During the campaign of 1910, when everything seemed to be going wrong, he called us in one day to show us a letter from an old lady who had known his mother, and who had sent him her photograph with the wish that she had a vote to give him at election. I learned afterwards that HARRY had mailed that poor woman $100, and the grateful letter he received in return he would not have parted with for another hundred.

Personally, I am at a loss for words to pay the tribute I would wish to pay to the memory of one of my dearest and closest friends.

I came here during Mr. LOUDENSLAGER's second term and remained in his confidence and closest companionship till the end. I shared in his work, both here, in New York at headquarters, and at home. I rejoiced with him in his triumphs. I consulted with him in his contests. I assisted him and cooperated with him when and where I could. He was "Harry" to me and I was "Bill" to him. My loss and grief at his departure were too great to be measured by words, and, though the people of the first congressional district of New Jersey have chosen me to fill his place as best I can, I would most willingly forego my own position as his successor could he be restored to us. But as an all-wise Providence has ordained to the contrary, we can and will hold dear the memory of HARRY LOUDENSLAGER, and we can and will be inspired to greater and better efforts ourselves because of his splendid example as a man, a citizen, and a Representative.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, May 6, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 5, 1912.

Senator CULBERSON, Washington, D. C.:

We wish to concur in your position against the compensation bill pending and highly indorse your action, as it does not meet the approval of the well-informed railway employees in this vicinity and we desire its defeat.

W. D. JACKSON.
W. T. PEARSALL.

JOINT LABOR LEGISLATIVE BOARD OF TEXAS,
Fort Worth, Tex., May 3, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES CULBERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of a printed report of a hearing on the employees' compensation bill, before a House committee March 26, 1912, and from it I get the information that our people, members of the Order of Railway Conductors, are at liberty to protest direct to our Congressmen and United States Senators, and I beg to submit my protest to this bill, remembering, however, it is my personal protest.

Our biennial legislative convention closed in San Antonio April 12 last, and I do not think a single member of that convention was then or is now favorable to this bill, and I am assuming, after having read your interview in the press, in which you expressed opposition, that you are doing what you can to defeat this measure, which I sincerely trust you may succeed in doing, at least postponing it until the men so vitally interested can have an opportunity to properly digest its contents.

With our present Federal statute, employers' liability law, and which is almost word for word as our Texas statute, any change ought to give the employee something that the supreme courts have held is fair and equitable for injuries received, without any consideration whatever as to whether the injured gets it all or what portion he may receive after suit.

This bill now pending before Congress will absolutely peon the injured and place him at the mercy of the employer, and place the employment of counsel virtually in the hands of the employer, when such counsel is supposed to represent the employee. There are so many objectional features in this bill, and knowing that you are and have always been inclined to protect the employee against the power of the employer, I leave it to you, and ask that any further information you may desire as to the position of our people in Texas will be furnished if possible to do so, if you will command me; and again asking that, if it be possible, postpone action at this Congress, and for which your friends in Texas will sincerely appreciate.

If anything of interest to us comes up kindly keep me posted, and for which I thank you in advance.

Sincerely, yours, C. F. GOODRIDGE.

Mr. MYERS. In relation to the pending bill and as a part of the argument thereon I ask to have read by the Secretary a preamble and resolution of the legislative board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

HELENA, MONT., April 10, 1912.

Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator SUTHERLAND Senate bill No. 5382; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States House bill No. 20487, by Congressman BRANTLEY, member of a so-called Employees' Compensation Committee, appointed by the President of the United States, a bill which destroys all existing liability laws which have been secured by years of hard-fought legislation; and

Whereas this bill does not furnish an adequate compensation as former laws; and

Whereas this bill assumes that engineers' wages to be $100 per month, which is 50 per cent of his wages; and

Whereas this bill prevents a widow from remarrying, if she would receive continued compensation, and would prevent a normally endowed daughter, after the age of 16 years, from receiving compensation, and would tend to make the dependent families of engineers a prey to prostitution, destitution, and degradation, removing parental and governmental support and protection to children when most needed; putting a premium on railways employing men who have no resident heirs in the United States; tending to cause cessation of safety appliances, if cheaper to pay meager compensation by insuring employees under law, and adding the cost to production and transportation; and

Whereas this committee has spent a great amount of time in considering the different data advanced by those favoring and opposing the compensation bill; and
Whereas their findings are that those speaking to represent the side of labor mostly represented their individual opinion, as the men actually affected by the bill have not had any time to consider or obtain data upon such bill; and
Whereas the committee have found that such members as they have considered the bill with are strenuously opposed to such bill; and
Whereas no member of this committee has found one man in actual service who approves of the bill, and as this committee has found that not 1 per cent of the men in actual service know even that such a bill was in contemplation to be introduced in this session of Congress; and
Whereas this bill has the support of employers who formerly opposed adequate liability law; and
Whereas in drafting this bill data was secured by comparing American conditions with European conditions, to the detriment of American labor; and
Whereas in foreign countries where compensation laws are in effect the necessity of legal action to collect same is continually increasing; and
Whereas in Switzerland, where labor has a direct voice in legislation, this law has been repudiated; and
Whereas a strong reason for adopting this law, advanced by those favoring the bill, is that it will eliminate court action or reduce it to a minimum; and
Whereas compiled data shows increasing court action where such a bill is in effect. Another reason advanced by those favoring this bill is that court action is slow and inadequate in meting out justice to injured and dependents under liability law. We assume it reasonable to presume that if Congress can not remedy liability law after agitation and trials of years they will fail to remove those defects in a new law which has not even been considered in America until a very recent date. We do assume that all they will accomplish is the amount that can be collected, which is so meager and inadequate that competent legal attorneys can not be secured to protect and collect meager amounts for dependents, as you can not get competent attorneys cheap, at much recognized fee, than you can engage any man much less the recognized schedule of wage or salary for such work performed, leaving employee or dependents without legal protection and support, as only such legal counsel could be obtained as does not class at all with railway legal counsel, as they always have the best; and
Whereas opinion prevails that most commissions, both National and State, fail to obtain the desired conditions or even show progress to that end we put no confidence or assurance in the adjuster or commission that might be selected. We recognize this as a party-machine politics; and
Whereas this bill provides that employer can give or secure employment for injured employees, and if employee refuse such employment no compensation is due him during the time of such refusal. This we condemn as unfair and unjust, especially to engineers, whose strenuous occupation, at even a young age, may have impaired health and constitution, so that they are not able to perform other labor. We consider that section of the bill providing no compensation for the first 14 days' injury as unjust and an incentive to railway companies not to adopt or keep in repair safety appliances to prevent minor accidents; and
Whereas the minimum in deaths and injuries are so meager and inadequate, being such a small per cent of engineer's actual wages; and
Whereas engineer's life is uncertain and average short, we condemn the bill as void of any sense of justice or even consideration to engineers and trainmen and their dependents, causing most desirable trainmen and enginemen to leave railway service, and being great reason for young men of good character and intelligence from entering railway service; and
Whereas the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Montana have had no time to acquaint themselves with the bill, inasmuch as no data pertaining to said bill was received by them until said bill was introduced: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the Montana Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' legislative board in session assembled submit a copy of our findings to all divisions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Montana; copy to the State legislative boards in the United States for their consideration, and that they, through our executives, ask their Representatives and Senators in Congress to delay action on this bill until the railway men of the United States can be heard upon so grave and important a piece of legislation.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At to-day's meeting of Macon Division, Order of Railway Conductors, 237 members, your speech opposing workmen's compensation act was unanimously indorsed, and I was directed to thank you for the organization for the interest you have always shown in behalf of railway employees. Your continued opposition to this bill will be appreciated.

ARGENTA, ARK., May 5, 1912.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Have just received CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing your speech delivered in Senate on April 13 in opposition to the proposed workmen's compensation bill, and heartily concur with you in the objections interposed, and wish to thank you in behalf of the railway employees in the West for the interest you have taken in this bill. Have before me complete report of the commission that drafted the bill, and also President Taft's special message recommending its passage. Have carefully analyzed the proceedings and the bill, and am of the opinion that should it pass it will be repudiated, most especially by the railway employees in the western zone, and I trust it will be defeated by a large majority. If not, I would suggest an amendment thereto to include the traveling public.

Senator HOKE SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

The railroad employees of Arkansas appreciate your opposition to the compensation bill. We are bitterly opposed to this bill, and appeal to you to do all within your power to defeat same. This bill does not read right to us.

MACON, GA., May 5, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH and Hon. A. O. BACON,
United States Senators, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of railway employees that there is now pending in Congress a bill known as the workmen's compensation act; and
Whereas this bill is to become a substitute for all laws now in effect protecting said employees in case of personal injury; and
Whereas it would become their exclusive remedy for injuries, thereby taking away from them their present rights—rights that railway employees have been endeavoring for years to have enacted into laws and which we believe are much more favorable to said employees than the bill now pending as a substitute: Therefore be it

Resolved, That railway employees here assembled in this union meeting in the city of Macon, State of Georgia, the 5th day of May, do oppose this bill, and will continue to oppose it by using all honorable means in our power.

Resolved further, That this meeting indorse the action taken by the Senators and Congressmen in opposing this bill.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the two Senators and each Congressman from the State of Georgia.

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 2, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A copy of your speech in the United States Senate on April 15, 1912, relative to the workmen's compensation act was read at a meeting of Warren S. Stone Division, No. 672, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at their regular meeting in this city to-day and a motion was adopted that the locomotive engineers of Memphis, Tenn., extend to you a vote of thanks for opposing a bill that would be detrimental to the interests of the vast army of railroad men of this country.

It was further ordered that a copy of this letter be sent to the chairman of the legislative board and to all local divisions of our order in the State of Georgia.

Yours, truly,

F. M. ANDREWS,
Secretary Division No. 672,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
225 West Iowa Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that the memorial, in the form of a telegram, which I send to the desk, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 5, 1912.

Senator JAMES P. CLARKE, Washington, D. C.:

The railroad employees of this vicinity appeal to you to do all you can to defeat compensation bill. We are bitterly opposed to it and do not want it passed.

W. D. JACKSON.
W. E. PEARSALL.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I take it that no Senator here is insensible to the great responsibility which the enactment of radical legislation of this kind imposes. I do not hesitate to say that were this a question which had been considered for the first time at the present session of Congress I should hesitate to give it my support, much less would I enthusiastically support, as I do, the present measure. But this legislation, this principle, to speak more accurately, is not new; it has been under consideration as compared with liability laws for years; it has been considered at length by the National Civic Federation; it has been considered by labor organizations, national and State; it has been considered by political economists for years and years; it has been considered and tried in other civilized countries; and we approach it, not as a new subject, but as one that has been thrashed out by great men and considered by great minds the world over.

I do not deny that if I could be made to believe that organized labor opposed this measure I would hesitate a long time to lend it my vote; for, Mr. President, after we have passed upon the principle—that is, after we have passed the stage that the Congress have indorsed the principle of laborers' compensation—I think that those most interested in it, to wit, the laboring men who will be affected, should be first considered.

I approach this subject enabled to say in my own mind that I am convinced that organized labor in the United States, certainly organized labor in the State of West Virginia, has had ample time to consider this measure, has actually considered it, and, after that kind of mature and careful consideration of this particular bill and the principles which it involves, has given it unqualified indorsement—that is, a majority of them have done so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. REED. I should like to have the Senator kindly tell us when this particular bill was generally disseminated among the laboring men—the organized laboring men—of the State of West Virginia; how many copies were sent to them, when they were sent, and who sent them.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, later on I shall give the sources of my information. I will merely state now that I was only referring to the principle of laborers' compensation. Later on, however, I shall show, in a very brief way, the extent to which this particular bill and the provisions of this particular bill have come directly to the attention of the laboring people of the United States.

Mr. President, the railway employees of the United States have four general organizations. Those organizations are the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. I understand that those four organizations embrace practically all of the men engaged in the railway service—that is, interstate-railway service—who will be affected by this bill.

Mr. President, if we strike down labor, if we do anything in this Senate that is to go out to the world to indicate that we have no confidence in the organization—I mean in the militant organization—that labor has erected for itself, we shall, in my judgment, do a much more radical thing than by passing any measure now before the Senate.

Right at the outset, Mr. President, I know, as I shall show you later on, that these organizations, in so far as we can know that kind of a fact, have expressed themselves to Congress. We are asked to encourage rebellion amongst those men. They have passed resolutions which have received the approbation of the local organizations for a number of years—reasonable precautions against corruption in their ranks; sensible precautions against rebellion in their ranks. Without these precautions there is no need to appoint a legislative committee to come here and give us what is the intelligent, sober opinion of labor. They appoint presidents, vice presidents, advisory boards, and legislative representatives at this Capitol. We are asked now to say that all of those are absolutely unworthy of being heard in the Senate, that they are either so corrupt or so ignorant that this Senate can not rely upon their representations to our committees or to this body; and we are asked here now to pause in our regular proceedings after a commission of the Government has considered this bill, after a committee of this body has considered it, after this Senate has considered it, and we are asked to pause for what? To pause and see whether or not a rebellion can be started in the ranks of labor and the chief officers of those organizations can be discredited and shown to the Senate as misrepresenting instead of representing labor organizations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean to say that it would be starting a rebellion if this bill were postponed until the 8th day of this month, until the general national conference of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers should have its meeting in his own State, and there have the opportunity through its representatives to discuss this bill—the very meeting and the only meeting that has power to instruct the man who came here and undertook to sanction this bill? Would that be rebellion? Does the Senator mean to say he fears to trust this general meeting?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I fear not to trust any regular meeting of organized labor to disclose to this body or to any other body the position of labor upon any question, but when we have here the expressions of the labor organizations, when we have them here asking us not to do the thing which certain Senators are asking us to do, then I do say that, in my opinion, without reflecting, of course, upon the honorable Senators who take that position, it is encouraging rebellion amongst them. It is exactly, sir, as if at Lawrence, Mass., where organized labor decided upon a strike—I am just giving that as an illustration and taking no sides upon it—after that strike had been decided on by the regularly elected officers of the labor organizations, those who favor labor and who believe in the right of labor organizations to strike had said, "You people do not represent organized labor; wait, let us fight this thing; let us discredit the men who have called this strike; discredit the president, the vice president, the executive board, and the advisory board; let us stir up a rebellion, let us get a meeting of labor and go down to the locals and let them call this strike off." The two positions, in my judgment, are parallel.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not want to be constantly interrupting him——

Mr. CHILTON. I will permit almost anything from the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. But the instance he cites has no more to do and is no more parallel with the question at issue than an excerpt from the history of the fall of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will do anything for the Senator from Missouri, but I do not want him to inject a speech or an answer to my argument at this point.

Mr. REED. Very well; I will not answer it now, but I shall be very glad to do so later.

Mr. CHILTON. I have no doubt the Senator can answer. I will say that, in my judgment, the Senator from Missouri can answer any argument, whether it be good or bad.

Mr. REED. But a bad one very much easier than a good one.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, I do not know. I have seen the Senator when I think he answers a good argument even better than he does a bad one.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Suppose we were to concede what the Senator suggests, that there should be more or less discipline in these labor organizations, does not the Senator think that the United States Senate, with the duty of wise, conservative, and discreet legislation imposed upon it, when it comes to its notice in an authentic way that the representatives of labor who have given their sanction to this bill are not upon this question in harmony with the rank and file of labor, ought to take notice of that fact?

Mr. CHILTON. Unquestionably, if it comes; but my idea about that, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SIMMONS. Then can the Senator doubt that the opposition of the employees of the railroad corporations is brought in present conditions to the notice of the Senate in a way that we can not question that there is great, almost overwhelming, opposition upon their part?

Mr. CHILTON. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I want right here to say to the Senator——

Mr. CHILTON. Let me answer the Senator. I do not think it is overwhelming.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, I will withdraw that and say "large opposition."

Mr. CHILTON. I do not think it is in any sense overwhelming, nor is it convincing to me; it is not even persuasive to me, as I will show later on.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, Mr. President, to argue that it would be necessary to make a speech; and the Senator, as I understand, a few moments ago objected to a speech being made.

Mr. CHILTON. I think we ought to make one speech at a time.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I want to say to the Senator, in this connection, that on Saturday I had occasion to run down to my State. On the way I had a conversation with the conductor on the train, whom I know to be a very intelligent man, and he stated to me not only his intense opposition to this measure, but he stated that he did not know a conductor on his part of the Atlantic Coast Line who was not likewise strongly in opposition to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on this side we are wholly unable to hear what is taking place on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. CHILTON. Can the Senator hear me?

Mr. CUMMINS. And we still have some interest in the subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply asking the Senator from West Virginia if he did not think, when the Senate had notice brought home to it in such a way that its authenticity could not be doubted, that there was serious opposition on the part of the rank and file of the employees of these corporations to this legislation to which their executive committee had agreed, that the Senate ought to take notice of that fact?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, of course, this question involves a great many considerations. I think I will in the short time I shall occupy the floor answer that suggestion of the Senator, and show, I think, that, so far as the evidence has come to me, there is nothing more in these protests than such a condition as you will find wherever a number of men are involved. In such circumstances you will always find some who—not speaking disrespectfully—"kick"; some who are opposed to the present organization; in other words, there has never yet been formed an organization of religionists or politicians or any other kind of an organization, labor or otherwise, involving thousands of men in which you could count upon the hearty cooperation and support of every single one of them.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, if the Senator will permit me, I thought the Senator was making an argument a little while ago——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair and secure permission to interrupt. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator was making the argument a little while ago that because these four members of the executive committee had been selected by labor to represent them in matters pertaining to legislation, therefore the Senate could safely act upon their advice with respect to this question.

Mr. CHILTON. I was simply beginning to give various reasons why the Senate should conclude now that organized labor is for this measure. I had given but one of them, and if the Senator will be patient I will give him, in my clumsy way, the additional reasons why I think we are safe in saying that organized labor has had full opportunity to consider this matter, that it has considered it, and that a great majority of the intelligent, well-informed members of organized labor are here asking us not only to write upon the statute books the principle of laborers' compensation, but to do it now and to do it with this particular bill. But I can not do it all at once. I have to take it one point at a time and show you by the record what is in their minds.

Mr. President, so important did organized labor consider this matter that when the commission was appointed under the resolution of the Sixty-first Congress to consider this great subject they employed counsel—gentlemen of national reputation—to go before that commission and to represent organized labor and to induce the commission to go right forward and prepare a concrete measure and present it to the Representatives of the people and to have it acted upon at once. That counsel was the Hon. Frank B. Kellogg.

Now, on June 14, 1911, Mr. Kellogg appeared before that commission and stated that he represented Mr. Garrison, president of the Order of Railway Conductors; Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Mr. W. S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; and Mr. W. S. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Mr. REED. I am not interrupting the Senator for any captious purpose, but I desire to ask him now if that attorney represented anybody but these four men; the complaint being, to make my statement complete, that only four men have spoken. How does it add to the solemnity or the potentiality of their act that they hired an attorney, because if they were unauthorized to represent labor at large, then the fact that they employed an attorney does not add in any way to the force of their acts. It is the same four men.

Mr. CHILTON. I will say to the Senator, as I said to the Senator from North Carolina, that I can not develop my argument all at once. This is simply one stage in my effort to show to the Senate that organized labor understands this question; and that the men who represent organized labor have proceeded conscientiously, intelligently, and faithfully to carry out the desire of labor in this country to write upon the statute books of the Nation an honest and fair laborers' compensation act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that Mr. Carter abandoned the bill and that Mr. Garretson, in his statement before the commission, criticized severely the character of the bill we are now considering?

Mr. CHILTON. I do not so understand it. If Mr. Carter has abandoned it, I am not aware of it. The able counsel who represented him filed briefs and made a long argument before the commission in June, 1911.

Advancing one step further I want to call the attention of the Senate to the statement of Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the Railway Trainmen, found in the report of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the House, Sixty-second Congress, March 15 to 26, 1912, on pages 76 to 83, inclusive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that in addition to employing Mr. Kellogg, these organizations also employed Mr. Judson, who is the author of a work on interstate commerce, and the Senator will find that at page 221 Mr. Judson stated that he and Mr. Kellogg had been employed to represent these brotherhoods.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that. I do not think there will be any question——

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. CHILTON. If it is not long.

Mr. REED. It will take just a moment.

Does the Senator from Utah claim that Mr. Judson was employed in any way or by any other person than Mr. Kellogg?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know nothing about it, except what the gentlemen said. Judson said that he was employed to represent these brotherhoods, expressly named them, and said they embodied some hundreds of thousands of employees. That is all I know about it.

Mr. CHILTON. Is the Senator through?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CHILTON. Much has been said by distinguished men upon this floor in criticism of this bill, and I am sure that I want my vote upon this matter to be right; I want my people to understand why I am doing what I am, and I ask, without reading it, permission to insert as a part of my remarks the paper read by Mr. Lee before our committee of the Senate, from page 76 to page 83 of the hearings before the House committee, March 15 to 26, 1912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[By W. G. Lee, president Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.]

In appearing before you I take the same position in reference to my opinion on the proposed compensation act as I did when I appeared before the commission appointed to investigate and report its findings and recommendations to the President on the questions of employers' liability and workmen's compensation. That is, briefly to say that, while the railway employees naturally would prefer a greater amount in benefits, still I feel that the men I represent are agreed that the bill meets with their approval and they are more than anxious to have it enacted into law.

I have the very best of reasons for this belief, based on the inability of the Federal liability law (and, so far as they can apply, the State liability laws) to provide benefits for all cases of injury. We know that in a very fair proportion of cases of death and disability the employer is at fault, and in consequence can be made to pay for his fault, but we also know that there are very many instances of death and disability that can not be attributed to the fault of anyone, and in consequence this great number of accidents is unrecompensed. We believe that instead of having a few benefited under the liability laws as they are now enforced, even though the amounts be large in proportion to those allowed by the proposed compensation act, that it is far better to pay every case of accident and relieve the general suffering. Our efforts, therefore, are directed toward the betterment of the many as against what I believe can truthfully be termed the few. There has been some unfair opposition shown against the proposed measure from one part of the country, namely, a few of the South Atlantic States, but I believe I am justified in saying that the inspiration for the opposition comes from lawyers who have gained the most of their living from the prosecution of personal-injury suits, and who see in the proposed compensation law the necessity for their getting into some other kind of business or being forced to ask a good-natured community to contribute to their maintenance.

Under date of March 7, 1912, there appeared in the Raleigh News and Observer a communication against the proposed bill which has been quite extensively distributed through that part of the country I have just mentioned, and which pretended to show the wicked ingenuousness of the proposed law. It was written by a distinguished lawyer of North Carolina, name unknown, who, to quote from the press, "has stood for justice to the employees all these years," and who summed up his objections to the proposed compensation act in several numbered paragraphs which I will quote and answer, because I take it that this is the composite objection of many other like distinguished attorneys, who feel that the law is wicked and ingenuous because it promises to put the ambulance chaser out of business.

Paragraph 1 of the objections reads:

"1. It proposes to take from railroad employees the protection they have secured through State and National legislation in this country by means of 'employers' liability' acts under which a workman who has been injured by the negligence of a common carrier can recover just compensation therefor, whether it results in death or lesser injury."

The objection that the employees have no longer recourse to the liability laws is correct. I believe, however, that there is too much stress placed on the protection to the employee by way of the State liability laws, for, in my opinion, since the approval of the Federal liability act, that is the law under which railway employees coming under the regulation of Congress must seek their redress. The objectionist does not state, however, that the liability laws in which he places so much dependence do not protect the employee unless the employer is absolutely at fault and it can so be proven. A compensation law, to the contrary, pays for every death and disability, regardless of who is at fault.

Objection 2 reads:

"2. It restricts the compensation far below the actual damages sustained, and divides the amount which a jury would award in a lump sum into payments distributed over a varying series of years up to eight years. The highest compensation allowed by the act for wrongful death is $50 per month for eight years, which is equivalent to less than $4,000 cash, and even that is allowed only when the deceased leaves both widow and children."

The first objection is that compensation is restricted below actual damages. I have yet to hear the claim made in defense of the liability laws that they have given full compensation. The payments under the proposed law were so arranged on the advice of the railway labor organizations, officers and members, who all agreed that it would be far better for the men and their families to distribute the payments over a period of years rather than to place a lump sum in their hands at one time. If the arrangement for the payment of benefits was satisfactory to the employees who carefully considered it, it surely ought not to meet with serious objection from the distinguished attorney. There is no pretense on the part of the law that it fully compensates for disability or death. It might rather be regarded more as an industrial insurance placed against accident. The amounts mentioned by the objecting attorney are not correct, and I do not hesitate to say that he can not even estimate the amount that will be paid on the average to the railway employees. It is an off-hand statement based on prejudice and absolutely without reliable information as its basis.

Objection 3 reads:

"3. It proposes to relieve railroad companies by whose negligence the death or other injury is inflicted, from the cost of such compensation by placing it upon the shippers and the traveling public, for section 31 provides: 'The burden of compensation under this act for personal injuries shall be considered as an element of the cost of transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission in any proceeding before it affecting rates is directed to recognize and give effect to this policy.' Under the present system the owners of the corporation are interested in avoiding accidents and injuries to employees accruing from negligence because compensation therefor will tend to reduce dividends. But the proposed act, by shifting this burden upon the traveling public and shippers, makes the owners and managers of the railroads immune to any consequences flowing from their negligence. The increase in the number of killed and mangled will be inevitably prompt."

Were it not for complimenting the distinguished attorney with ingeniousness, I might be tempted to say that he has tried to direct public opinion against the bill; but I rather attribute his expressions to his fears that he will lose if the bill becomes a law. There is no business, aside from that of railway operations, that is not permitted to place the entire cost of its operation on the selling price of its product. The objection entertained by our distinguished friend is found in practice in every other business. In fact, I am absolutely certain it applies with particular force to his own. Just where anybody exercising ordinary common sense could hope to find a convincing argument against the proposed measure in the fact that the burden of cost would be divided over the entire public, is not easily seen except that he hopes to create prejudice against the law by calling attention to the fact that the public will have to bear its share of the cost. If he were as fair as he claims to be distinguished, he would follow up his objection by referring to the added cost of operation to every product, which cost must be borne by the ultimate consumer. For instance, if the cost of coal mining is increased the consumer pays an added cost for his coal, as everyone knows. If the price of beef is advanced the packers tell us that it costs more to get its product to the public, and the public pays the cost. If the cost of railway operation is increased because of legitimate expense, why should it not follow that this cost should be assumed by the public, the same as it is assumed in every other advanced cost in every other business? Our distinguished friend would have the public believe that the railway companies have inexhaustible treasuries from which all expenses can be met without paying the least attention to their revenues. It is nothing more than a cheap argument that rests its case in the hope that it can prejudice public opinion against the bill, but it should not appeal to railway employees who are compelled to pay the increased cost of production for everything else.

Objection 4 reads:

"4. The act further relieves the railroad companies from all expense of litigation which now falls upon them and places it upon the taxpayers, for it provides that the adjustment of losses shall be made by a new set of officials, called 'adjusters,' to be paid salaries of $1,800—$3,000 each, in addition to their actual traveling expenses and their subsistence at the rate of $5 per day, all of which shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Just why these corporations should be relieved of the expense of litigation incident to their refusal to pay compensation for injuries accruing by their negligence and why the cost thereof should be shifted to the United States Treasury is a secret locked up in the breast of the ingenious corporation counsel, whose fine Italian hand is seen in every line of this proposed statute. These adjusters will cost the public, for salary and expenses, over $6,000 a year each, and their number is not limited by the act."

The distinguished attorney is rather mixed up in his statements in objection 4. His burden of grief appears to be that some one besides himself will adjust claims that are in dispute between the employer and the employee. He can not understand why these adjustments should be made at the expense of the Federal Government. It is not difficult to understand why our distinguished friend is opposed to any plan that will take from him what he rightfully believes is his. The railroad employees believe that the Federal Government quite properly can assume this cost, save the expense to the individual employee, and place it generally on the public where it properly belongs. The fine Italian hand to which he refers is not seen in behalf of the corporations, and no one who knows the subject thoroughly honestly can lay claim to any such idea. The proposition, as I view it, is to protect the man from needless expense to which he is now subject in every case when he attempts to recover a dollar for injuries received in the service. The number of adjusters, according to the proposed bill, will correspond to the judicial districts in the United States, or, I believe, 88 in number, and to take the figures of the compensation commission, in which I have the utmost reliance, the additional cost will not exceed a few million a year. This applied to individual cases of disability and death would be an enormous cost, but taking the entire country into consideration this expense is so trival that even the distinguished lawyer will experience difficulty in making the public believe that it had been imposed upon by an increased per capita tax to this slight extent.

Objection 5 reads:

"5. Unlike the jury, which now decides upon the compensation to be allowed for negligent injuries caused to employees, this compensation is to be awarded by 'adjusters,' in whose selection the employees will have no voice. This crowd of new officeholders are to be selected and appointed by the Federal judge, who, not being elective and holding for life, may not be altogether uninfluenced in the appointment of such adjusters by their acquaintance with the heads of these great transportation companies, by the friendly aid of whom some of the Federal judges have been helped to a seat on the bench. Certainly there is not the same likelihood of adjusters being selected upon the recommendation of the employees."

The writer does not go into the difficulties that are sometimes experienced in securing an award from a judge and jury. He would have us believe that in all instances the jury agrees the employer is at fault and consequently pays the employee or his family enough to provide for them comfortably the remainder of their days and leave something to their descendants. The facts do not substantiate any such specious argument. Again, the attorney objects because "this crowd of new officeholders are to be selected and appointed by the Federal judges, etc." It seems peculiar as well as inconsistent for the distinguished attorney to have so much confidence in a Federal court judge in a liability case and so little of it in the appointment of an adjuster, but that is part of the business of the distinguished attorney and can be taken exactly for what it is worth, which to the men is nothing.

So far as influence being used in the appointment of these adjusters by the Federal court, I do not hesitate to say that the railroad employees will have just as much if not more influence than their employers. Public opinion counts for something in these days; and if that fact has not come home to the distinguished attorney, I believe that it has been forcibly impressed upon very many men who occupy positions of public trust and who will not take the chance of flying in the face of a fair public opinion.

The adjusters are not appointed for life, and they can be removed if their services are not satisfactory. Again, the objection does not show that the proposed law provides for committees between the employers and employees, who have it in their power to settle all questions in controversy, and I have confidence enough in the managements and the men to believe that after the law is once fairly operative that the majority of the railway companies and their men will follow this plan of making settlement.

Another objection to section 5 is that it takes away the right of trial by jury, but does not explain to the employees that there is substituted for this trial by jury certainty of compensation in all cases of death and disability. I do not pretend to say that the amount of compensation provided by the law for all cases will equal the amount awarded by a judge and jury when the employer is at fault. But here comes another thought that the distinguished lawyer has failed to set forth, and it is this: The award secured after suit must be reduced first by the amount due the attorney who prosecuted the suit, and also by a reduction through interest allowances on the amount that has been received, because it takes time to bring suit and prosecute it, and when we compare benefits under the liability law and under the proposed compensation law these statements I have made have a very significant bearing on the general result. I believe it is safe to say that when the attorney's fees now collected under the liability laws, together with the interest allowances that properly can be deducted from deferred payments made under the liability law as against the immediate payments under the compensation law are taken into consideration, that the differences in the amounts paid will not be so great as our distinguished attorney would have us believe.

Objection 6 reads:

"6. The compensation provided by the act is very complicated as well as minute in providing the different kinds of injuries, but it is uniform in only one respect, that the compensation provided is in every instance very far below what may be a just compensation for the injuries sustained."

The objection herein quoted appears to be one of the few truthful statements made by our distinguished opponent. Judging from what he has already said in his objection to the bill, I take it for granted that the bill to him is very complicated, but I make bold to say that anybody who has sense enough to read well-written English can see just what the compensation provides. To an attorney in a hurry to get his share out of a possible lawsuit the law may appear to be complicated, but to the employee who has plenty of time to figure out what it means the laws reads plainly enough. He also gets back to his former statement that compensation is very far below just compensation. I agree in this, but I also believe that it is unwise for the railway employees to attempt the impossible in legal enactment, even though it is done to meet the objections of our opponent.

Objection 7 reads:

"7. While the act does not restrict the amount which the corporations shall pay for able and experienced counsel, it is careful to provide that the compensation for counsel retained for the employee shall be fixed by the adjuster, whose method of appointment has already been noted."

This objection is as plain as if the writer had declared his fears that his personal commissary department was in danger. We take it for granted that the corporation has never given him anything to do, and that the most of his revenues come from the employee whose interest he has defended so vigorously. He objects to the fairness of the judge in appointing the adjusters but lauds his wisdom and justice to the skies when making an award, all of which is as consistent as the most of the argument he has offered against the bill. He does not have the fairness or the sense to see that the section protects the employee against the rapacity of the ambulance chaser. This is another wickedly ingenious scheme introduced in the bill which does not meet the approval of a certain class of lawyers.

Objection 8 reads as follows:

"8. The act is also careful to provide that when an employee has been injured or killed neither the cause of action nor the payments due therefor, when determined by the adjuster, shall be assignable. As a further restriction upon the compensation it is further provided that in calculating wages, the percentage of which shall be the basis of compensation, 26 times the daily wage shall be considered a month's wages, and 'no employee's wages shall be considered more than $100 per month.'"

Just why an attorney who is so deeply wrapped up in the welfare of an employee objects to the protection of the amount due him is not explained in his objection, and I leave it for you to guess. His objection to the method for computing computations is doubtless based on the fact that he did not know the railway employees themselves declared in favor of this plan of computation. The proposed compensation law is a give-and-take proposition. It adds to the wages of the man who does not work and takes from the amounts earned by the man who is exceptionally fortunate when it sees to it that the man who makes no wages in every instance receives the maximum amount provided by the law.

Objection 9 reads:

"9. The act is indeed unconstitutional in that it proposes to deprive the employees of common carriers of the right of trial by jury, which is guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States 'in all cases where the amount in controversy shall exceed $20.'

"It is true the act provides for a jury trial if exceptions are filed to the report of the adjuster and a written demand for a jury, but this is practically nullified by a provision that 'the findings of the adjuster shall be received as prima facie evidence in such trial before the jury; that the court may submit special interrogatories, and that the trial by jury is waived if this demand for a jury is not made within five days after the adjuster files his report.' Of this filing the employee, who will often be distant from the court, may fail to be apprised."

If the distinguished lawyer will read the proposed act and is able to understand it, his objections to the unconstitutionality will be set aside.

Paragraph 10 sums up thus:

"To sum up, the act takes from the employees the protection of the present employers' liability act; it restricts compensation far below a just compensation and divides the payment over a series of years; it relieves the railroad company of the burden of all compensation and places it upon the shippers and traveling public. The act relieves the companies not only from payment of all court costs, providing for adjusters who are to be paid out of the Treasury; it provides for the selection of these adjusters in a method which is likely to secure appointees more favorable to the corporations than to the employees; the method of compensation is complicated; it restricts the employee, but not the employer, in the selection of counsel, and deprives them of their constitutional right, guaranteed to all citizens, of a trial by jury."

The whole proposition is based on an attempt to confuse the real purpose of the law by pointing out its pretended injustices and impossibilities. The fact of the matter is that every careful lawyer knows that recovery can not be made twice for the same damage, nor do we believe the courts will permit the employee to have two methods of recovery while denying the same right to the employer. I have answered his statements made in reference to placing the burden on the public and I do not think it necessary to go over the ground again, nor do his further arguments need repeated attention, because I think I have answered them in their turn."

Paragraph 11 reads:

"11. All this is done upon the pretext that lawyers who represent employees in such cases are 'ambulance chasers,' and that this act will decrease the volume of litigation. It may do so, though it has not had that effect in other countries. But if it has that effect here, it will be by depriving the employees of just remedies and by adding enormously to the advantages already enjoyed by these great combinations of capital in their contests with crippled employees or with destitute wife and children when the employee has been taken from them by death caused by the negligence of the corporation. In free Switzerland every attempt to introduce this proposed 'compensation act' has been defeated, and that country enjoys the broadest and most liberal 'employers' liability act.'"

The volume of litigation naturally will be decreased, because there are specific payments provided by the bill for a certain number of injuries that naturally will reduce the question of adjusting the extent of the injury, because it is apparent there will be controversy over injuries the extent of which is not apparent, but there is every reason to believe that precedents once established there will be no further cause for any great degree of difference between the employers and the employees.

The distinguished attorney said: "In free Switzerland every attempt to introduce this proposed compensation law has been defeated, and that country enjoys the broadest and most liberal employers' liability act."

Our friend is again incorrect. The fact is that the Swiss employers' liability law has been repealed and a workmen's compensation law substituted for it after submission to a referendum vote of the Swiss citizenship. But in his mistake, or willful misstatement, he is in full accord with the majority of objections he raised against the proposed law. Switzerland discarded her liberal employers' liability law, and admitted in so doing that many deserving employees could not be recompensed under it, and substituted for it a compensation law that benefits every workman.

Paragraph 12 reads:

"In the language of Mr. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, 'Congress should devote its legislative energy, first, to the prevention of deaths and other injuries to railroad employees by broadening the "safety-appliance" laws and the "employers' liability" laws, and, then, when it exhausts its authority and capacity in that direction, enact laws for the compensation of those whose deaths from injuries were not preventable. Congress should not now accept as inevitable the mangling and killing of thousands of railroad men each month, and then attempt to absolve itself and the employers from further responsibility by enacting a law that is said to compensate this awful slaughter of human beings and "charge it to the consumer."'"

With all deference to the opinion of Mr. Carter, I must call the attention of this committee to the fact that all safety appliances in use today are the result of legislation and not of the voluntary act of any of the companies, and I can not believe that when the railway companies are forced to pay for the death and disability of every employee that it will have the effect of making them less careful of their employees. If railway companies could go to the public, as other businesses can go, and arbitrarily fix the price of transportation, there might be more reason to take this question of increased cost to the public seriously. But when we know how extremely difficult it is for the railway companies to secure an advance in railway rates we know that the railway companies will have to make good cause before they can secure any concessions from the Interstate Commerce Commission. And, again, to get back to the bottom of the operation of this proposed law, every member of your committee knows that it will be several years before the companies will have to pay what they are now paying, for the reason that payments are going to accumulate, and the companies are not going to pay lump sums as they do now, so that we can safely say that it will be at least five years before the accumulated costs to the companies will equal what they are paying now. This fact appears to have been overlooked by our distinguished opponent in his hurry to get before the railway employees to show them the wickedness and ingeniousness of the proposed law.

Paragraph 13 reads:

"13. The statistic show that the number of people killed and wounded by the railroads in this country is 20 times as many in proportion as those occurring on railroads in Europe. If this act is passed and the compensation for death and injury caused by the negligence of railroad companies is shifted to the traveling public and shippers, as is proposed, by increasing rates, and the cost of litigation is to be shifted, as is also proposed, to the United States Treasury, it is easy to foretell that the increase in negligence in the operation of railroads and in the number of employees killed and wounded thereby will be phenomenal."

This is further quoted from Mr. Carter's statements to the compensation commission in Chicago, and I think these statements have been very successfully refuted by Mr. Arthur Holder, representing the American Federation of Labor, who stated to the commission at Washington that the number of accidents had decreased, that greater care was exercised by the employer, and that litigation had decreased to the minimum in England in the past two years.

The statements were corroborated by Mr. Herman Willis, assistant grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who made a personal study of conditions abroad during the fall of 1911 and who came back to us very much impressed with the operation of the English compensation law and this plan in general. His evidence, like that of Mr. Holder, was secured first hand through the organizations of employees. There was not a single objection from them concerning the operation of the law, except that its benefits should be higher. This is a natural objection, as we all know. But so far as the extra care against accidents, the adoption of safety appliances, and the decrease in litigation are concerned the employees of Great Britain unanimously declare that these very excellent results have followed the operation of the law.

We find in our own country that since compensation has been brought forward with a fair chance of a compensation law being enacted that the railway companies have awakened to the conditions under which very much of their work is being performed, and they are taking steps to reduce their casualty records to the lowest possible degree. The largest systems in the country to-day have taken up the question of safety through the appointment of safety committees, who are authorized to point out all of the dangers that attend railway work and are invited to suggest improved methods of safety; and the advice given to the men by those in charge of operation not to sacrifice their lives and limbs for the sake of getting their work done in a hurry is another evidence that the railway companies do not believe that they can reach into the public purse without good reason and reimburse themselves for the added costs that will be necessary because all of the men in the service are to be paid if they are killed or injured.

This lawyer also continually harps on the charge to the consumer. In all fairness, to whom would he charge it? Where does any business get its returns except from the consumer? Even the poor devil who places his case in the hands of an ambulance chaser places him in a position to live off his own returns, in which case the ambulance chaser is the ultimate consumer, and, generally speaking, a very large one in proportion to the amount received. This lawyer pretends to have a tremendous interest in protecting the public, and all through his objections it will be found that his real interest is more in the direction of protecting his own business than it is in protecting the employee.

The lawyer who said the proposed bill is wickedly ingenious might, in full accord with his conscience, have added "so far as we ambulance chasers are concerned." It is natural to look for objection of this kind from men whose principal source of revenue is in jeopardy. The proposed compensation law guarantees to the family of every killed employee a certain revenue for a certain time, and it guarantees the money without giving half of it to any ambulance-chasing attorney. It guarantees to every disabled employee a specific amount for certain injuries and leaves the determination of other amounts to be paid on their apparent effects as compared to other injuries received. There is no law on earth that could go the limit and cover every imaginable accident and its results and give satisfaction. The law, like every other law, will have to be enacted, its principles accepted as correct by the United States Supreme Court, and after it is applied its deficiencies, inaccuracies, and injustices can then be adjusted by amendment.

I can say that a great majority of the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen are in accord with the principles of the law. They have expressed their desire for it at their convention, and have gone on record in favor of certainty of benefits to take the place of uncertainty of litigation. We believe in doing everything for the benefit of the greatest number, and for this reason we do not point to the high verdicts that are received in exceptional cases as a basis for a compensation law. We realize the impossibility of paying the amount awarded by the exceptional verdict where the employer is absolutely at fault to all cases of injury or death whether caused by the fault of the employer or the fault of the employee. In behalf of my organization I trust that your committee will see fit to report the bill to your respective assemblies as it has come to you from the compensation commission. I subscribe to the language of the commission in submitting its report to the President, that while this proposed law is not, perhaps, the most perfect measure which could be devised, nor the last word which can be said upon the subject, it is the result of careful investigation and the best thought of the commission, and constitutes a step in the direction of a just, reasonable, and practicable solution of the problem with which it deals. I regard it as desirable constructive legislation, to take the place of destructive litigation, and again express the hope that it may be reported by your committee to both Houses of the Congress and that it may pass at this session.

Mr. CHILTON. If Senators will read that paper they will find that practically every position which has been taken in the Senate against the principles of this bill has been met by Mr. Lee just as thoroughly as they will ever be met by any Senator upon this floor. It shows that he has not taken a hurried or cursory view of this subject or of this bill, but that he has studied it carefully, has digested its provisions, and is prepared to recommend to his people and to recommend to this body not that the principle of this bill alone shall be written upon the statute books, but that this bill is the bill which is satisfactory now to the ranks of labor and which they ask us to pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. CHILTON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator whether Mr. Lee presented that as an oral argument or a written paper?

Mr. CHILTON. My recollection is that it was as a paper he had prepared. I recall now exactly what it was.

Some distinguished southern man had prepared a paper seting forth the various objections to this bill, and it was printed in some paper in the South—I have forgotten exactly which one—the Raleigh News and Observer, of March 7, 1912. There was some dispute as to whether the man who wrote it was a lawyer or a railway conductor. I think it turned out that he was a lawyer—I do not recall.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He was the chief justice of the supreme bench of North Carolina.

Mr. CHILTON. I recall that he was regarded as a very able man, and it was so understood by the committee.

At any rate, Mr. President, I am willing to go to my people with this argument upon the one side and the answer of Mr. Lee paralleling it, and to abide the consequences, both in my own State and in the Nation, for my vote. I think the objections are answered; they are met completely and fully, and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to stand by Mr. Lee in his position.

But I want especially to call the attention of the Senate to the closing remarks of Mr. Lee, as follows:

I can say that a great majority of the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen are in accord with the principles of the law. They have expressed their desire for it at their convention, and have gone on record in favor of certainty of benefits to take the place of uncertainty of litigation. We believe in doing everything for the benefit of the greatest number, and for this reason we do not point to the high verdicts that are received in exceptional cases as a basis for a compensation law. We realize the impossibility of paying the amount awarded by the exceptional verdict, where the employer is absolutely at fault, to all cases of injury or death, whether caused by the fault of the employer or the fault of the employee. In behalf of my organization, I trust that your committee will see fit to report the bill to your respective assemblies as it has come to you from the compensation commission. I subscribe to the language of the commission, etc.

Now, Mr. President, it does seem to me——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon an interruption here?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In reenforcement of what the Senator has just said, I want to say this: Before I ever had read the bill I began to receive communications from locals in the State of Mississippi. They were not communications asking me to support the general principles of a compensation bill, but they named this bill by number, by title, and by authorship, and every communication was a request to support it. To those I replied that I had not read the bill; that I would look into it, and, if I thought it to the best interests of the people of the United States, I would support it. I later on looked into it. I concluded that the bill was a good one, and I wrote to some of them accordingly.

But the point I am trying to make here in supplement to what the Senator has said, is that the petitions and requests were signed by the presidents and secretaries of the locals, designating the bill by number, by title, and by authorship.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word more.

I have received only two communications from the State of Mississippi on the other side, one of them last Saturday and the other one this morning, in the face of the great number that came from all the centers of railway work in the State. I am not willing to believe that these men were either so dishonest as to create the impression upon my mind that they were not speaking for a particular bill which they never read or of which they knew nothing, or that they were so ignorant as to be asking me to support a bill the contents of which they did not know when they named it by number, author, and title.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Mississippi let me ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that at least one or two of the local committee here sent out to the various lodges requests for these indorsements, and in the request stated the number of the bill and gave the further description to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. CHILTON. I will say this, that I——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment. I would rather reply, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CHILTON. All right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know and I do not care. If these men are so ignorant of their interests and are so reckless with regard to the advice they give me as to lead me to believe they do not know what they are talking about, when naming the very bill and its title and its author, then they have acted dishonestly with me as their representative and Senator.

I do not know that what the Senator from Georgia suggested was said. I know that suggestions were sent to get up protests against it. Some of the very telegrams which have been read here show that they were in response to arguments and analyses that have been sent from here. Am I to give less respect to the opinion of a man because somebody has called his attention to the subject matter on one side or the other? I think not.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator from Georgia that what he says is strictly true. It appeared in our hearings—it appeared in one of the hearings that I attended of the joint subcommittee—that the representatives of labor here have sent out this bill and have sent out the House bill, have referred to it, and there is no doubt that the local organizations have had their attention called to this bill by subject matter and by its number. That appeared before us. I say it is possible that that is the only information some of them probably would have on the subject.

But, Mr. President, this committee who heard these men can answer any insinuation as to these representatives of labor being inefficient or being ignorant. I would just as soon believe a statement that the Senator from Georgia did not understand what he was doing on this floor as to hearken for a moment to the statement that one of these men did not understand exactly what he was doing, exactly what this bill would accomplish, exactly the effect it would have on the laboring men under him. They are intelligent men, well-informed men, good talkers, fair in their statements, and they showed that they knew a great deal more about this subject than I did, after I had studied it and had definite and certain ideas about it, and they showed me that they made that kind of careful study of the subject which I had not been able to make.

But going a step further, having shown that Mr. Lee and his organization, so far as we can know of the organization, so far as anybody can speak for it unless he wants to have a rebellion in the ranks, having shown that he and his organization supported this measure, let us see how it is with the railroad conductors.

On page 89 of the same hearing of March 15–26 we have the statement of Mr. Garrettson, of the Order of Railroad Conductors. Some of us asked specifically the question, not whether those in charge of these organizations favored this bill, but how the organizations as organizations stood in reference to this particular bill. We made the question apply as to the organizations and we made it apply to the specific bill that is now pending before the Senate, and we got an answer from them.

Mr. REED. What page is that?

Mr. CHILTON. Page 89 of the second hearing. I will give you this in a moment.

Mr. Garrettson spoke as follows:

There are a few things that I wanted to say in connection with the matters that have been brought out this morning because of my position representing the organization.

The Order of Railroad Conductors, comprising nearly 50,000 men, distributed in 600 subordinate divisions, or lodges, has had this bill under consideration, and the bill has been individually presented, because—

Then he turned to Judge BRANTLEY and said:

Judge BRANTLEY, I want to ask you to verify this: The first complete printed copy of the bill that was ever published was in our official organ, was it not?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETTSON. It went into the hands of every individual member of the organization, because they all receive that paper.

Mr. President, I have not time to go into all these arguments. Our time is limited.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. This is a very long and a very intricate bill. I suppose the Senator would recognize that in such meetings as he refers to by these organizations consideration must have been comparatively brief.

I want to call the Senator's memory to the fact that the Judiciary Committee, composed of lawyers accustomed to examining and construing statutes, did not meet simply for one day, in which they found it sufficient to examine the details of the bill, but, as the Senator will remember, held meeting after meeting of two and three hours in length, and that this was necessary for that compact body of lawyers, eight or ten or a dozen, as the case might be, who were present, to go through the bill and examine it; and after its examination we are still engaged in a discussion in which a great many provisions are shown to be difficult of understanding, and even as to the construction of them.

Now, how can the Senator think that this body of men, untrained in such work as the construction of statutes, in the hurried meetings which they could only have had in the intervals of their work, could possibly have arrived at an understanding as to the true meaning and purpose of the many details of the bill and the effect it would have upon them in their vital interests?

Mr. CHILTON. Let me answer the question of the Senator from Georgia. I will say to the Senator I do not expect them to do it, and that is why we should give the greater weight to those trained men whom those laborers have employed to come here and represent them, and who have even gone to Europe, as we have not done, to study this question, and who have studied for years and years every phase of it. Why should we not look upon them as protectors of the men?

I thank the Senator for calling my attention to the fact that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate did consider carefully this measure. The Senator will recall that it was read section by section and discussed and debated.

Mr. BACON. Yes; and it took I do not know how many meetings. Those meetings, as I said, lasted two or three hours, and at the end of it we find the committee divided on this matter, some of us thinking one thing about it and others thinking another. Yet it is expected that these workingmen should gather for an hour or so after their day's labor and with no opportunity for proper discussion or examination of it, in one meeting, probably, as I suppose is true——

Mr. CHILTON. No; Mr. Garrettson says that this was sent to the men individually, and it was considered by the local lodges.

Mr. BACON. So probably in one week.

Mr. CHILTON. I think every week or every month.

Mr. BACON. Passing from that, for I have no intention of unduly interrupting the Senator, I want to say in reference to another suggestion he has made, as to whether or not we ought to override or ignore the desire of these men to inform themselves and to be governed by their own judgment and insist upon it we shall be governed by the judgment of men they appointed as their legislative agents.

The Senator speaks of our encouraging rebellion. These men can have no object for rebellion, except to get what they consider to be best for themselves. If the majority of them think it is best for themselves that this bill should be changed, it seems to me that it ought to be changed, and if they require time within which to make that investigation, as is shown to us by the communications we have, I can see no reason why we should proceed and utterly ignore their wish in that regard.

Of all things, it seems to me a matter which is so radical as this, which proposes to separate them from the balance of all other citizens of the United States, and to say, while all other citizens can go into the courts for their rights, these men shall be debarred from it—such a proposition as that seems to me to be one of such gravity that to make haste is incompatible with the proper discharge of our duty in the matter.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will only say it will never be contended—I might say it will never be suspected by anybody where they are known—that a matter presented to the Senate by the Senators from Georgia and the junior Senator from Missouri has been in any sense ignored.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, he misunderstood what I said. I was not speaking about ignoring what we did, but I was speaking about ignoring the wish of this vast body of workingmen.

Mr. CHILTON. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. BACON. The Senator expressed it in another way.

Mr. CHILTON. We heard the objection of these distinguished men, able to present any cause in any presence, and those objections have been presented to labor—militant, organized labor—and all of these objections have been considered and have been disposed of upon the ground of economy and upon the ground of humanity.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is discussing the approval of organized labor affected by the provisions of this bill. Speaking of these unions, I wish to say that in the State of Virginia, which is very near Washington, all these measures are easily accessible to them, and those objections have been distributed through the entire State, which have been presented so interestingly to the Senate. Every union in Virginia affected by this measure has passed resolutions requesting me to extend my support to it, stating that it is one of the most important measures affecting labor pending in Congress. There was only one exception to this, and that was from the Order of Railway Conductors at Bristol, who passed a resolution, which I had printed in the RECORD, protesting against the passage of the bill.

These unions in Virginia have had every opportunity since the discussion of the measure in recent days to reconsider, and not one has reconsidered—not one has asked me to consider their approval of this measure withdrawn. I am satisfied they have had every opportunity to hear both sides of this question in the State of Virginia. They are very near to Washington, and it is very accessible for the information to reach me. I say I am satisfied that the unions affected in Virginia are at this time overwhelmingly in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I thank the Senator for supplementing what I said on that point.

Mr. President, passing on, because I want to be very brief, on the 26th of March, 1912, while the joint subcommittees of the Senate and House were considering this bill this telegram was read to us, and I want to read it to the Senate:

NEW YORK, March 26, 1912.

H. E. WILLS,
Congress Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Impossible for me to be present at hearing on workmen's compensation bill to-day. This will authorize you to give the proposed bill my indorsement in the strongest possible terms. I consider this the most important legislation that has come up in years, and every energy should be used to have it become a law.

W. S. STONE.

Mr. Stone, it will be recalled, is the president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Mr. Wills is the vice president, if I am not mistaken. I am not sure about that. He is, besides, the legislative representative here of several of these organizations.

So we have not only Mr. Stone and Mr. Lee but I want further to read to the Senate a letter I received since this debate has begun from Mr. Wills, to show how apprehensive are the representatives of organized labor that this session may pass without these principles being placed on the statute books.

The letter is as follows:

CONGRESS HALL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHILTON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: As the authorized representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, I am instructed to speak for the membership of these three organizations in reference to matters pertaining to national legislation.

During the past year I have devoted much of my time to the workmen's compensation bill now pending in Congress. The chief executives of these organizations, as well as nearly all of their prominent and active members, have taken part in the deliberations before the commission appointed for the purpose of considering this subject. In fact, one of the members of one of our organizations was a member of that commission. The conclusions arrived at by the commission in reference to this bill have the indorsement and approval of over 90 per cent of the approximate 230,000 members, who are citizens and residents of the United States, and we very much desire that the bill, as it is drafted, should pass and become a law. We would, at this time, look upon any amendments offered as being dangerous to the bill and to its passage and to our interests.

I would most respectfully ask that you use your influence to secure the passage of the bill without endangering it by amendments of any kind. We feel that some of the provisions of the bill can and will be improved, but it is our desire at this time to get the principles established, and so far as may be found necessary make the improvements later on.

Trusting you will give this such consideration as it may merit, I am, with respect,

Very truly, yours, H. E. WILLS,
Joint National Legislative Representative.

Now, Mr. President, there is no need for anyone to attack Mr. Wills here before me, for I have heard him talk. The Senate ought to know that this man has been appointed by the labor organizations to go to Europe and study this question. He has gone there. He has studied it for a purpose and studied it intelligently and effectively, and he has given to the commission and has given the committee of this body the benefit of that information.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator right at that point a question for my own information. I have regarded all the time the fact that the remedy provided in this bill is made exclusive as one of——

Mr. ROOT. It is impossible for us to hear on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was saying to the Senator from West Virginia, in connection with his statement last made about Mr. Wills going to Europe, that I had regarded the provision of the bill making the remedy it provides an exclusive remedy as one of the fundamental defects in it, perhaps the most fundamental, from my standpoint.

The Senator now has stated that Mr. Wills, who is one of these legislative representatives, had been to Europe for the purpose of investigating the subject matter of the bill. I was going to ask the Senator if Mr. Wills or any of the other members of this legislative committee who went to Europe for that purpose called the attention of the Senate committee to the system of any government regulating this matter where the remedy provided in the act was made exclusive.

Mr. CHILTON. I will say to the Senator I do not know.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator any information on that subject? Is this remedy exclusive in any workmen's compensation act now in existence in any of the countries of Europe?

Mr. CHILTON. I will say to the Senator that I can not definitely answer that question. The subject of it was discussed. I have no doubt that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] will supply that information later on. We know that in some of the countries it is not, because their systems are different. In most of the countries of Europe they have all the systems. As I understand it, they have an insurance system.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to take up the time of the Senator from West Virginia just now, because I intend to discuss that feature of the bill later along, and will undertake to point out to the Senate why it is advisable to put it in and why it is for the advantage of the employees themselves to put it in.

The Senator asks, however, whether or not the men who represented the organizations were in favor of this feature. I will answer——

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I was not asking that. I assume that they favor this feature, but the information I was seeking to get was this: The Senator from West Virginia had stated that these representatives of labor had been to Europe to investigate this system. Now, this is a provision which strikes me as objectionable, and I had assumed that in connection with their investigation in Europe the committee, in its interrogatories directed to these gentlemen, probably made the inquiry as to whether there was a similar provision in any of the labor-compensation acts of Europe. I do not know. I am asking for information, and only for information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think that these men who were in England reported specifically upon that feature of the English law. I do not recall whether they did or not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know that in England the remedy is not exclusive, but I supposed possibly it might be in some other countries, and I should like to examine their law, if the Senator can tell me what other countries or country makes the remedy exclusive, as proposed in this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Every country in Europe makes it exclusive, except England.

Mr. SIMMONS. In most of the other countries of Europe the railroads are owned by the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The law applies to other industries as well. It is not confined to railroads.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that all the other countries make it exclusive except England?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Every country in Europe except England; and in England, as I shall undertake to show, the provision for optional remedy practically amounts to nothing, because of the limitations placed upon it. Let me just call the attention of the Senator to the statement made by the head of the American Federation of Labor upon this very subject, in answer to the question:

> The CHAIRMAN. Do you mind my asking you one or two questions about these other features of the bill? I do not know whether you have thought about them. You have not told us what you think about the provision for making the law compulsory. Have you thought about that feature?
> Mr. GOMPERS. I should say that the law ought to be compulsory.
> The CHAIRMAN. That is, it ought to be a system complete in itself, excluding the common-law remedy and the common-law defenses?
> Mr. GOMPERS. I would rather see all who were injured and their dependents fairly cared for than to have one get a large verdict or a large amount and the remainder fritter away their time in litigation.

These men have talked about this feature. They have studied it.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the statement of W. G. Lee, which I have put in the RECORD, shows that they have considered this matter and they have answered the suggestions against it. I have not time to go into the constitutional argument, even if I considered myself competent to do so, but I can well recognize that after all has been said Congress could not make it optional to one side without making it optional to the other side of the controversy. That is the plain, homely way labor states it, and I believe that is about all there is in it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean to say all four of these gentlemen representing labor approve this provision of the bill making the remedy exclusive?

Mr. CHILTON. I can only say, Mr. President, that I have given what they said, exactly as they said it, have read to the Senate the language in which they indorsed it, have put the statement of Mr. Lee into the RECORD, and it is there for Senators to see.

Mr. SIMMONS. I asked the question because——

Mr. CHILTON. I do not think all of them did in terms agree as to that particular point, for I can not recall whether or not that point was presented to each one. But it is apparent that they could not indorse the bill without indorsing its exclusive-remedy provision.

Mr. SIMMONS. I asked the question because I was advised that they did not all agree to this provision of the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, I have not stated that they did.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know the Senator has not. I asked the Senator whether he meant to say——

Mr. OVERMAN. They have not all agreed to the bill or to its principle.

Mr. CHILTON. The record is here, and it is for each man to decide for himself.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator remembers Mr. Carter's statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair and obtain permission to interrupt. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Carter has rather disapproved of the bill, has he not? The Senator has read his statement, I understand.

Mr. CHILTON. I have not read it and know nothing about it except from statements made on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did not Mr. Garretson, for the conductors, insist before the commission that the bill ought to be made elective and that their present rights ought to be reserved?

Mr. CHILTON. At the last hearing Mr. Garretson—I can not recall all of it—but I think Mr. Garretson said the only objection he would suggest was that possibly some of the amounts agreed upon were not quite right; but of course all of us understand that they have been considerably advanced since that time by amendments, which have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When Mr. Garrettson first appeared before our committee to discuss this matter he said he thought we ought to make the law elective, because the men, when a thing was taken away from them, would always give it a fictitious value. While he himself apparently did not think it was of consequence, his position was that if it was taken away they would at once regard it as of fictitious value; but after the bill was framed and after the reasons were presented to him—and we did present them through the report of the commission—Mr. Garrettson very heartily assented to the proposition that the law ought to be made exclusive.

Mr. CHILTON. I must hurry on, Mr. President. Some criticism has been made here of the haste in regard to this legislation and the desire to vote at this time. I do not know how that strikes others, but to my mind the reasons given by the friends of this measure before the committee are most conclusive upon that point; and I want briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the reasons that lead me to conclude that it is my duty here to advocate haste in the disposition of this legislation.

There are by the figures, roughly speaking, from 85,000 to 90,000 men annually injured on railroads in the United States. I have the figures for 1907 and, I think, the number was given at 92,000. Do we realize that that means 7,500 of these men per month fall victims to our system; that it means 250 a day; that it means a little more than 10 every hour; or 1 every 6 minutes?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just to get this right——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator reading figures applicable alone to men engaged in interstate railroading or is he reading figures that apply to all persons injured upon railroads or are they applicable to all persons injured in every employment?

Mr. CHILTON. I am reading figures given by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] as applying to the men who are engaged in railroad employment.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. All railway employees.

Mr. CHILTON. All railway employees, as I understand—those who are employed on railroads, both State and interstate.

Mr. President, that means, going a little further, that since this bill was introduced, on February 20, there have been 37,500 casualties in railway employment. By those figures, since the bill was reported to the Senate, on the 3d day of April, there have been 8,250 of such casualties; and while the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] held the floor of the Senate discussing the bill 250 employees of the railroads were killed or injured.

Mr. REED. May I rise to remark, then, that the railroad managements of this country seem to be more reckless with their men than I have been with the time of the Senate?

Mr. CHILTON. I can never imagine the Senator from Missouri being reckless in anything. I take it that the judgment of mankind has convicted the railroads of being at least the victims of a craze for rapid transit and great tonnage. Unfortunately, that craze has made victims of unfortunate men who are not able to stand it; and that is why I am for this bill.

While the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] held the floor, as I make the calculation, there were 100 victims of the present system, more than half of whom can never have any compensation from any source under heaven.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I suppose he does not attribute any connection between the occurrence of these accidents and the delivery of the speeches. If so, the Senator himself, I presume, is contributing to that number right now.

Mr. CHILTON. I realize that.

Mr. BACON. But what I really wanted to ask the Senator was this——

Mr. CHILTON. I was just making a comparison or an illustration showing the reasons for prompt action.

Mr. BACON. If he thinks this bill is going to lessen that number of victims or would it lessen the compensation?

Mr. CHILTON. It will absolutely take every helpless human being from his present unfortunate position. That is why I am for this bill. Of course, Mr. President, I meant no reflection upon the Senators who have occupied the floor. It was their right; indeed, it was their duty to take the time of the Senate to present everything that can be urged to sustain their view, which I think they have done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator if he has any accurate statistics to show what proportion of the injured are injured exclusively by their own negligence or by accidents that could not have been provided against, and what proportion are injured who, under existing laws, could recover?

Mr. CHILTON. I have the same data that all Senators have. We all understand that under our system they can not be absolutely accurate—I make that concession—but I certainly insist that my deductions from those figures are as trustworthy as the deductions of the distinguished Senator from Georgia. We both have the same figures. I present my views as to what those figures mean and the direction in which they lead me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In answer to the question just asked by the Senator from Georgia, I will say that I have here a statement made by John H. Wallace, a member of the Industrial Insurance Commission of the State of Washington, in an address before the American Association for Labor Legislation in this city, December 28, 1911, in which he makes this statement—how accurate it is I do not know; I only give it for what it is worth—

> Able investigators have conclusively demonstrated that not to exceed 15 per cent of the men injured in work accidents could obtain compensation under the old system.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the old system. I was talking about the new system involved in the recently confirmed employers' liability act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think he includes that in his statement; I am unable to say; but I will say that he was contrasting it with the law as it existed before the compensation act of October 1, 1911, in the State of Washington.

Mr. CHILTON. The battle cry of modern progress is to put "the man above the dollar." To that I give my approval. Here I give it my vote whenever I can support it by a grant clearly made in terms in the Constitution, or reasonably implied, as necessary, in administering or carrying into the law another grant. In the matter before us there can be no doubt now of the power of Congress. This bill is admitted to be within the powers of Congress. That it will help more people than it can possibly hurt can not be successfully denied. According to the figures furnished by the junior Senator from Oregon, in 1897 there were more than 87 per cent of the injuries to railroad workmen for which there could be no relief. In other words, by those figures for that year there were 3,809 persons whose injuries were compensated in damages under existing law and 25,491 who could recover nothing. In 1907 there were 92,178 injuries and deaths from railroad accidents, or more than three times as many as in 1897. According to the figures of the Senator from Oregon, of these 92,178 killed and injured in 1907 less than 17 per cent could recover under existing law, or 15,600, while the other 76,578 would go without any redress whatever. By the figures of 1897 it is 29,300 men against the dollars of 3,809 and the railroads. By the figures of 1907 it is 92,178 men against the dollars of 15,600 and the railroads. It ought not to be hard to find on which side of that proposition is the dollar and on which side is the man.

But it has been argued that the estimated number of recoveries is too small, and I admit that the Oregon Senator's figures were taken from the statistics of Germany and that any calculation based on them is not accurate; but there is undoubted weight in the estimate of Mr. James Herrington, chairman of the employers' liability commission of Ohio, found on page 7 of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the House of March 15 and 26, 1912. He estimates that after giving the men the benefit of all so-called employers' liability acts there are 44 per cent of cases of injury and death that go without redress unless we pass some legislation of this kind. Reduced to the concrete case, that means that at best, with Federal and State liability acts, with jury trial, with the fellow-servant doctrine abolished, according to the figures for 1907, there are 40,000 helpless victims of man's vain effort to put the dollar above the man. Mr. President, much has been said and written in late years about "progressive legislation." Some of this legislation has been so branded or tagged without authority; but a laborer's compensation law, fairly and honestly adjusting the principle to the nature of the business and to the reasonable demands of the laboring man and to the dictates of humanity, comes nearer to being the genuine article than any that can be named. The National Civic Federation, labor organizations generally, political economists, all political parties, and many State legislatures have committed themselves to that principle of settling disputes, lessening litigation, and saving for the helpless the needless waste in witness fees, lawyers' charges, and other costs of litigation.

Suppose that an injured workman recovers $10,000, which is certainly above the average verdict. The fees to lawyers range from one-third of the recovery up to one-half. If one-third be paid, the injured man will receive $6,666, but he will likely be compelled to litigate the claim for years and will be subjected to expense and loss which he can never recover. In a case in which such a recovery as I have mentioned would be probable or even possible, the compensation under this act would so nearly approximate the net sum received by the man in his successful litigation that it could hardly be doubted that he would prefer the settlement fixed by the act in the first instance. But when the laboring man remembers that in accepting this act—and conceding for the argument that he gives up something—he is opening the door of opportunity to 40,000 equally as deserving brothers, he will gladly make the choice in favor of the principles of the pending bill. I object to the consideration of this important economic question from the standpoint of any individual. Any reform that undertakes to embrace over a million and a half men can not put all of them in the situation of the most fortunate any more than it should reduce all of them to the situation of the least fortunate. We are here adding many millions of dollars to the annual expenses of the railroads. To me that means nothing if by so doing I can sleep in the certainty that the 40,000 railroad employees who may be injured annually by causes that will not now entitle them to recover compensation, and their dependent children and wives, will be secure in a living. The increased charge upon the railroads and the possible diminution of verdicts for a few are counterbalanced by the good that will be done for the thousands who are now absolutely helpless.

Mr. President, I can not be made to believe that the officers and leaders of the national labor organizations of this country are so stupid or so untrustworthy as to treat lightly this most important subject. The representatives of these organizations seem to be most intelligent and much in earnest. They are not only in favor of the principle of this bill, but they ask us to pass this particular bill, and if a test shall disclose mistakes or injustices, they comprehend fully that it is easier to amend an act than it is to secure the first passage of the act involving the principle. We should view this effort of theirs to take the first step toward the rising sun largely from the standpoint of humanity. This country can not permit the thousands to become helpless in order to maintain doctrines that have been embalmed under the name of the common law. This statute, under the authority of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, admittedly strikes right and left at decisions, precedents, and the common law, but it preserves the jury, and it compensates every woman and child whose protector and support is rendered helpless. I have no criticism to make of others who have brought themselves to the conclusion that this is unwise legislation; but I warn the Senate that if we concede that the principle of this bill is right from the standpoint of both the man and the dollar, then I am unwilling to vote that organized labor is a farce and that every man who has appeared before the commission and the committee is begging us to pass a law that will be repudiated by the men in the organizations. Organized labor will be disorganized labor whenever the representatives of the people, in an honest effort to enact a principle into law, shall be blamed by the men for doing what the officers and representatives ask. I am not alarmed that organized labor will repudiate or disgrace the intelligent, sensible, earnest men who appeared at these hearings.

They were, in any company, able representatives who had given deep thought to the subject and were ready to discuss practically every phase of the situation. They are still insisting that this bill shall pass now. They are responsible to their organizations and to their members if they deceive us as to the attitude of those organizations; and I again warn those who insist upon appealing from the expressed wish of the representatives whose duty it is to inform us, to their future successors, that such a course involves serious consequences to those organizations. No greater injury could be done to organized labor than to have it said that its representatives here can not be depended upon. When we call upon organized labor and take it into our counsels upon a problem of economics and humanity, I shall not for slight cause presume to injure those representatives in the eyes of the world or in the estimation of their local lodges. Such a course to my mind would assume that their organization is both unreliable and ignorant. If we consult them as organizations we must do so under their rules and laws. I would hesitate a long time to encourage rebellion in their ranks, even if I had stronger reasons than have yet been submitted to sustain the idea that these representatives of labor have without sufficient information or designedly misrepresented to us the true attitude of their organizations. But this question is more far-reaching than organizations, it is more important than politics, it is bigger than the dollar.

It marks the awakened conscience of humanity, appealing for women, children, and the helpless. It is the cry of the heart that we are our brother's keeper, and that if we indulge the propensity for rapid transit and large tonnage, the soldiers who are killed and wounded in the fierce struggle must not be the only losers. The bill is a form of enforced insurance or a pension to the soldiers of interstate commerce. I have appealed to those soldiers to help me in my efforts to carry out a sincere plan to make the average of all better and more secure. They have answered with their approval of a plan that has been tried. I am willing, indeed glad, to be one of those who vote for this measure, and without reflecting upon those offering the many amendments, I have decided, as have those representatives, that most of the amendments pending will endanger the passage of the bill. The present bill, as amended by the committee, is, in my opinion, stronger and more likely to pass than it would be if amended in the particulars proposed. The bill is the result of long study and investigation. It has been practically agreed upon, as I understand, by the railroads and the representatives of the labor organizations. These representatives are not suspicious because the cry of humanity has been heard by the railroad officials. They do not, for that reason, question the correctness of the data that shows that it will be expensive to the railroads. Figures made before the railroads acquiesced are the same after the acquiescence.

In other words, this bill is satisfactory to both sides to a long contest for the principle which it enacts. Amendments, under these conditions, are dangerous, and for this reason, and not because I am personally opposed to some of the amendments, I shall vote against all the radical amendments. I want a laborers' compensation act passed at this session, and I agree with the representatives of labor here and with the petitions and letters received from my own State, without a single dissenting voice, that the bill as it is has the best chance of passage. For the sake of the thousands falling daily, to give hope to their dependent wives and children, and to atone for a mistake of civilization, this bill, in my humble judgment, should be passed with enthusiasm.

My known respect for the Senators opposing this bill and for those trying to amend it will be sufficient guaranty that no offense is meant when I assert that many of the arguments presented here are the same that have usually appeared when State legislatures have in the past undertaken to enact legislation of this kind. Many of them, if not all, were answered by the arguments before the committee. The difference between the standpoints of the two sides is that the bill's enemies can only point to a few cases in which the bill may reduce the recovery of the injured workman, whereas the friends of the measure give the facts and figures which prove that the measure will improve the condition of the railroad workmen as a class, will increase the aggregate sum which all the injured and their dependents will receive, and will bring about a condition that will leave not a single helpless victim of the tragedy of railroad operation, so far as it is in the power of Congress to deal with the subject.

The friends of the measure do not claim that it is perfect, but they do know that it is an improvement, that it is decided progress in the right direction. There would have been no interstate-commerce act, no antitrust law, no employers' liability law, no safety-appliance law, unless the friends of these progressive measures had in the start made concessions. So it is with this bill. The friends of the principle want Congress to make this substantial beginning and allow experience to perfect it. The overlooked rights of employer and employee, if any, and the effect of the principle upon both will develop. Congress can amend this law at the next session as easily as it can then pass another and different law.

Amazement has been expressed that a certain candidate for President has recently developed great strength among the masses. There is no mystery about it. It is because the people now believe that he will be potential in compelling action in matters that are alarming to the public mind. The people do not expect perfection of Congress, but they demand an honest effort. Those who oppose the candidate to whom I refer must do so by argument based upon facts. They can not defeat him with ridicule, for the people are in earnest about reforms that save life and limb as much as they are alarmed at the evidences of a "corner" in the productive energies, the money, and the credit of the country. Thoughtful men are concerned lest the pendulum swing too far, but these must understand now that the pendulum will swing, and the only way to prevent it from swinging too far is to see that reactionary efforts are not made to prevent it from swinging at all.

The public mind is now centered, as I believe, upon the passage of this bill, and I think that the greatest good to the greatest number can be accomplished by its passage, and that quickly.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am warmly for this bill, because I believe in its principle and I have believed in and advocated it for many years. Years ago I found myself arguing in favor of the change in public policy which it involves on the same side as Mr. Gompers and Mr. John Mitchell. In the joint subcommittee of the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses of Congress, which gave hearings upon the bill, I found my old and firm convictions reenforced by the approval of the thoughtful and experienced and able official representatives of three of the great organizations of railroad employees in the country, and by the accredited legislative representative of those organizations. And as an individual Senator, in part representing a State through which pass a considerable number of great lines of railroads essential to the interstate commerce of the country, I found my views supported with substantial unanimity by the expressions of opinion on the part of the railroad employees who are among my constituents.

I am for the measure, however, not because these constituents of mine or these representatives of labor are for it, but because I believe in it. I believe that the old system under which we have been running and under which the employees of our great industrial establishments have no recourse under the law when they are disabled by accidents incident to their employment, except a suit for damages against their employer, is a vicious system and based upon an erroneous view of the true relation of the employee to the employment.

It may well be, when one man employs another for a particular service, the question whether there will be an accident is beyond human foresight, and that the responsibility for the accident should be determined by an ascertainment as to whether it was caused by the negligence or fault of the one or the other. But in the great industrial organizations of our time we know beforehand that there will be a certain percentage of accidents, a certain percentage of loss of life and limb. It can be reduced under the doctrine of averages, and it is as certain as sunrise and sunset. The loss of life and limb is just as much an incident to a great railroad or to a great industry or to a great contracting business as is the breaking of tools or the wearing out of implements, and it should be regarded just as much a part of the expense of the business as the cost of replacing tools and machinery.

Therefore I believe that a measure of this kind is sound economically, and I know that it will be far better for the employees—and I think probably better for the employers—in all the great industrial enterprises of the country than the old method of accident suits. It is far better to give to the employee who is injured a fixed and definite compensation promptly, certainly, without the cost of employing lawyers and without incurring the gambling risk of being able to fix responsibility upon the employer, than it is to leave him in the hands of the lawyer, who may win or may lose, leave him to the delays of litigation for months or years, during which he must be without compensation, living upon credit, upon the most expensive credit, to come at the end possibly into a considerable sum and possibly into nothing, with the certainty that from 30 to 50 per cent of his problematical recovery will be taken for the costs and expenses of his litigation.

I believe the measure is a great constructive measure of progress. I believe it is a measure in recognition of the true interests of our self-governing people and the true interests of humanity. I believe it will be for the benefit not only of the laboring men, not only of the industrial organizations of which they are a part, but for the benefit of the whole people, all of whose interests must be conserved and advanced by a system under which justice is done.

Now, sir, as to this bill. The subject is a complicated one. It affects a great variety of employments; it affects a great variety of different conditions. All of us who have been interested in the subject have been observing for years the efforts made in the different States to draft measures which would give practical effect to the principle. We have seen that a very large number of the measures which have been devised have been defective, some in one way and some in another. All of them have been to some degree unsatisfactory.

Several years ago an effort was made to bring about action on the part of the National Congress for the enactment of a bill which might serve as a model for legislation throughout our various States. The difficulty of reaching a conclusion, and the difficulty of determining just what kind of provision was best adapted to secure the desired result, were so great that the only avenue toward progress in the desired direction appeared to everyone to be the selection of a commission which might really study the subject. And accordingly, two years ago in the coming month, such a commission was agreed to, composed of two Members of the Senate, two Members of the House, and representatives from outside of Congress of the two interests most directly to be affected and most familiar with the subject—Mr. Brown, the president of the New York Central, to represent one point of view and Mr. Cease, the editor of the leading organ of the railway trainmen, to represent the other point of view.

That commission exhibited most commendable industry and painstaking fidelity to their duty. They held long and numerous sittings, they heard testimony, they examined witnesses with a degree of interest and thoroughness and acumen which shows that there was nothing perfunctory in their idea of what they were appointed for. The representatives of the great railroads were examined, and the representatives of the great organizations of railway employees were examined, and representatives of organized labor generally, so every point of view was secured; and, as a result, the committee framed a bill, which was, in substance, the bill that is now before us, modified in some slight details, but in substance the bill that is now here.

An examination of the testimony shows that every paragraph of that bill was subjected to criticism and discussion; that it represents a conclusion reached upon the presentation of views on every side. The bill produced is a balanced bill. It is a bill which represents the unanimous judgment of the commission and which challenges the general assent of the people who represent all the different interests directly affected, not as perfect, but as the best measure which could be framed in view of the different ideas as to the probable workings of its provisions.

The estimates as to costs by the commission were, in round numbers, about these: That the present payments of the railroads by way of compensation for accidents are about $10,000,000 a year, and that the probable payments under the schedule made up by the commission for accidents would be about $15,000,000 a year. That was on the best testimony that the commission could secure, but it is very doubtful. Mr. Lewis, of Baltimore, the draftsman of the Maryland statute, was before the joint subcommittee of the two Houses, and he has given a large part of his life to this subject. He was himself a working miner in the coal mines, and while supporting himself by the work of his pick he studied law and became a lawyer, and he has devoted himself to the interests of his old associates. As I have said, he was the draftsman of the Maryland compensation law. Mr. Lewis said to our subcommittee that although the estimates upon the evidence before the commission showed that the cost to the railroads would probably be $15,000,000 a year as against the present cost of $10,000,000, in his judgment it would be nearer $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Since the bill was prepared by the commission we have added certain liberalizing amendments. We have provided that the payments shall continue to the children until they reach 16 years of age.

I simply wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if a man should be killed, leaving a widow and four children, one an infant child, one of 2 years, one of 4 years, and one of 6, at the end of the 8-year period there would be one child who would still live 2 years before the 16-year period was ended, one who would live 4 years, one 6, and one 8. To the four children for 2 years the payments at 50 per cent will continue; to three of them for another 2 years 45 per cent will continue; to two of these for another 2 years 35 per cent will continue; and to one, 25 per cent for another 2 years. If the Senator will make the computation he will find that the original maximum of $4,800 payable to the widow and children in case of death is therefore increased to $10,000, and as nearly as I can make the estimate we shall have increased the amount to be paid under this bill with these and other amendments to about $18,000,000 instead of $15,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. In giving the estimate as to the probable cost of this bill to the railroad companies, can the Senator from New York advise whether the changed condition of the Federal statute was taken into consideration? I refer to the act of 1908.

Mr. ROOT. I think in a general way it was, but it was impossible, of course, to have any data upon which any computation could be made.

The Senator from Utah has called my attention to the fact that a part of the time during which the data were taken the recent statute to which the Senator from Ohio referred was in force. The three years taken were 1908, 1909, and 1910. The act was passed in 1908. So the latter part of the time would carry that act into effect.

Mr. POMERENE. I was aware that the act is a very recent one, but in view of the fact that some of the States have similar statutes it occurred to me that some data may have been gathered, and it would have given a fair basis for computation.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as the Senator from Utah suggests to me, the results of the investigation by our national commission agree with the results of the investigations by the commissioners of the several States who have been considering the subject, and it shows a double basis.

After the commission had done its work and made its report, I think a little more than three months ago, the bill which the commission had prepared was introduced and it was referred to the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses. As the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has told us, in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate it was considered with very great care and at great length. The committee held many meetings in which, paragraph by paragraph, the provisions of the bill were discussed. When told that there were in one section of the country certain railway employees who had objections and who desired to be heard, an arrangement was made under which the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and the Judiciary Committee of the House appointed subcommittees to sit in joint session and hear whatever opposition there might be. Those subcommittees met, and the only opposition was a request from the representative of certain employees in the State of Georgia that action be postponed. There were also certain remarks made by some Congressmen in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. As I was present on the occasion, it is due to fact to say that while it is true, as stated by the Senator, that the direct application to the committee was limited to such request as he now mentions, it is also true that there were delegations here representing three of the four organizations, and that recalls a fact that I think the Senator overlooked, the fact that there was more than a request by one of the representatives. I think that was the Senator's statement. Was it not?

Mr. ROOT. That was my statement, according to my recollection. If I am wrong, I shall be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. BACON. A Representative in Congress, the Senator means, I presume.

Mr. ROOT. My statement was, or I intended it to be, and I think it was, that a representative of certain labor organizations in the State of Georgia appeared and requested a postponement.

Mr. BACON. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ROOT. And that was the only opposition from any labor people; but there were also some Members of Congress who appeared and spoke in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is correct absolutely in that. I want to make the additional statement, however, that there were representatives here from three out of the four great organizations, who came from the State of Georgia, who did not appear before the committee, but who did come to me personally and to my colleague and certain Representatives in Congress, and laid their matters before us and them, in which they not only desired postponement, but they were absolutely opposed to the measure. They did not appear before the subcommittee upon the statement which they made to us that they could not do so with safety; that the rules and regulations were such that if they did appear personally they would endanger their membership in their organizations and endanger even the charter of their suborganizations, and while they went with us to the door they would not go inside the room on that account.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Being on the committee, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROOT. I will.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will state that when we called a meeting I was very much surprised to see not the people there who were protesting against it, but leaders who had been before the joint committee asking for this legislation, to wit, Mr. Garrettson, Mr. Wills, and Mr. Lee. When I went to the committee, I did find a delegation from my State. I asked them in, but they said they could not go in. The spokesman said he could not go in; he had been notified that if he appeared there to protest against the bill he would be dismissed from the order and lose his charter.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am glad to have my statement of what appeared before the committee corroborated by the Senators from Georgia and North Carolina. What occurred in private between them and any of their constituents, of course, I can not know, but it would not be strange if constituents of theirs had expressed themselves precisely in accordance with the statements now made. Many years ago I had the great pleasure of knowing very well that very distinguished patriot and statesman, Mr. Samuel J. Tilden. I remember once in conversation with him he made a statement to me and said, "Nobody can dispute that," and he instantly caught himself and said, "No; I take that back. You put any hundred men in a room and make any proposition on earth to them, and you will find somebody who will dispute it."

Now, of course, with a measure of this description, which is a balanced measure, a measure taking into consideration views upon both sides and upon a variety of sides, a complicated subject, and which seeks to do what seems most wise upon consideration of all the testimony and all the argument, it is impossible that such a measure should not find opposition from some one who looks at it from only one side and in the light of one set of assumed facts and one set of arguments.

But, Mr. President, the fact remains that the men who are charged by these great employees' organizations with the duty of attending, listening to the testimony, and hearing the arguments, and carefully scanning, with a critical spirit and full knowledge of the conditions, every paragraph of the proposed legislation, in order to see that the interests of their constituents are not sacrificed—the fact remains that those men are in favor of this legislation.

I can well understand that opposition should be stirred up to a measure of this kind by representations as to the character of the measure made by persons who, in perfect sincerity and good faith, but looking from one side only of the subject, consider that the measure ought to be different. I can well understand, sir, that gentlemen who have been engaged in extensive and long-continued practice as lawyers in the prosecution of damage suits against railway companies should have acquired an attitude which leads them, with perfect sincerity, to oppose the bill. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] was so frank as to avow in the Senate in the course of his remarks the other day that he had enjoyed a long and extensive experience in prosecuting damage suits against railway companies, and he said to us that that was his principal business. I do not wonder that he has acquired an attitude which leads him, with perfect sincerity, to think that this is a bad bill.

But, Mr. President, while I do not doubt the gentlemen who are now opposing the bill from the lawyer's standpoint have rendered honest and faithful service to their clients, let me say to them that, in my mind, upon the basis of long experience and observation, the great advantage of the bill is that it relieves the laboring people of our country from dependence upon the class of lawyers who have fattened upon their misfortunes, and it substitutes the certainty of reasonable compensation without the necessity of paying a large part of it to a lawyer for the gambler's risk that every poor fellow who is hurt now takes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator, as one who has had experience on both sides of this question, and a very considerable one, that the railroad men in Georgia do not agree with the distinguished Senator. I presume there has been about as much in the way of litigation in Georgia on this subject as in any other State; and, as I said, I speak from knowledge of both sides of this question, having represented both sides very considerably; and so far as I know, in that large State, with very much more than the average railroad mileage compared with other States, there is, so far as my information goes, absolute unanimity in the thousands and tens of thousands of employees in that State in the position that they will be damaged by this bill, and that they are better under the system as it will certainly exist under the present law. So, while the Senator is very emphatic in his view as to what is the interest of these men, he is opposed by their own opinion in regard to that matter, and unanimously so, in my State.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not doubt that the attitude of the railroad men in Georgia is due to the superior character of the bar of that State, which we should naturally infer from the representatives we see here in the Senate. But sometime, even as against that beneficent control, the gospel of freedom will be preached in Georgia and the railway men there will be awakened to the true interests of their calling, as the railway men, 90 per cent of them, over the whole country have already been awakened.

Mr. BACON. Without interrupting the Senator further on that line, if he will permit me, I will say, so far as my information goes, every railroad in the State is in favor of this proposed legislation and every employee against it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the fact that the railroads were in favor of the legislation would not prejudice me against it.

Mr. BACON. No; it would not me either.

Mr. ROOT. But I will say that while I suppose that I should have been as likely to hear from railroads as anybody, because there are many in the State of New York, and I have personal acquaintances with the managers and officers of many of them, friendship of many years with many of them, not a single representative of any railroad has ever communicated to me on the subject of this measure. But I have here, sir, a lot of communications from the railroad employees, and I beg to ask the Senate's attention to them—I hope not too tediously:

A telegram from Division 418 of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Mechanicsville, N. Y., desiring my support for this bill.

A telegram from Division 421 of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Buffalo, N. Y., desiring my support.

A telegram from Division 152, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, located at Oswego, N. Y., desiring my support.

A similar telegram from Division 59 of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Albany.

A similar telegram from Division No. 14, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Utica.

A similar one from Subdivision 58, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Oneonta.

A similar one from Division 15, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Buffalo.

A similar one from Division 641, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Hornell. It says:

> Comprising 100 members, unanimously request you to use your influence and please support Senate bill 5382, known as Federal compensation bill, as it is of vital importance to us.

Another from Harlem Division 783, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Harlem, N. Y.

Another from D. F. Wait Lodge, of Railroad Trainmen, representing 800 men. They say:

> We urge upon you to use your best efforts to further the advancement of Senate bill 5382. We heartily approve of same and trust that your efforts for its passage will meet with success.

Another from Parlor City Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Binghamton, to the same effect.

Another from Schenectady:

The undersigned, representing nearly 600 men employed in railway service, respectfully urge you to lend your favorable assistance toward the passage of Senate bill 5382. Our membership is more interested in this bill than in any proposed legislation in many years.

Another from Lodge 829, of Railroad Trainmen in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Another from Walton Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, to the same effect.

Another from Lodge 186 of Railroad Trainmen saying:

Our membership—307—earnestly solicit your support for the passage of Federal workmen's compensation bill, No. 5382.

A letter from the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Division 41, at Elmira, N. Y., saying:

I have been instructed to write to you in behalf of Division 41, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and request you to support the Federal accident compensation bill.

From the W. C. Hayes Division, No. 732, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Port Jervis, N. Y., saying:

The members of W. C. Hayes Division, No. 732, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at their meeting held April 12, 1912, directed me in their behalf to urge your support of the measure known as the workmen's compensation act introduced by Senator SUTHERLAND (No. 5382).

Another from Syracuse, N. Y., saying:

At a regular meeting of this division, held April 7, 1912, the following action taken, that we ask you to give your support to help the passage of Senate bill 5382.

That was from the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Another from Electric City Division, No. 382, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Buffalo, asking support of this bill; another from Albany Division, No. 46, asking support for it; another from Champlain Division, No. 217, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, saying:

We earnestly believe the proposed law a most meritorious piece of legislation, and we trust it will receive your assistance.

Another from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen in Utica, saying:

The above-named lodge would like you to favor the Federal accident compensation bill introduced by Senator SUTHERLAND.

A letter from Watervliet, N. Y., saying:

Being one of your constituents and a railroad man for a number of years and a member of Trojan Lodge, No. 90, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and having heard Senate bill 5382, introduced by Senator SUTHERLAND, discussed on several different occasions, I believe the bill, if made a law, would be beneficial to all concerned, as it would stop the waste of money under the present system.

I have traveled quite a few hundred miles in the past four months in different States and have heard railroad men generally discuss the bill and they all favor it.

I believe your support of this bill would be appreciated by the working people of your State.

Another from Trojan Lodge, No. 90, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, at Troy, asking me to do everything in my power to secure the passage of the bill, and saying:

As at our previous meetings the bill was read and freely discussed. There were at this meeting 317 members, who unanimously instructed me to make the above request.

You will perceive, sir, that this letter from Trojan Lodge, No. 90, shows that the bill was up for consideration and was discussed at successive meetings, and that as the result of those successive discussions the 317 members voted unanimously, requesting that the bill be passed.

Another from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at Albany, saying:

We, as the representatives of a membership of 10,000 trainmen in the State of New York, do most earnestly request you to use your best efforts in securing a favorable report from the committee and the passage of the bill through the Senate.

Another from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of Newburgh to the same effect; another from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at Rochester, saying:

We, the president and secretary, on behalf of Genesee Lodge, No. 289, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, which has a membership of 198 citizens of the State of New York, wish to take this opportunity to respectfully urge upon you, and through you the Senate of the United States, to use your influence and vote in an effort to have the pending employers' liability and workmen's compensation bill enacted as a law. The statements of our grand president, Brother Lee, we hope have convinced you that there is need of such a bill without any reiteration of those statements from us; but as we are on the ground and almost daily come in contact with these cases, namely the robbery of the corporations who employ us, as well as the needy and sometimes destitute families of the killed or injured, by these shyster law firms and lawyers. We therefore have personal knowledge that there is need for such legislation.

Another, from G. M. Hallstead Division, No. 434, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, to the same effect; another, from the Locomotive Engineers of Rensselaer Subdivision, No. 752, to the same effect; another, from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, No. 18, at Rochester, asking support of this bill; another, from Thomas Dickson Division, No. 171, Order of Railway Conductors, saying:

The railroad men for years have fought, worked, and died in their endeavor for such legislation as is covered by Senate bill 5382.

We need the protection that this law would give us. May we not hope for your support of the measure?

This organization is unanimously in its favor and are confident that while railroad companies are compelled to give us this protection they will not, in the aggregate, be great sufferers as against present methods under existing laws.

Another, from Corning Lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, saying:

As treasurer of Corning Lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, I ask you to lend your assistance toward the passage of Senate bill No. 5382. I know our membership generally is more heartily in favor of this legislation than in any bill that has been proposed in several years.

Another, from the Empire City Lodge, No. 167, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, to the same effect; another, from Watertown, N. Y., from the members of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Lodge No. 48, saying:

The members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of Watertown Lodge, No. 480, are specially desirous that the Federal workingmen's compensation bill be passed, and ask you to lend your assistance toward the passage of the said bill (S. 5382). Our membership generally are more interested in the passage of this bill than any that has been proposed for a number of years.

Another from Binghamton Division, No. 154, Order of Railway Conductors, saying:

At a regular meeting of Binghamton Division, No. 154, Order of Railway Conductors, a resolution was unanimously adopted that it is the sentiment of this division that they are in favor of the bill introduced in the Senate as S. 5382.

Another from the Frontier City Division, No. 167, of the Order of Railway Conductors, to the same effect; another from the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen at Mechanicsville, N. Y., to the same effect; another from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Now or Never Lodge, No. 517, saying:

NOW OR NEVER LODGE, No. 517,
BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
April 7, 1912.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Senate bill 5382, known as the workmen's compensation bill, introduced by Mr. SUTHERLAND, of Utah, is now before the branch of the Legislature of which you are a member for consideration.

I represent Lodge 517 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, composed of 592 members, all of whom work on the Long Island Railroad. We are more interested in this legislation than in any bill which has been introduced for many years and are very anxious that it should become a law.

If this bill is passed the men who are injured while working will receive damages to an amount fixed by law. There will be no necessity of expensive and tiresome litigation. The injured men or their families will not be compelled to accept what they are offered by the company in whose employ they were injured, because they have not the means of securing just compensation through a lawsuit.

I hope you will view the passage of this bill favorably.

Another from the Champlain Division of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at Whitehall, N. Y., to the same effect.

Mr. LODGE. Would it interrupt the Senator for me to make a suggestion at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to say, Mr. President, that I have had a great many letters and telegrams of precisely the same character as those read by the Senator from New York. I had some of them printed on the 16th of April in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. One of the first is from Mr. H. H. Wilson, who was chairman of the legislative board of the Locomotive Engineers in my State. I know him very well personally. Two years ago he was badly injured when on duty on his locomotive by an explosion of steam, but he managed to bring his train in safely without injury to anyone else. I mention that because he is a man who has been through a serious accident.

In the same way I know very well the man who represents the legislative board of conductors in Massachusetts, and he also writes a letter on the subject. The communications from those men, Mr. President, and all the other letters that I have read and have had printed with them show that those men know exactly what this bill is and that they know exactly what they are talking about. They discuss the details of the bill; they are anxious for the establishment of the principle which the bill contains; and as we have been speaking about the feeling in the different States, I have received scores of letters and telegrams from men of that character, thoroughly informed as to the subject, while I have not received one syllable of opposition from any railroad man in my State.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to supplement what the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has said on this branch of the subject by saying that I have received numerous telegrams from my State, not only from individual employees of the railroad companies, but from organizations, and that I have received just one telegram in opposition to the bill.

I want to say, in addition, that I favor this bill because I believe it to be just and fair in principle. Whether the details will all work out justly and fairly will have to be determined by putting it in operation. I am not supporting it alone because the railroad employees of my State have asked it, but because the bill appeals to my own judgment, and I am not going to hold them responsible for the mistake, if there is any mistake, in enacting it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from California has stated much better than I have been able to state the precise attitude which I occupy toward this proposed legislation. It is not because these constituents of mine, to whose communications I have referred, ask for it, but it is because I believe the bill to be wise and just, and their communications confirm me in my belief that it is wise and just, that I am for the bill.

I know many of these men, Mr. President. I know that there is no more intelligent set of men in this country than the railroad trainmen, the railroad conductors, and the locomotive engineers, from whom these communications come. Let nobody make the mistake of supposing that they do not understand their business, of supposing that they have called for the passage of a bill without having given most careful, thorough, and intelligent consideration as to the effect it is going to have upon them and their families. There is nothing stereotyped about these communications. No manufacturer ever studied a tariff law to determine whether he would be for it or against it with greater solicitude and greater intelligence than have these men studied this measure. When I find the members of these organizations, scattered all over the country, employed on a dozen different railroads, expressing the same conclusions which the heads of their organizations have expressed and which their legislative representative has expressed, I feel pretty confident that I have not made any mistake in my judgment that this measure is a wise one for the labor side of the interest involved.

Mr. President, as to the make-up of the bill, it is a difficult thing to draft a bill that will be just, and it is an easy thing to destroy a bill that relates to a complicated subject and involves delicate adjustment. I do not say that any amendment of which we have notice, that any amendment that will be offered, will be for the purpose of defeating this bill, but I do say that any bill that involves a complicated and delicate adjustment like this can be defeated by amendment. I do say that the offering of numerous amendments to a bill of delicate adjustment is a most common and ordinary method of defeating such a bill. I do say that this bill can not be made over successfully on the floor of the Senate or on the floor of any legislative body. Its provisions to be effective and just must be carefully and deliberately studied in committee, and I do say that there is only one way for those who are in favor of putting the principles of this bill into our statutes to accomplish that purpose, and that is to stand by this bill as it is and to prevent its being torn to pieces by amendment. For that reason I shall vote against the amendments which have been proposed and which are to be proposed, except in so far as they commend themselves to the judgment of the gentlemen who have studied this bill week after week and month after month and who are familiar with all the balancing considerations which have led to the present adjustment.

I believe that the true dictate of wisdom for all persons who can be affected by this legislation is expressed in an article in the Railroad Trainman, the organ of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in the issue for May of the present year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the editor of that magazine, who is an old railroad man himself, was a member of the commission.

Mr. ROOT. Precisely so. The editor is Mr. D. L. Cease, who was a member of the commission representing the labor point of view. This article says:

> The chief purpose of the commission, and we believe of the thinking members of the railroad organizations, is to secure the enactment of the law and the establishment of its principles by our courts. Afterwards, if the amounts are found to be inadequate, it will then be within the province of the railway employees of this country to amend the law and abolish objectionable features that may be found and increase the amounts provided in the proposed law.

I suppose he means it will be within their province to ask Congress to amend the law.

The attitude of the American Federation of Labor, as exhibited in their official organ, the American Federationist, for May, 1912, is in substance the same. They say:

> The House Committee on the Judiciary ordered the Howland bill—

The Howland bill is a bill of the same character, relating to Government employees generally—

> ordered the Howland bill favorably reported out of committee on April 11. This is a very fortunate circumstance, and will be instrumental in obtaining a uniform basis of benefits for Government employees and for employees of common carriers, and while it may be said that the scale of benefits are, comparatively speaking, small, yet the fact remains that this scale is greater than that provided by any of the State laws or by any of the laws in vogue in foreign countries, and if it is found that the scale of benefits are too low they can be increased at a future date by amendment to the act.

So, Mr. President, if it appears that the estimates of cost to the railroad companies are not substantiated by experience under the law, the law can be modified to conform to the actual facts as they are ascertained. At present the important thing for every man who believes in substituting this new system for the old, vicious, wasteful system under which we have been living is to pass this bill as it is, exhibiting, as it does, the best judgment and the most painstaking inquiry and thought of our own associates, with all the assistance that it was possible to get in our country—to pass this bill and depend upon the experience under the bill to determine what modification, if any, it may require.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I shall vote for the pending bill, first, because it accords with the convictions of many years regarding the best method of establishing industrial peace between the railroad corporations and their employees, and, second, because as a measure of peace it has received the support of the organizations of railroad employees in my State and, I believe, throughout the country. I have received many telegrams and communications from officials and members of various railroad organizations in my State regarding this bill, and all urge its adoption as the most important measure that has been produced affecting the interests of railroad employees. I have not received a single communication protesting against it. I ask leave of the Senate to insert in the RECORD some of these telegrams and communications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The letters and telegrams referred to are as follows:

In behalf of Division 794, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, I earnestly request that you use all honorable means to have the workmen's compensation bill become a law.

Yours, truly,

DEATH VALLEY LODGE, No. 781,
BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Las Vegas, Nev., April 2, 1912.

Hon. F. G. NEWLANDS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After years of agitation and strenuous effort on the part of labor organizations to secure an equitable workmen's compensation law through Congress, a bill has at last been introduced in the Senate as S. 5382, by Senator SUTHERLAND, and in the House as H. R. 20487, by Mr. BRANTLEY.

This bill, coming up at the next session of Congress, will no doubt meet with strong opposition and protest on the part of railroad companies, and in order to become a law will need true and loyal support to watch and push its progress.

Mr. NEWLANDS, you have during your stay in the Senate shown fair and courteous treatment to the man who labors and toils for a living. This bill is of vital importance to us, and, with this one object in view, I write to you to investigate same, and hope you will intercede in its behalf and favor so as to become a law.

Will you kindly acknowledge receipt of this letter, and oblige?

J. S. ROBERTS,
Secretary, Box 32.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I remarked that this bill accords with my convictions long entertained. Six years ago I offered in the Senate a bill for the national incorporation of the great systems of interstate railways. In that bill I endeavored to shape just provisions relating to the stockholders, the shippers, and the employees of the railway systems. One important provision of that bill—the most important in addition to the one providing for a board of conciliation—was the provision for an accident and insurance fund for the employees of the great interstate railway systems. It provided that 1 per cent of the gross receipts of the interstate railways should go into a fund in the Treasury for the payment of allowances to employees who were disabled, either by accident or old age, and provided that the Interstate Commerce Commission should establish the rules and regulations under which relief from this fund should be given.

In advocating this national incorporation bill in a speech, delivered April 4 and 5, 1906, I said:

A national incorporation act should also provide for an insurance fund. We all know that in every State in the Union the employees of railroads are pushing legislation fixing the liability of corporations for injuries to employees, even though caused by the negligence of fellow employees. There is constant warfare between the railroads and their employees upon this question, and it is another fruitful source of the activity of railroads in politics. In order to protect themselves, they are omnipresent in all the legislatures of the country upon this subject. It seems to me that we should frankly recognize such liability as a charge upon the transportation of the country. There should be a fund created to aid those employees who are disqualified for active service by accident or old age by providing that the national corporations should pay into the National Treasury 1 per cent of their gross receipts, which, under the present system, would amount to about $20,000,000 annually.

This fund should be invested by the Interstate Commerce Commission in interest-bearing securities, and the Interstate Commerce Commission should frame rules and regulations with regard to its payment to the employees disqualified either by age or by accident. This $20,000,000 would not be taken from the profits of the stockholders, but would be imposed upon the commerce of the country as part of the operating expenses of the companies. In this way we would do much to relieve the present hostility between the corporations and their employees regarding this matter, and we would do much to protect the men who are engaged in this public service of an extra hazardous character.

Later on in 1906, when an amendment to the bill to regulate interstate commerce was offered, relating to employers' liability, I announced that I would favor the amendment, but that I regarded all legislation relating to contributory negligence, the negligence of a coemployee, and to employers' liability as a brutal way of dealing with the entire subject. In that speech I went on to say:

When an employee is injured he must commence a suit against the railroad company. He must employ a lawyer, to whom he gives an agreement entitling him probably to 50 per cent of the judgment. Railroads make a business of contesting almost all these cases, for they fear if they do not they will be subjected to infinite litigation.

* * * * * * *

I can understand how a railroad, as a matter of settled policy, would contest these cases, for oftentimes the suits are exaggerated as to the amount claimed; the services of unscrupulous lawyers are obtained; a popular prejudice is aroused; and as a result of this system, the railroads often feel themselves compelled to defend all cases lest the settlement of one would only be an invitation for the commencement of another. So, also, when a man is killed, his representatives are compelled to sue, and they go through the same long and weary process, failing in proper relief to the employee or his representatives, and resulting largely in vexation and harassment to the corporation.

I believe that the Congress of the United States, in dealing with interstate commerce, should recognize the hazardous nature of the occupation, should recognize these injuries as incident to the occupation, and should provide a pension and insurance fund by these corporations which will automatically take care of these cases and relieve the courts of their determination.

In another part of this speech I urged that the charge should not be imposed in whole or in part either on the employees or the shareholders of the corporation, but that it should be frankly imposed upon the transportation of the country as one of the expenses of operation.

Later on, in 1908, the question of compensation for injuries to Government employees came up, and with reference to that subject I said:

I have to say on that subject that I regard any amendment to this bill which will turn over the liability of this Government to an employee for injuries received to the determination of a court of justice really inflicts a cruelty upon such employee. I can imagine an ideal administration of justice without delay, without expense to the litigant, but unfortunately we have not such ideal conditions for the administration of justice; and to give an employee a mere right to bring a lawsuit is no substantial relief. We all know how such lawsuits are conducted; that the injured employee is usually without funds to pay an attorney; that he is oftentimes compelled to make a contingent arrangement with an attorney, and is oftentimes obliged to divide with him the amount of a possible judgment. Oftentimes at the end of the litigation the injured employee will receive little or nothing, the entire judgment being absorbed in counsel fees and the expenses of litigation.

In addition to that is the hardship of delay, more demoralizing to an employee than anything that can be conceived of, for, relying upon a possible realization of a judgment, he is likely to neglect his business, and thus he becomes a mere expectant of fortune, abandoning his occupation for the chance of a future realization.

And in another place in this speech I said:

The occupation is a hazardous one. The service is paid for by the public, and there is no reason why the public should not pay a charge in proportion to the hazard of the occupation, that charge to go into an insurance funds for the compensation of the employees.

I have not as yet been able to secure consideration by the Senate of this national incorporation bill to which I have referred, but I hope that some day that bill or the provisions of that bill will be substantially incorporated in the law. I should have preferred the method pointed out by that bill of dealing with this subject. I should have preferred that 1 per cent should be levied upon the gross receipts of all the railway companies for this purpose. At the time the bill was introduced 1 per cent of the gross receipts would have been about $20,000,000. To-day 1 per cent of such gross receipts would amount to $27,000,000 annually. I would prefer to turn over the administration of such a fund to the Interstate Commerce Commission, under rules and regulations provided by it, for that commission would have an easy and informal way of conferring with the different railway organizations of the country, and could from time to time make such readjustment and reapportionment of the allowances made under it as would be just according to existing conditions.

One fault I have to find with this proposed act is that it will be difficult hereafter to make any amendment to any of the provisions, for such an amendment would require careful inquiry before the committees of both Houses and the action of Congress. I think it would be much better to leave such matters to the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the reason that that commission is gaining a constantly increasing knowledge of the problems that relate to transportation, and that all these problems are interrelated in determining the question of the reasonable charge. I believe that the commission should have control not only of the rate making, but of all the factors that relate to rate making, such as the determination of stock and bond issues, the valuation of the roads, the allowance for operating expenses, including allowances made to disabled employees, and how that they should above all have control over the great question of conciliation between the railroads on the one hand and the employees upon the other.

But, Mr. President, whilst I would prefer the method of adjusting these matters which I have suggested, I regard the bill which has been presented and which has the support of the railroad organizations as a vast improvement upon existing law, and I shall, therefore, support it as a measure intended to promote industrial peace and to produce more harmonious relations between the railroads and their employees than those which have hitherto obtained.

I must confess, Mr. President, that I am somewhat embarrassed regarding some of the amendments which have been introduced to this bill, amendments which by themselves I would be disposed to favor, in so far as they increase the allowances made for certain disabilities provided for by this bill. But I am conscious of the fact that this is a bill of nice adjustment, and that it is extremely difficult in a body of this kind, of such large membership, to produce the readjustments that will maintain the general harmony and proportion of the bill.

The bill does not cover disability caused by long service and old age and does not in its entirety carry sufficient money. I think that at least 1 per cent of the gross receipts of the corporations should be devoted to the humane purposes of guarding against disability caused either by accident or old age, and 1 per cent would be $27,000,000 annually, judged by the present receipts, instead of $18,000,000 carried by this bill. But I am conscious of the fact that if each Member of the Senate should seek to insert in the bill his individual convictions as to a particular compensation or as to a particular disability, serious disharmony may be produced which may imperil or delay the measure.

So far as the communications which I have received are concerned, not one suggests an amendment. The bill as framed is recommended by the labor leaders. A representative of the railway employees organizations was a member of the commission that framed it. I shall therefore feel content, unless some amendment is offered which I regard as of overwhelming importance, not to destroy the general proportion and adjustment of this bill. I shall vote against recommitting the bill to the Judiciary Committee or any postponement of its consideration such as has been proposed. It is late in the session, and as the tariff, the appropriation bills, and other important measures are pressing, delay may imperil action at this session. The bill will go from this body to the House of Representatives. Doubtless the very able, searching, and thorough discussions which it has been our good fortune to listen to will go to the entire country, will be considered by the officials of the railroad organizations, will be debated in these railroad organizations themselves, and later on in the House committee there will be opportunity for some expression from them upon this important subject. All that I can say, from the communications which I have received from these organizations and their members thus far, is that they regard the principle as so essential and so immediately important that they would not welcome any advocacy of changes that would imperil the bill or even delay it. And so, Mr. President, my inclination will be not to vote for any of the amendments offered to this bill, however meritorious I may regard them individually.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STONE. Before my colleague proceeds, I will ask permission to have read, in the nature of a preface to his remarks, a letter which I received this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ANCHOR LODGE, No. 54,
BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Moberly, Mo., May 4, 1912.

Hon. W. J. STONE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Anchor Lodge, No. 54, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, at Moberly, Mo., May 2, 1912, the lodge considered House bill, known as employees' liability and compensation bill. This lodge represents 250 engineers and firemen.

The lodge voted unanimously their disapproval of this bill in its present form, and instructed the secretary to respectfully request both United States Senators and our Representative in Congress to oppose this bill. There has been an effort to convince the labor organizations of the country that this measure is in the interests of labor, and to conceal the real results of the passage of such a law, especially, that it deprives injured employees of the constitutional right of a trial by jury, and deprives him of the benefits of all existing laws.

First. We are opposed to any repeal of the Federal employees' liability act now in force and recently held valid by the United States Supreme Court.

Second. We are opposed to any bill that deprives employees of their right to try their cases in State courts, or that deprives us of a right to a jury trial.

Third. We are opposed to the extension of Federal jurisdiction over the railroad employees. We are opposed to the appointment of Federal adjusters or Federal physicians to determine controversies.

Fourth. We are opposed to the unreasonable limitations upon the amount of recovery.

Fifth. We recognize that there are many provisions of the law whose interpretations and efforts can not be foreseen. It would throw the whole matter in a state of chaos.

Sixth. We do not know, and doubt whether any lawyer knows whether the bill would be constitutional at all or not. We are opposed to experiments that might deprive us of any recovery at all for years.

Seventh. We denounce the measure as it stands as a railroad measure, designed to deprive us of the fruits of many years battle for a fair liability legislation.

We believe that mostly, if not all, labor organizations who have indorsed this measure have done so under false representation. When once the provisions of this bill are understood, especially that it is exclusive of any other remedy, State or Federal, no one can support it except through a disposition to lessen liability.

The members of this lodge are watching with interest the debate upon this bill, and will appreciate all effort to defeat it.

Very respectfully,

[SEAL.] R. L. MAXWELL.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. I have several amendments which I propose to offer before the vote is taken, and now take advantage of the courtesy extended to me by the Senator from Missouri to explain the amendments. I propose to offer three amendments, whose aim is to extend the period of limitation fixed by this act from six months to two years.

Those amendments propose to strike out the words "six months," in line 21, on page 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "two years"; on page 21, line 20, strike out "six months" and insert "two years"; and on page 22, line 1, strike out "one year" and insert "two years."

Then again, on page 29, section 20 of the bill provides that the monthly wage shall be considered as 26 times—the established day's pay prevailing in the business of his employer for the class of service for which such employee was receiving pay.

Now, in each class of service men are drawing different wages, and it seems to me it would be more fair to take the wage the man himself was receiving, and if injured or killed that the compensation should be based upon the salary he was receiving, irrespective of the salary received by the particular class to which he belongs.

Again, on page 20, section 22, I offer an amendment to strike out the words "such injured employee," page 37, line 1, and insert in lieu thereof "an employee entitled to compensation under clause E of section 21." I do that for the reason that it is not stated in this bill whether the employees there intended to be cared for are those suffering from a partial disability or from total disability. I understood the Senator from Utah to construe that provision as applying only to employees suffering from partial disability.

It was the contention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that the language "such injured employee," as appears in section 22, would be applicable to those suffering from total disability as well as to those suffering from partial disability. It was the intention of both the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Georgia that it should not apply to those suffering from total disability, and this amendment simply makes that certain.

Then, again, on page 38 of the bill, I will offer an amendment to strike out lines 9 to 14, which read as follows:

Second. By deducting from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death, which, if the accident had immediately resulted in death, the employer, by reason of the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in clause (A) of section 21, would have been relieved from making.

I shall move that amendment for the reason that it seems, when you have taken and computed the amount which dependents would have received if death had been immediate, and taken from that amount the amount which the employee himself had received, in justice there should be no further deduction from the total amount to be allowed to the dependents.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DAVIS. I did not know the Senator from Missouri has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. REED. Did the Senator from Arkansas want to put in some telegram?

Mr. DAVIS. I have here just a couple of telegrams that I wanted to offer.

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not care to have them read, but merely printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 4, 1912.

Senator JEFF DAVIS,
Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Just read extracts from your speech delivered in Senate yesterday in opposition to proposed workmen's compensation bill and heartily concur with you in the objections you set forth. Have made careful analysis of proposed bill and have before me concise report of the commission that drafted bill, also President Taft's special message recommending its passage. I trust that it will meet its Waterloo next Monday if vote is taken. Large majority of well-informed railway employees that have given this bill careful consideration in this vicinity have repudiated its entirety.

W. E. PEARSALL.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 6, 1912.

Senator JEFF DAVIS, Washington, D. C.:

Railroad men in Arkansas are practically in unit against employees' compensation bill. Our orders have wired CLARKE and other Senators.

LEE FARRABEE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not intend to take much time, but before this debate closes it seems to me one or two matters ought to be cleared up. In the first place, I protest against the doctrine advocated by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] that the employees of railways should be put upon the same basis as the machinery and rolling stock of the road. I do not concur in the idea that the flesh and blood engaged in railway transportation shall be thus regarded and treated. I do not believe that modern legislation has advanced to that point where human beings can be placed in the same category with inert matter. I do not assent to that doctrine because it is inhuman and revolting to every sense of right and to every sentiment of the heart.

But if we were to eliminate the humane thought we would, nevertheless, not be able to justify that kind of argument, because the rolling stock and the roadbed have no legal rights to be affected, while the great mass of men coming within the purview of the present bill have legal rights both at common law and under the statutes of the United States and of the several States.

This bill has to be approached from some other standpoint than the one advanced by the Senator from New York. We must understand, to begin with, that we are not only dealing with human beings, but we are dealing with the legal rights of those human beings, and that the first proposition contained in this bill is to deprive the railroad men of this country of their present rights under the law.

I desire, Mr. President, to clear up another statement, not only made by the distinguished Senator from New York, but by other Senators, and apparently concurred in by many men, that this bill abolishes trials in court, because it fixes the amount to be recovered. That is a statement which has been constantly asserted here upon the floor of the Senate, that has been sent broadcast throughout the land, and that is absolutely without any foundation whatever to stand upon.

This bill does provide the amount which is to be paid for the loss of a hand or of two hands, or a foot or of two feet, or of a leg or of two legs, of both ears, of both eyes, and of one eye. At about that point the fixed amount ceases to be operative. Yet it is a fact not only sustainable by statistics, but one of common observation, that the injuries specified do not cover one-tenth of the injuries suffered by railway men. To illustrate, suppose a man's jaw is broken. Suppose a man is disfigured for life. Suppose a man's chest is crushed. Suppose a man's back is injured. Suppose a man's heart action is interfered with. Suppose a man's circulatory apparatus is disarranged. Suppose a man is paralyzed in one arm partially.

Mr. President, I can stand here and go through the list of human ills, and they will come before you by the thousand, whereas there are only some 10 or 20 injuries covered by this bill and specific amounts of compensation named.

Now, sir, when you get beyond the 10 or 20 which are specified, the amount of the damage is a thing which must be settled by some tribunal, and it must be settled by a trial of fact, just the same as you settle the identical questions now by a trial of fact. The questions to be determined will be, What is the extent of the injury; how much has it deprived the man of the ability to earn a living; and how long will it last? Every question, so far as the measure of damages is concerned, or the amount of damage is concerned, that now must be litigated in the courts will be litigated under this bill, and every man who is fair understands that to be the case if he has read the bill. So let us have done with the claim that the bill ends litigation. It does not end litigation. It will not even diminish the number of controversies.

That is not all, Mr. President. The bill introduces into the contests a mystery that no legal mind upon this continent can solve. The Lord has not yet made a man so wise that he can draw an instruction under the terms of this bill giving to a jury an intelligible rule of damages applicable to any one of that great class of injuries where the specific amount to be paid is not set forth.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Or any injury not mentioned in the bill.

Mr. REED. Or any other injury not mentioned in the bill. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

Why, sir, at common law and under the statutes the matter was sufficiently difficult, and yet the instruction read something like this: In considering the amount of damage the jury may take into consideration the age and the expectancy of life of the injured party, the lessening of his earning capacity, his pain and suffering, the necessary expense for physicians, nursing, medicines, and so forth. That rule was understandable. Let me read you the mysterious rule of damages in this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. While the Senator is looking for that clause may I ask him a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If an injury should occur that is not described in this bill, would not that be ground for insisting that the provisions of this bill did not apply to it, and the person injured would be remitted to his rights under the existing law?

Mr. REED. No; not as I understand it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is exclusive as to the things it covers, but not exclusive as to the things it does not cover.

Mr. REED. But it has a clause in here which specifies what you are to get for the loss of hearing or the loss of a leg or an arm——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But it is a compensation bill. That is the dominant idea, and the first idea with reference to its construction that will take place. But if a case should be clearly developed that is not in the terms or meaning of the bill, does the Senator think the party injured would be entirely deprived of all remedy?

Mr. REED. No. The Senator does not understand me or else I do not understand him.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Probably I am the one at fault.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to section 3 of the bill.

Mr. REED. In answer to the Senator from Arkansas I call his attention now——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am quite familiar with the general language of the section, but I think the dominant purpose of the bill, that controls the generality of language, is, if it should be developed that an injury had been inflicted for which there is no compensation provided by the bill, the person injured would be remitted to his rights under the existing law.

Mr. REED. I did not make myself plain in my statement. I was perhaps unfortunate in language. There are certain injuries listed and the proposed law states the specific amount which is to be paid in these cases. There is then a general clause which reads:

In all other cases of injury resulting in permanent partial disability the compensation shall bear such relation to the periods stated in subdivision 1 of this clause (D) as the disabilities bear to those produced by the injuries named therein, and payments shall be made for proportionate periods not in any case exceeding 72 months.

That, I take it, was intended to furnish a measure of damages and recovery for those who are not specifically mentioned in the list I have called attention to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is somewhat in the nature of an answer to the suggestion I made. Then either one of two things results—this bill must either provide compensation for the injury or the passage of the bill does not deprive the person injured of his rights as they exist under the present law.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator that that would possibly follow. I am not clear on that, but I am speaking now of the uncertainty introduced into the law by this bill.

I say not a lawyer or a judge upon the earth can draw an instruction a jury can understand and which will comply with the section I have just read. For instance, I find that one of my ribs is torn loose from my spinal column and that I am going to suffer from it all my life. Now, what relation does that bear to the clause in the bill that fixes the value of my finger or of my thumb or of my hand or of my foot? How can a jury pile comparison upon comparison and draw deduction after deduction and get at a result? I say that you have not only kept in this bill all the uncertainty as to damages except in the few instances I have referred to, but you have introduced a rule and measure of damages that is beyond the comprehension of any man on this earth.

There is not a Senator here, and there are many learned and able lawyers in this body, who can in a week's time draw an instruction under that clause which will give a jury a fair guide and that he can assert with any degree of confidence will be within the meaning of the law.

So, Mr. President, the talk that you do not need courts, the talk that you do not need lawyers, under this bill sinks into a condition where it can hardly be said to be respectable.

Moreover, the bill itself gives the lie to that claim, because it provides a vast machinery of the law—trial before an adjuster, trial before the court, the right of appeal, and then the right to reopen the case a dozen times or more for further trials. All the way through the bill we have the machinery of the law provided for. So when these railroad men are being told in one breath, here is a bill that preserves your rights and does away with litigation, and in the next breath are told that their rights are preserved through trials by court, a contradiction which is so plain as to be laughable is manifest.

Mr. President, it was stated here by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that he favored a bill which would permit settlements out of court. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but, in the name of high heaven, do we need this bill to create that right? That privilege antedates every court and every law of the world—the right of men to get together and adjust their own differences has always existed and will continue, regardless of the fate of this measure. It is provided here, of course, that certain men can get together and agree, but aside from the bill they can do that. They can do it as well now as they can after the bill is passed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does not section 3 so involve the rule of damages as to take away by its insertion in the bill the general rule for damages in the case of accidents? Section 3, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] called attention to, seems to me to make the rule more involved and to make it impossible to lay down under that section any clear measure of damages that the adjuster or even the court could fix.

Mr. REED. I concur with the view of the Senator entirely. Section 3 wipes out all the legal remedies and leaves us in a new and unexplored field. We must grope our way. Probably the courts will be inclined to look at old precedents for a guide, but their application will be difficult. Not only does section 3 leave us in that uncertain position, but when we come to the rule of damages which is prescribed nobody on earth can understand it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what I was speaking about.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I want to answer another proposition, because it has been asserted here not once but scores of times. It is the plea in confession and avoidance with which we are met every time we point out a defect of this bill, namely, "that, of course, the bill is probably imperfect, but it can be amended hereafter." It does not make any difference apparently how grave is the mistake of the bill, how fraught with danger is a provision of the bill, how clearly that danger is pointed out nor how certain it is to fail, we are met by the argument, "pass this bill in its imperfect shape, and then some day, somewhere, somehow, maybe, we will fix up that mistake."

Senators, what are we here for to-day? I grant you that no perfect law probably has ever been framed by any body of men. But what kind of a proposition is it to advance that because a perfect law has never been framed we should deliberately enact a statute full of imperfections which we now see? What kind of logic is that?

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. It has been argued here that this is a good measure for the employer and for the employee; that it opens up a method by which adjustments can be made and tedious, expensive litigation avoided. The Senator has just pointed out the dangers and the risks involved in this proposed legislation. If it contains the merit that has been ascribed to it by Senators, then would it not be a good thing to make the remedy elective instead of compulsory? Would not that avoid all the danger and the risk to which the Senator points and at the same time equip the machinery for the application of the rule of compensation?

Mr. REED. And have a test by experience.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator from Indiana, but the point I am making is—and I do not know whether I talk to the deaf ears of the adder or not—that while we may not expect to make a perfect bill, while we must anticipate that imperfections will hereafter be discovered in any law, that affords no reason for passing a bill which we now know is full of imperfections. How will you justify that sort of action? The 10,000,000 people who are to be affected by it will have to live under this law, which you say is imperfect, until it can be amended.

And, sir, I make you the prediction that when you come to amend this bill and strengthen it in favor of these laboring men you will find that concensus of opinion, that agreement of mind, which is now so startlingly exemplified between Mr. Wills claiming to represent the railway men and the president of the New York Central Railway Co. You will not find that concurrence of railway presidents in amending the law you now find favoring the railroading of this bill. I hesitate to use the slang expression—but it will go well with the followers of Roosevelt. If the railroads ever get this strangle hold once upon their employees you will find there will be activity on the part of the railroads against every possible amendment to this bill which is in the interest of the employees.

Now, Mr. President, right there is a good time, I think, and a good place to challenge attention to this peculiar thing. These railroad men, a million six hundred and fifty thousand of them, appear to be represented by just four men, and one of them withdrew from the conference. It appears further that of the three who remained one of them is dissatisfied with the bill. The three did select Mr. Wills to represent them.

So in the last analysis a million six hundred and fifty thousand railroad men in this country and all their wives and all their children have been placed in the care and keeping of Mr. Wills alone.

Now, we have been told on this floor by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] that which I formerly suspected, that Mr. Wills has made an agreement with the railroads to pass this particular bill without amendment. Conceive, if you can, Mr. Wills in an intellectual contest with the president of the New York Central Railway, with the claim department of the New York Central Railway, with all the skilled lawyers of the New York Central Railway, with the president of the New York Central Railway sitting upon the commission, with his claim agent beside him, and Mr. Willis standing there alone.

I do not reflect upon Mr. Wills. He, I understand, was once an engineer; at least, for a long time he was employed on a railroad. He is a man, I think, with a good average mind, and only a good average mind for that class of people; but when you put him in a contest with the skilled attorneys of these railways, he standing there to represent his men and they to represent their interests and their capital, the contest is as unequal and as uneven as a race between a thoroughbred horse that can trace its ancestry to some flying steed that a thousand years ago spurned the sands of Arabia and a broken-down, overworked plowhorse. Mr. Wills stood no more show than that poor plowhorse.

Now, let us see how shrewd is Mr. Wills, who represents these men. He sent here a letter, which was read to-day by the Senator from West Virginia, demanding that this bill be passed without the dotting of an "i" or the stroking of a "t." He declared the bill to be the best that could be obtained; and yet the Senator from Utah, who is the sponsor for the bill, tells us this very blessed day of grace that here in the Senate, in the face of Mr. Wills's protest, the bill has been so amended that there will be $6,000,000 annually added to the liability of the railway companies—that the benefits the men who are hurt and their wives and children will receive are by these amendments increased $6,000,000.

What does Mr. Wills think of his judgment, and what do you think of Mr. Wills's judgment, when he protested against any amendment, and yet because of the fight a few of us have made $6,000,000 has already been added for the benefit of the railway men?

Why, if Mr. Wills would pack his grip and go home and leave this bill to the real friends of these men, who occupy this floor, we will do more than add $6,000,000; we will restore to these men their rights under the law, or rather we will preserve those rights to them. The idea of the Senate of the United States sitting here and saying that it is bound to support this bill because Mr. Wills has put his O. K. upon it is preposterous. When did you abdicate the throne of your reason? When did you lay aside your duty to the country and to these men?

It was said here by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] that the doctrine is acknowledged to-day that "we are our brother's keeper." Well, if I am my brother's keeper I intend to be his keeper to the best of my ability, according to my own judgment, and I do not intend to constitute myself a proxy for the judgment of Mr. Wills or any other one man.

But, sir, how does Mr. Wills stand here before this body? What right has he to speak? He does not represent these organizations directly. He is the legislative agent, we are told, appointed by these three men, and his business is to look after legislation. Let us concede that he represents the three men. Did he or the three men represent the railroad men of this country upon these measures? Sir, it is idle to talk about them representing the men upon these measures, because this bill was not before the men.

I utterly deny and repudiate the assertion that it has ever been put before these men. They are 1,650,000 men scattered all over the United States engaged in their various employments. Have they had the opportunity to examine this bill, to study its merits, and to counsel together? They have been busy running their trains; they have been at their daily toil. It is but 30 days since the bill was reported. It could not be passed upon by those men at this very moment, because it is yet subject to change. They have not seen this bill; they have not had an opportunity to consult about it; and if they had, what will be said to the evidence which was produced here that there is a rule which closes their lips and silences their tongues? What has the Senate to say to the assertion made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], when he stood in his place and said the railroad men had come to the doors of the Judiciary Committee, which had the bill under consideration, and turned back, and said they dared not speak?

My very good friend, the able and genial Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], said this morning that he had received a large number of telegrams, all in favor of the bill, and he added that those telegrams contained the number of the bill and the name of its author or sponsor. A little further on he made a statement which I do not believe he meant, or else I misheard him, that if those men had recklessly wired him without knowing what was in the bill, they could take the responsibility, and he did not care. Ah, I know better than that, Mr. President. I know the Senator well enough to know that his heart is so kind and his spirit so generous that, even if he got a thousand telegrams of that kind, and he found the men had sent them under a mistake, he would quickly allow them to rectify that mistake.

Mr. President, the Senator did receive that kind of telegrams.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course the Senator from Missouri does not want to misquote what I said.

Mr. REED. I certainly do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I said was, if they had wired me to support a particular bill, as they did, describing it by number, by title, and by authorship, leading me to believe that they knew what they were doing and had seen it and read it, when they had not in fact done so, they had done, in my estimation, an unfair and dishonest thing with me. That is what I said.

Mr. REED. Well, I will accept that statement. No remark I have made has been intended in criticism of the Senator from Mississippi. I think entirely too much of him to criticize him, even if he were wrong, and he is seldom wrong; but he does not mean what he said just now—that is, he does not mean it in the sense some people might take it, because if Mr. Wills sent a telegram or a letter out to these various societies, and said to these men, "We have got a compensation bill at last, boys; its author is So-and-so and its number is so-and-so"—giving its number and its authorship—and added, "Please wire Senator WILLIAMS to support it;" and they, relying upon Mr. Wills, sent that kind of a message and were mistaken, I know the Senator from Mississippi well enough to know that his generous spirit would not hold them to any grave responsibility nor would he say they had intentionally misled him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri understood me to say that I shall either support or oppose the bill because these men or anybody else asked me to support or oppose it, he misunderstood me. I did not say that I had supported the bill because they had asked me to do so. I stated the fact that they had asked me, and that I had replied saying that I would study the bill, look into it, and see if it was in the interests of the public, and if I found it was I would support it, and later on I did support it.

Then what I added was that if any body of men anywhere—I will modify it and extend it—if they or anybody else undertook to instruct me in my legislative duty by asking me to support a specific measure which they themselves had not even read, they had done one of two things—they had either acted very unfairly toward me or very stupidly for themselves.

What I say is not that they are responsible for my vote, but they are responsible for their own action. If I had not agreed with them, such telegrams might have been forty times as numerous and I would not have voted for the bill, of course. We were discussing the question as to whether organized labor was in favor of this particular bill, and the Senator from Missouri in a previous speech had made the statement that, while they were in favor of a compensation bill, none of them had ever said they were in favor of this particular compensation bill. It was relevant to that matter that I quoted what had occurred in my own State, and the Senator from Virginia quoted what had occurred in his State.

Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri—it is very general with the people everywhere to undertake to instruct Senators upon their duties and to advise them, and they have a perfect right to do so; of course the Senator ought not to be bound by the instructions or advice unless his own judgment agrees with it, but does not the Senator agree with me, when a man asks me to support a particular measure, describing it so that it can be identified, that that man, if he has never seen the measure and does not know what it contains, has either acted with stupid unfairness to himself or with great unfairness to me?

Mr. REED. No; I can not concur in that last statement, and for this reason: I think the Senator from Mississippi leaves out of consideration the fact that men may, without being stupid, repose confidence in others; and if such men had a statement made to them by some one in whom they thought they had the right to repose confidence, that a bill was proposed which was of great benefit to them, I would not want to say that they were stupid or I would not want to say that they were dishonest if, acting upon that assumption, they sent a message asking for the support of the bill, always believing, as they would have the right to believe, especially when they wired the Senator from Mississippi, that he would not act upon their request blindly, but that he would give to it such consideration as would be warranted by the gravity of the proposition.

I do not care, however, to pursue that further than to say that the very fact that these men, almost before the bill had been reported to Congress, sent in messages specifying its title, its number, and its author indicates to my mind that they were sending those messages in response to an instruction or request from Mr. Wills or from some other person; that from him they got their information, and from him they got their inspiration.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LEA. I have received a great many telegrams like the one to which the Senator has just referred, when the bill was first introduced; but recently I have been receiving telegrams like the one which I shall send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 5, 1912.

LUKE LEA,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by 324 members, Division 175, Order Railway Conductors, Memphis, Tenn., That they are opposed to passage of bill known as employees' compensation act.

Resolved further, That Senators from this State be requested to read this resolution in United States Senate.

F. J. WRIGHT, Secretary.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. I, too, have received many telegrams, resolutions, and petitions on this bill. These I have had printed in the RECORD. It is only just to say that a majority of them favor this legislation. That was, however, earlier in the period of agitation of the question before the Senate. I am now in receipt of communications, from one of which I read a few sentences. This communication is from F. M. Pence, secretary of Logan Division, No. 110, Order of Railway Conductors of America, in which he says:

At to-day's meeting of Logan Division, No. 110, Order of Railway Conductors, after considering the employers' liability and compensation act and thoroughly dissecting the same and finding the jokers therein, they ask that you disregard the former request for your support of this legislation. They ask you to lend your support to defeat this measure, as it is vicious legislation.

That is an indication of the changing attitude on the part of some of these organizations after they have made an investigation of the matter. It is easily seen how men may earnestly support the general principle of compensation, but may find on examination of the pending bill that it offers no compensation commensurate with the rights given under the Federal act of 1908, and which rights are withdrawn by the pending bill. I certainly favor the principle of compensation, but I want it without indiscriminate sacrifice of existing rights. If the bill is as meritorious as its advocates insist, make the remedy it offers optional, and its merit can be fully tested in practice without exchanging what is certain for that which must be experimental.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, it is as clear as the noonday sun just what has happened here.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Inasmuch as other Senators, with entire propriety, it seems to me, have asked permission to have incorporated in the RECORD telegrams upon this subject, I ask permission to have read at the desk the telegram which I hold in my hand with reference to this bill, so that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WILLISTON, N. DAK., May 5, 1912.

Senator ASHURST, Washington, D. C.:

Every locomotive engineer in Montana is opposed to workmen's compensation act. Montana Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers legislative board have sent resolutions, letters, and telegrams to Wills, national legislation representative of engineers, conductors, and trainmen's orders, demanding he advise Senators and Representatives of their opposition to bill. Please show our friends this message. I am satisfied engineers' legislative board chairman of Montana will verify this statement if called upon to do so.

A MEMBER OF BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.

Mr. REED. The fact that there is no name signed to that telegram points an important lesson: There is another man who is opposed to the bill but does not dare to speak unless he first gets the right from his chief.

Mr. President, I started to say when I was interrupted that it is as plain as the noonday sun how the Senate came to be flooded with these telegrams. The union labor men of the world for 30 years have been contending for a compensation act—an act that would take care of all of them in case of injury. They have been denounced as socialists and bad citizens for advancing that doctrine, and the denunciation has come loudest from that element of our standpat Republican friends who are now most loudly proclaiming their interest in this bill. It is a refreshing sign to see some of them stand upon the floor of the Senate and put up even any kind of an appeal on behalf of the laboring men, and particularly the union laboring men, of the country; it is a unique spectacle. If they were only advocating a bill that did in fact take care of these men, I would believe that the day was at hand when the lion and the lamb could lie down together; I would turn my expectant eyes toward the horizon to catch—confident that I would soon behold—the glories of the rising sun of the millennium. But when I find them so earnestly advocating a measure which deprives the railway employees of their legal rights I am constrained to inquire whether they are interested in the railway trainmen or the railway directors.

Mr. President, these messages were sent in the way I have indicated. The men now are beginning to discover the truth; their eyes are beginning to be opened, and the messages that are now coming, so far as I know, are about 10 to 1 against the bill. Upon our side we have called attention to the fact that a great meeting of one of these organizations will be held on the 8th day of this month. Why not wait until the men at that speak? The reply of the Senator from West Virginia was—and I was sorry to hear a Democrat make it—that we, by asking that delay, were trying to introduce discord and rebellion into the ranks of labor.

Almost the very first principle that union labor began contending for among its own members was the right of a referendum vote. All of the Senators upon the other side of this Chamber who have not been included in the denunciations of being engaged in crooked politics by Theodore the First, all of those men who love to call themselves "progressives," have been advocating the initiative and referendum in politics; they have stood here with outstretched hands, saying: "Let the people rule; give the common people the right to vote upon every proposition." That has found very hearty response in my bosom; but now, when we ask that this measure, that strikes at the homes, that strikes at the income, that strikes at the legal rights of 1,650,000 men, when we ask that this measure now formulated and in Congress shall be allowed to lie until the men themselves shall have the right of a referendum vote, we are met by the claim that that introduces rebellion into the ranks of labor.

I affirm, sir, that no honest friend of labor has any right to assume that Mr. Wills represents union labor upon this bill, and I will tell you why. If this bill had been laid before the respective lodges of railway men, if time for discussion had elapsed, if delegates had then been elected to their grand councils or general meetings, by whatsoever name they are known, and if those representatives had passed a resolution in favor of this bill and had then instructed Mr. Wills or anybody else to come here and insist upon its adoption without amendment, Mr. Wills would be representing the railroad men; but this bill has never been before a single one of these organizations; it has not been before the subordinate lodges, unless within the last 20 days; it has never been before a single general meeting of these bodies; it has never received their sanction or their support; and when Mr. Wills stands here and says he represents them, he assumes a thing which does not exist.

The Senator from Nevada asked us to pass this bill without amendment, on the theory that over in the House of Representatives it might be amended. It is not proper, I believe, to discuss what they are doing or what they may do in the House of Representatives; but it is a matter reported in the public press that they are already having hearings over there on this bill or one just like it; that they are trying to railroad it through the committee in the House; that Mr. Wills is most active in that movement, and that the whole effort is by whip and spur to drive this bill through before it can be reported back to the men that Mr. Wills and the other two gentlemen claim to represent.

They tell us it is a matter of agreement with the railroads. That is the statement contained in the letter of Mr. Wills. If it is a matter of agreement with the railroads, will the railroads repudiate that agreement if this bill is passed over for 20 or 30 days? Will they break with Mr. Wills if the bill is laid over for a short time? Ah, it is not opposition from the railroads that Mr. Wills fears; it is not opposition from the railroads the distinguished Senators who are supporting this bill on the other side fear; but it is the opposition of the men who are about to be despoiled of their rights that they fear. If you have an agreement with the railroad presidents to pass this bill, will they not keep it, sir?

If you have gone into a back room or into a front hall—I care not where—and agreed with them upon this measure, then is it not safe to let it stand for a little while? Why is it that you come here clamoring for action now, now, now, when the bill is agreed upon and can be passed at any time? The answer is you dare not wait for the voice of the laboring men, the men affected. When you hear that voice it will come like the voice of many waters, and ft will overwhelm those who put this thing upon these defenseless men who are running their engines and trains of cars the while they are here betrayed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I feel that the Senator's wholesale arraignment is utterly ungenerous. I shall vote for this bill, and I say advisedly there is no Senator in this body who is closer in heart, in activity, and in sentiment to the laboring men that am I; and, thank God, I can say that my identity and closeness with the laboring men has not been in the line of counsel or lawyer, but it has been simply as their friend and adviser. I feel that the assertion made by the Senator, wherein he would arraign all who fail to stand by the proposition on his side, is ungenerous and unfair.

I feel, Mr. President, that this bill does not contain all I desire, but I believe it is a step in the right direction. I would amend it; I would leave it optional with the employees whether they would avail themselves of the privileges of this bill or have a trial by jury. I shall vote for such an amendment, and I shall vote for other amendments; but, in the end, if those amendments fail I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. President, within two hours, almost within the precincts of the Senate, I met a railroad man and I asked him how he and his associates stood on this measure. He replied: "We laboring men want this bill passed because it takes from us that terrible uncertainty which to-day prevails whenever a railroad employee is injured." So, I insist that the wholesale denunciation of gentlemen who choose to stand upon the other side is unfair, ungenerous, undemocratic, and utterly beyond the lines of that principle which the Senator loves as I do.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, when I was talking about the "other side" I was looking at the other side of the Chamber. I had my back turned toward the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know, but the Senator's voice, as a friend of mine used to say of my voice, is like an Irishman's whisper—you can hear it around the block. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Ah! I am glad it reached around to the Senator from New Jersey and actually got through his epidermis. I am glad that it has reached around far enough now so that he admits this bill is full of iniquities. I think if we had the bill to consider a little longer we could awaken the voice of his conscience so that it would clamorously demand that he vote against a bill full of iniquities.

Mr. President, a little further in regard to the proposition of amendment. What a peculiar situation! An amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah can be accepted on the other side, but an amendment suggested by anybody else must be voted down regardless of its merit; and yet amendments have been suggested here that every man in the Senate knows ought to be in this bill. There are not, I think, two men in the Senate who will say that the right of trial by jury ought to be taken away from any man merely because he forgets or is unable to serve a notice demanding a jury within five days after appeal from the adjuster. Is there anybody on the other side; is there any progressive Republican over there who is progressing in the direction of an abolition of trial by jury? Is there any progressive Republican on the other side who has been standing and painting pictures of the glorious plains upon which we are to advance, where human rights shall be protected—is there any one of them who believes that the only place where a laboring man should be allowed to get a trial is in a Federal court? Is that the newest doctrine of the Progressive?

You say we will amend it afterwards. Why not amend it now? Why not make this bill right now? You tell us it is a step in the right direction. I have heard about that step in the right direction until I have actually grown leg weary. Is it necessary because you are going to take a step in the right direction that you should at the same time take two steps in the wrong direction? Is it necessary because you are going to pass a compensation act that you should at the same time do grievous wrongs in passing it? Is it necessary, in order to take care of that class of employees who are injured through accident for which no one is directly responsible, to take away the rights of those men who are injured without fault and without negligence?

Is it necessary to strike down the common law and the laws of Congress and the laws of the States in order that you may take a step in the right direction? That is not progress. That is taking one step forward and two steps backward. You are taking a step forward which will include some men not now included within the beneficence of the law, and you are taking two steps backward when you undertake to deny the right of trial by jury, when you undertake to deny the right of trial in the State courts, and a still further step backward when you deprive these men of those rights for which they have been contending all these years.

But there is a catch phrase going around here. It is said the certainty of recovery will end litigation. We have been entertained with a lot of figures showing the amount of litigation that has been had in the past. But every man in the Senate knows that those figures are misleading. Why are they misleading? Because they are made up partially from States where the old common-law defenses exist. They are made up from States where the old common-law defenses have only been partially abolished. They are made up, so far as they apply to the Federal courts, under a new law which has not been really tested, and was not approved by the Supreme Court until the 15th day of last January. That law has not been generally appealed to because of the doubt as to its validity. And so, sir, the figures advanced are as misleading as figures can be. The men who bring them forward here well know they are misleading.

I want to give some statistics which it will not take very long to present, and I say that this statement I am about to read shows that if you will only allow the present Federal liability acts to stand a little longer there will not be much work in the courts for any lawyer and there will not be much litigation for the injured men.

Ralph C. Richards has for many years been at the head of the claim department of the great Chicago & Northwestern Railway. When he was talking before his claim-agent associates he said:

> But there are one or two points I would like to make in connection with the subject: That is that these new statutes have practically taken away the defenses of fellow servant—assumption of risk and contributory negligence. In other words, they have practically given every employee who is injured a right of action if there is any negligence on the part of the employer. That is about where we have gotten to. That being so, it becomes essential and extremely necessary that the claim departments and men connected with claim departments be efficient and capable. That instead of making lawsuits we should make settlements. We all know how many claims a $10,000 verdict will settle. We all know that every time we have a personal injury of any severity and we have litigation we are running the risk of a $10,000 verdict. We all know how hard it is to get a verdict set aside after it is rendered. Therefore it seems to me it is essential that we should settle more cases and have less litigation. And in order to settle cases the claim department must be efficient, etc.

And then he adds:

> Now, I think during the last 10 months the line I represent has had some 6,000 or 7,000 employees injured and something like a hundred killed, and out of that vast number of injured and killed, and that is about 80 per cent of our personal injuries, we had 40 lawsuits, and I think we had that small number of lawsuits because of the efficiency of the men who are working under me and their promptness in settling claims.

That statement was made at the claim agents' meeting; that statement was made by Mr. Richards on the 25th day of May, 1910, before we had the full benefit of the Federal liability act, and yet there is the plain admission of the great claim agent of this great system of roads that there were only 40 lawsuits, although 6,000 or 7,000 were injured. They paid everybody else off.

There is not a compensation law that has ever been passed in a European country where the figures will show as large a percentage of settlements. Why? Because now the right to recover under the Federal liability act is practically certain, and because, as was said by the Senator from Georgia, railroads know that if they do not settle at a fair sum they may have to pay a very large verdict. But when you pass this law, where the liability is specifically fixed and can never exceed the amount there fixed, the railroads can litigate to the day of doom and not be in any danger.

I know that this bill is going to be passed; it is going to be passed in spite of all that has been said here. It is going to be passed by men who will try to shield themselves behind the claim that it has been supported by labor organizations; but the labor organizations will reply to you that they were not notified, they had no chance to be heard; the labor organizations will reply to you that they sent you down here to guard their interests and that you have not guarded them. The labor organizations will not be solaced by the pretense that you voted for this bill under a misapprehension.

I know you are going to pass this bill, and I also know that you will tell these men that some time, somewhere, you are going to amend it. They will reply: "What of the widows and children; what of the maimed and crippled during those intervening years? You had the wrongs pointed out to you and you did not respond to the warnings." I know you are going to pass the bill. I know, and you do, that when you pass it every railroad claim agent will be delighted, to use the phrase that has been worn threadbare by a distinguished citizen who, when he is not delighted, is always abusing somebody.

I know you are going to pass it, and I have only this to say as a final word: Ride on, my lords; but in the end you will find it difficult to justify your conduct, in standing with the railroad presidents, in supporting a bill that every railroad president in the country has already O. K'd and every railroad lawyer in the country has already approved, which was introduced in the name of labor, but has not been sanctioned by labor. I dare to make this prophecy, that when the labor organizations of this country find they must go into the Federal courts to litigate their rights, when they find themselves substantially deprived of the right of trial by jury, when they find that all the rights they have contended for during all these years have been taken away, they will speak to you in no uncertain tone.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. I was about to yield the floor. I had in fact concluded, but if the Senator desires I will yield to him.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a word, with the permission of the Senate, by the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire to make a statement at this time because, if I understand the situation correctly, I may not have the opportunity to do so later.

We all remember the great effort made by the railroad employees to secure the enactment of a law which would enable them to institute suits for damages for injuries, without being obliged to run the gantlet of the rigorous common law, and as a culmination of the work on the part of the railroad employees the employers' liability law of 1906 was passed. This act was, by the Supreme Court of the United States, declared to be unconstitutional. Then the present efficient employers' liability law of April 22, 1908, was enacted, over the intense opposition of the railroad companies, and subsequently, on April 5, 1910, the act of April 22, 1908, was amended as follows:

Under this act an action may be brought in a circuit court of the United States in the district of the residence of the defendant, or in which the cause of action arose, or in which the defendant shall be doing business at the time of commencing such action. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States, and no case arising under this act and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States.

SEC. 2. That said act be further amended by adding the following section as section 9 of said act:

"SEC. 9. That any right of action given by this act to a person suffering injury shall survive to his or her personal representative for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee, and if none, then of such employee's parents, and if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, but in such cases there shall be only one recovery for the same injury."

Approved, April 5, 1910.

This amendment, approved April 5, 1910, struck terror to the railroad attorneys, for, prior to that time, under the question of diverse citizenship, the defendant company could remove such cases to a Federal court. This amendment affirmatively provided that no case arising under the act of April 22, 1908, brought in any State court should be removed to any court of the United States, and now we find that within three months after the enactment of the amendment of April 5, 1910, the railroad companies became very active, and with suspicious generosity came forward asking and unanimously advocating a compulsory compensation law which would vest exclusive jurisdiction of these cases in the Federal courts, thus striking down the amendment of April 5, 1910, which gave the railroad employees the right to go into the State courts. This may serve as an explanation of the activity on the part of the railroad companies in their attempt to secure the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. President, I question the motives of no Senator. I concede to all Senators who are in favor of this bill the same measure of patriotism, purity, and integrity of purpose that I claim for myself. That much I cheerfully grant. But I shall not be silent when a bill so unusual is hurried through. It has been stated that if the bill should be amended, the railroad companies will withdraw their friendship for the bill and that, therefore, it will fail of passage. Mr. President, if the railroad companies have that much power, their power is too great.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]—and I regret he is not present, because I wish to say something to him and of him—during his able speech cast a glance over to this side of the Chamber and said he could well understand how attorneys who have been instituting suits against the railroad companies could oppose this bill. I say to the Senator, in reply, that I can and do well understand why attorneys who have been active as representatives for railroad companies and vested interests all their lives can consistently try to pass this bill. I desire further to tell the distinguished Senator from New York that I am not looking at this bill from the standpoint of a lawyer who institutes suits against railroad companies. Neither am I looking at it from the standpoint of a man who represents railroad companies, but I am looking at it simply, solely, and only from the standpoint of an American Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hold in my hand a statement giving an account of the operations of the employees' compensation act of the State of Washington during the first four months in which it was in operation, and I have also in the same connection a statement made by John H. Wallace, a member of the Industrial Insurance Commission of the State of Washington, as to the operation of industrial insurance from the workmen's standpoint. I ask that these documents may be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The workmen's compensation act went into effect as between employer and employee, October 1, 1911, at which time the preliminary work of the commission had been fairly well done, as far as listing employers, collecting contributions, and establishing an accident fund were concerned. The great work, however, of building up a claim system whereby industrial accidents could be promptly reported, investigated, passed upon, and paid for, was very largely to be worked out.

From the beginning the accidents reported to the commission in one form or another averaged considerably over 500 a month. At the beginning a large number of trivial and unimportant accidents were reported, which had to be passed upon with as much care as a major accident. The commission, however, soon adopted the 5 per cent rule, in which it declined to consider a claim in which the workman had lost less time than 5 per cent of a working month (26 days) or had suffered an accident which impaired his earning capacity less than 5 per cent.

On the other hand the average held good throughout the four months from the fact that as employer and employee began to understand the law more thoroughly accidents which had previously been unnoticed and unreported began to reach the commission in large numbers. On January 31, 1912, approximately 2,700 accidents had been reported to the commission; 1,500 had been passed upon; a considerable number disallowed, waived, and withdrawn; while a large proportion of the balance remained incomplete, owing to the failure of the employer or employee to file the proper papers or procure the necessary medical certificates.

The standing of the accident fund on the above date was as follows:

Total amount paid in	$428,057.42
Claims paid	57,329.08
Leaving a balance of	370,728.34
Reserves to guarantee pensions	62,716.35

While the reserves have been formally transferred from the accident fund to reserve fund by the purchase of interest-bearing bonds, it is hardly proper to deduct that amount from the balance in the class funds, for the reason that the money is being used up solely in paying out monthly pensions to widows and children of deceased workmen, but the large balance of over $370,000 should be considered in relation to the reserves of over $62,000. Both of these funds are bearing interest, the working balance carried in the bank of 2 per cent and the reserves invested in the interest-bearing securities of 5 per cent and 6 per cent.

An examination of some of the principal classes in the accident fund shows that the rates levied upon the various industries for the purposes of the accident fund are probably ample for the purpose. Every taxpayer who calls to inspect the books of the commission is referred to the "star fund," class No 10, lumbering, logging, etc., into which has been paid $150,887.51, with $27,579.33 paid out for claims, leaving a balance of $123,308.18, with $24,150.43 invested in interest-bearing securities. This fund was originally collected on estimated pay rolls for October, November, and December, 1911, and the commission had the right to call for an additional assessment for the month of January. This, however, is never done unless the fund has been so heavily drawn upon that the danger line has been passed and additional money is needed to pay claims.

If, however, the lumbermen's class continues its wonderful record for the first four months' operation of the law, it is likely that no assessment will be needed for many months to come, probably not before July 1, 1912, in which event the preliminary assessment, instead of covering three months only, would actually cover nine months' operation of the law.

The same condition is present in some degree in class 5, general construction work, in which the gross amount of $22,428.79 has been collected and only $2,619.75 paid out, leaving a balance of $19,809.04 in the fund, $5,324.02 of which is invested in interest-bearing reserves.

Another class in this same desirable category is class 7, construction of railroads, which shows a credit collection of $26,702.71, with paid claims amounting to $3,926 and a working balance of $22,776.71, of which balance $5,585.86 is invested in reserves.

With these two classes is somewhat intimately associated class 6, installing power lines, which paid into the accident fund $19,170.02; claims paid, $2,365.81; leaving a balance of $16,804.21.

In a way the street railways of the State are also entitled to a star classification on their operations for four months, their statement of class condition being as follows:

Total amount paid in	$27,228.22
Claims paid	1,169.66
Balance	26,058.56
Invested in reserves	1,486.00

The employers of this class have always given the act a very liberal interpretation, and, although strongly imbued with the fear that the operations of the law would be along socialistic lines, they placed no opposition whatever in the way of the commission, paid their assessments promptly, and have established systems of accident reports which are well-nigh perfect in their completeness.

Perhaps the most important class in the way of administration is class 16, coal mines, statement of whose funds is as follows:

Total amount paid in	$36,050.12
Claims paid	5,261.20
Working balance	30,788.92
Invested in reserves	9,299.83

The importance of this class lies in the fact that although the operation of coal mining is one of the most hazardous in the State, only four deaths have occurred therein since the law went into effect, and no disaster of any kind has overtaken the workmen comprised within this class. It was freely argued at the time when the act was discussed on the floor of the legislature that one accident in a coal mine would wipe out a whole accident fund, and it is undoubtedly true that any of the old-fashioned disasters would speedily deplete class 16. The significant and hopeful phase of the situation, however, is the belief of competent miners with whom Commissioner John H. Wallace is in close touch that the old-fashioned disaster is practically a thing of the past, owing to better methods of ventilation, illumination, and spread of intelligent cooperation in the mining industries of the State.

But 1 class of the 48 shows a balance "in the red," which is class 46, including manufactures of powder and fireworks. The reason for this is the Chehalis disaster, in which eight young women lost their lives, requiring a reserve of $7,659.35 to be set aside. The powder class comprises practically only four plants—the Du Pont Powder Co., near Tacoma; the Imperial Powder Co., near Chehalis; the powder works at Mukilteo, and a fireworks-manufacturing concern in Seattle. Of these the Du Pont Powder Co., which is the Washington branch of the Powder Trust (the legality of whose methods is now under scrutiny by the Federal Government), is by far the largest.

On the basis of pay rolls, Du Pont would pay over 90 per cent of the contributions into class 46, and the commission feels that it is the irony of fate that on the very day when the draft had been authorized from the main office of the trust in Wilmington, Del., the disaster in Chehalis occurred, which caused the Du Pont Co. to refuse to pay its contribution and serve notice on the commission that, no matter what rules and regulations should be adopted for the government of class 46, it would nevertheless contest the constitutionality of the law in the highest tribunal of the Nation, viz, the Supreme Court of the United States.

Pension payments were, however, begun out of the funds in hand.

It should also be noted that the Imperial Powder Co. was the first employer to appeal from the rulings of the commission on account of a penalty assessed against it under section 9, which forbids the employment of minors in the hazardous industries of the State. This penalty amounted to $1,297.16, and, had it been paid by the Imperial Co. without protest, it would have kept the fund balance on the right side of the ledger.

It is significant also that up to the 1st of January it had not been necessary to institute proceedings against any firm in the State for nonpayment of its contribution. With the expiration of the first three months, however, a careful check was made by the chief auditor of the commission and a small number of delinquent firms (less than 5 per cent of the total of nearly 5,000 listed by the commission) were reported to the attorney general in order that suits might be brought. A round dozen of these are under way. Various other suits are in progress where workmen have been injured in hazardous pursuits while their employers were in default. These suits are instituted by the claimants themselves, who have the right to sue under such conditions, with the usual defenses of "fellow servant,' assumption of risk, and contributory negligence" abolished.

Litigation is also in prospect which will define the powers of the commission in respect to listing occupations on railroads doing interstate business, the latter claiming that practically every occupation in the operating department is of an interstate character and at least one claimant alleging that the occupation of a watchman at a bridge is of a purely local character.

So far only one claimant has taken his case into court, and, on the other hand, the commission has received hundreds of congratulatory letters from employers and employees, in which they set forth their satisfaction with the law and with the administration thereof by the commission.

The burning issue of the industrial situation to-day is the need of a first-aid fund. When the act was discussed in the legislature it already bore a provision for first aid, which was stricken out at the urgent request of the manufacturers, who declared that they desired to establish their own first-aid funds. It was also felt that the law, revolutionary as it was in a great many respects, would prove to be of sufficient burden without the addition of a first-aid provision. The whole matter was therefore stricken out and the schedules designed to accompany that provision were allowed to remain as they are, which is substantially as follows:

An unmarried workman gets $20 a month during disability, with $5 added for a wife and $5 for each child, up to $35, which may be increased 50 per cent during the first six months of disability. The most that any workman may draw, therefore, is $52.50, which, however, may never be over 60 per cent of his wages.

Practically the same figures apply to pension payments, so it will be seen that the law provides simply for the bare necessities of life during disability or after the death of a workman, and the expense of doctors' bills, hospital dues, etc., is absolutely unprovided for. It is clearly up to the employers and employees of the State to give this question of first aid careful and serious consideration, inasmuch as it constitutes, in the opinion of the commission, the most imminent problem in connection with the administration of industrial insurance in this State to-day.

On reaudit it was found that a reclassification of various industries was possible, by means of which many weak classes may be materially strengthened, thus making it a more practical business proposition to administer the funds in the event of crippling or disabling disasters.

The commission is continually confronted by new questions of administration, such as firms not formally included under the law who desire to take advantage of its benefits, now that it has been proven an unqualified success. Such firms are being referred by the commission to class 48, "nonhazardous firms under elective adoption," in which they and their employees may be included by mutual agreement and fully protected at the rate of 1.35 per cent.

COMPULSORY STATE INSURANCE FROM THE WORKMAN'S VIEWPOINT.

An address by John H. Wallace, member Industrial Insurance Commission of the State of Washington, before the American Association for Labor Legislation, Washington, D. C., December 28, 1911.

It has been said that so long as the workman receives compensation for work accidents he is not concerned with the source of the money; that he cares not whether the employer goes bankrupt paying the bill, whether insurance corporations assume the indebtedness, or whether it is paid out of a common fund contributed by all the industries. The attitude of the workman in the State of Washington, in the formation and final passage by the legislature of our compensation act, must tend to disprove this statement. The members of the American Association for Labor Legislation are familiar with the text of the act passed in my State. Other members of the Washington commission have explained to some of you the salient points. As members of a national organization concerned with the procuring for the American States the best system of compensation possible to replace the slow, unjust, and obsolete common-law procedure, you will be interested in the unique system of Washington, in formation and in process of administration, as viewed by the working people who are the beneficiaries.

I. WORKINGMEN UNDER THE COMMON LAW.

It is unnecessary for me to point out to this body the universal experience of working people under the so-called common-law system. Able investigators have conclusively demonstrated that not to exceed 15 per cent of the men injured in work accidents could obtain compensation under the old system, leaving the heaviest burden in modern life to fall on the weakest members of society in 85 per cent of such cases. Not only this, but the funds paid out by employers to protect themselves against excessive verdicts, if not all verdicts, have been largely wasted from the workman's viewpoint. Not less than $1,000,000 a year in each great industrial State was paid out by employers. Not more than 20 or 25 per cent reached the working people in the 15 per cent class entitled to compensation heretofore under the old system. This situation clearly demonstrates that where some few may have obtained heavy damages, the vast majority of workmen were left as charges upon society or to bear their burden alone with the best courage their crippled condition permitted.

The president of the United States Casualty Co., in a widely circulated address opposing State insurance, solicits condolence because for five-year periods he shows that the insistence of juries that damages be paid injured men has compelled these companies to disburse over 50 per cent of their premiums received, which means that less than 25 per cent of the premiums collected have reached the victims of accidents, the other 25 per cent being eaten up in attorney fees, court costs, time lost, and expense in going to lawyers, as against the 100 per cent collected in premiums from the industries, all going to injured workmen where the State insures the employees against industrial accidents.

Casualty companies, with their liking for litigation and their limitation of protection to $5,000, except with double or quadruple premiums, have not afforded protection to the many young industries endeavoring to get a foothold in our undeveloped State, and we were not sure that a system which would practically compel all employers to insure with these companies would protect the injured workman against the irresponsible, the bankrupt, or absconding employers who had lapsed their policies or violated some technical requirement in the same. The establishment of a State fund rests on the insurance principle of distribution of risk—that one employer should not bear alone the exceptional stroke of bad luck.

Economically the old system is wholly indefensible because of the waste of the 75 or 80 per cent of the funds taken out of industry to repair the man loss thereof—a waste absorbed my lawyers, by commissions paid for placing insurance policies, by executive salaries of numerous insurance corporations, by duplicated clerical forces, by dividends to clamorous stockholders of such companies, by claim agents who sought advancement by a record of elimination of claims and contemptible settlements, by payment of unnecessary witness fees and court costs, by maintaining the machinery of appeals and the multiplication of judges necessary to hear such lawsuits, both meritorious and born of fraud. The magnitude of this litigation which necessarily arouses class antagonism, recrimination, and bitterness, also in no small way has contributed to the restlessness of the working class caused by the delays of justice, and of the criticism of the courts as institutions. It is useless to say to this body that the system so characterized is universally condemned, and the only question which arises in the minds of thinking people is, What is the best system to replace it?

In the State of Washington the workmen have contributed their full share of time and thought and cooperation in evolving a system which, we think, is in most respects superior to any piece of compensation legislation in the United States. To quote Mr. Robert W. Bruere in the October Harper's Monthly, "One State, Washington, honoring the liberal spirit of the West, has inaugurated a system of compulsory State insurance against industrial accidents which for comprehensive justice and social wisdom compares favorably with the most advanced legislation in Europe."

An able corporation lawyer of Spokane had in a previous legislature submitted a compensation bill under the elective plan, providing a maximum of $3,000 in event of death. This bill, not having the indorsement of either employers or the workmen of the State, got scant consideration at the hands of the legislature of 1909.

The Tacoma Commercial Club, in August, 1910, at a time when the United Mine Workers were in convention in Seattle, issued a call for a meeting of manufacturers and labor men of the State to discuss some form of remedial legislation.

II. THE INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

As might have been anticipated, neither the representatives of capital nor labor came into the meeting with any concrete program, yet as a result the governor of the State, Hon. M. E. Hay, was empowered to appoint an investigating commission of 10 members, 5 representing the employers and 5 the employees. On September 29, 1910, the commission so appointed organized and secured the services of Harold Preston, of Seattle, as it legal advisor, that gentleman being a profound student of industrial problems and one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the Pacific Northwest.

While the sessions of this commission were often heated and the interests represented not always harmonious, yet it must be said that the prompt, courageous, remedial legislation which was born in this commission was made possible by the fact that in this new north western State are to be found not only big, generous employers who were disgusted with the legal system surrounding them, and who often drew large checks, not in charity but in justice, to compensate the men in their employ or their dependents; but because likewise, among the working people of this State are to be found the youngest and best blood of this continent and of Europe—brave spirits who left the old home conditions to become full-blown men in a new land of opportunity and do their part in obtaining justice for themselves and their fellows—the same mingling of stocks which we find in the early settlement of the Atlantic coast, building a people which, we believe, represents the very flower of civilized mankind.

This body will be interested in the contested questions before that commission. The limitation of the amount to be paid in event of death was one resulting in the adoption of the principle that $4,000 to a beneficiary aged 30 years would be a reserve that would guarantee a pension throughout life or dependency and insure the self-respect and good citizenship—insure the grocery bill, if you please—of all survivors, most of whom heretofore had been obliged to lower their standard of living, if not to accept the bitter bread of public or private charity. In other words, the principle adopted in the State of Washington is not the damage measured by the earning power of the workman killed or permanently disabled, but the insuring of a monthly payment to one who in the front ranks of industry has gone down before the flying shafts or whirring saws or munching cogs, smothering gases or falls of rock, and stands before society a crippled and deserving veteran. Heretofore Governments have gladly pensioned the young soldier injured in the course of duty in defending hearth and home or in righting insufferable wrongs abroad; the working people, at least, now insist that the soldier of peace, also obeying the commands of society, who produces clothing for the body or food for the blood or a roof for the household, shall also be pensioned when mangled, maimed, and dismembered by the machinery that moves with nerves of steel and fingers of brass, so gigantic and elemental that flesh and bone are as nothing in its power.

The committee, therefore, with one accord agreed on the principle that lump-sum payments to helpless survivors should rarely be given. However, the commission, at its discretion, has ample power to pay off a mortgage on a widow's home, or advance money to permanently cure a crippled child, or, in other words, commute a portion or all of the reserve fund set aside for the survivor's use into a lump-sum payment. The scale of payments for partial disability was graduated down from $1,500 maximum, the compensation for the loss of the major arm, other injuries to be compensated in proportion to the $1,500 maximum.

III. First-Aid Fund.

The principle of a fund as a buffer for first aid to the injured was recognized by the commission on the insistence of labor's representatives, and the following sections were taken from the draft presented by the commission to the legislature:

"CREATION OF FIRST-AID FUND.

"SEC. 10. A fund is hereby created in the State treasury to be known as the first-aid fund. Into it shall be paid by each employer on or before the 15th day of November, 1911, and each month thereafter, the sum of 4 cents for each day's work or fraction thereof done by each workman for him during the preceding calendar month or part thereof. Two cents of such 4 cents shall be deducted by the employer from the pay of the workman.

"DISBURSEMENTS OF FIRST-AID FUND.

"SEC. 11. Upon the occurrence of any injury to a workman he shall receive from the first-aid fund proper and necessary medical, surgical, and hospital services and compensation for the period of temporary or other disability in the sum of $5 per week for not to exceed three weeks, payable at the end of each week. It shall be the duty of the employer to see to it that immediate medical and surgical services are rendered and transportation to hospital provided, and all charges therefor shall be audited and paid and be payable only by the department out of the first-aid fund."

In the first aid the principle of joint contribution by employer and workman as approved and the amount—4 cents a day—equally divided, approximates the payment of $1 per month, the usual contribution to hospital funds in the lumbering and coal-mining industries in our State. The payment for ambulances, physicians, and hospital treatment and surgical appliances, limited to three weeks and to $5 per week, was designed to prevent simulation and fraud upon the State, in addition to securing that instant attention to the injured on which humanity insists.

Labor opposed joint contribution to the fund further and other than first aid for the reason that the employer owns and operates the dangerous agencies for his own profit, and has heretofore contributed, so far as compelled to, to the man-loss resulting from such dangerous agencies by payments to casualty companies or through the channels of the courts—in many instances both, since the usual limit of protection in a casualty policy is $5,000 and the amounts claimed in lawsuits tend to greatly exceed that sum.

The employer, so far as allowed by competition and if not bankrupted by a sympathetic jury, has passed these charges on to the public in the price of the product, along with the depreciation of machinery and plant. Labor saw no injustice in providing that in the same way the buying public should pay for broken men in the industry as well as for broken machinery, the equivalent paid out and wasted heretofore being now turned into legitimate channels for the actual sufferers of the industrial system. In either event the public must pay the price either in the product or in institutions of relief or in charity's grudging doles.

In the fixing of rates, according to the presumed hazard of the occupations regarded as extra hazardous, the commission was guided by an actuary of long casualty experience. In the lumbering industry, for instance, $1.50 per $100 of pay roll was the average rate charged on insurance policies. One per cent more was added, making the State rate $2.50.

The term "extra hazardous" in the Washington draft and law was inserted out of fear of constitutional objections otherwise, but all employers outside the law may voluntarily bring their business under its terms by joint agreement with the employees.

IV. In the Legislature.

The Washington Compensation Act as approved by the commission reached the legislature as one of the leading measures of the administration of Gov. Hay, and its passage was widely advocated and as vigorously opposed, particularly in the State senate, where various other bills were proposed to protect particular interests or promote pet schemes or to advance political interests of several senators. As the bill emerged into law the first-aid feature was stricken out. It was opposed in fear that State supervision of hospital treatment would result in the upbuilding of a political machine for administration and in the location and construction of State-built hospitals. It was opposed as abolishing hospital funds in remote logging camps where a resident physician is commonly retained on salary to look after not only accidents but sickness and family ills as well.

It was opposed also because the deduction from wages operated to take a heavy percentage out of earnings of low-paid employees; and, lastly, because it was argued that this was a daring piece of social legislation, and would be sufficiently cumbrous for the first two years of its experimentation without the burden of the first-aid feature and the close supervision and weekly payment of bills required. In the discussions one representative, representing a district devoted largely to logging and lumbering interests, insisted that the State, with its slow, incompetent, and bureaucratic tendencies could not give men the paternal care which the corporations were now efficiently supplying, to which Representative Teats, a Tacoma lawyer who had built up a fortune as a damage-case specialist and who handled the measure in the house, replied that unquestionably the first-aid feature would interfere with a well-known corporation graft, where men were kept in constant rotation in order to obtain from them a hospital fee—a deduction of $1 per man—that working in conjunction with the so-called employment agencies they kept three crews constantly moving—one crew coming, one crew leaving, and one at work—a dollar a head per month collected from five or six crews each 30 days.

While in the legislature the bill was improved in two important particulars; first, the objections against a huge fund being taken out of the industries of the State and piled up in the State treasury by the continuous compulsory payment of a flat rate on the pay rolls, instead of one common accident fund of all employers, with men in all degrees of hazard, the legislature established 47 funds, representing 47 compulsory associations of employers. Related industries are grouped together, and the opportunity for criticism of particular establishments and mutual steps toward prevention of accidents thereby greatly encouraged.

For instance, class 10 embraces only employers engaged in logging operations, sawmills, shingle mills, etc.

Class 14, street railways.

Class 16, coal mines, etc.

Already the lumbering organization is looking forward to standardizing of plants and machinery in order to prevent accidents and save themselves money. Under our law the fewer the accidents in any class the smaller the amount which those particular employers must contribute. The State pays the costs of administration out of general taxes.

Second. Provision is made in the law as enacted that whenever any one of the 47 groups of employers has sufficient funds on hand to care for the accidents of their particular class no further sums will be assessed until the fund is reasonably depleted by the drain of compensatory payments.

Other than the changes just enumerated the act passed our legislature as recommenedd by the investigating commission. A handsome majority was given in the house, but in the senate, owing to the attitude of senators with bills of their own, all the resources of the governor were caled upon to obtain the two votes needed to pass the measure. Some of these lawyer senators saw no further into social needs than the limitation of lawyers' fees in damage cases to 10 or 25 per cent of the verdict. At this point the remarkable speech of Peter Henretty, a coal miner from Cle Elum, on the floor of the senate probably did more than any other one thing in compelling the passage of the law to compensate injured workmen.

V. The Law in Operation.

The workmen's compensation act was pasesd and signed by Gov. Hay on March 14, 1911, the three members of the administrative commission were appointed, and the new department organized June 8, 1911. Beginning July 1, the commission procured the services of about 20 men as traveling auditors and began a preliminary survey of the State to ascertain the industries within the scope of the law. It was gratifying that in this first contact not less than 90 per cent of the employers were found to be in the most hearty accord with the law, gladly giving every courtesy and the heartiest cooperation to the agents of the commission seeking information and their pay rolls, and remitted about $400,000 on approximately 4,000 pay rolls.

The State-wide feeling of employers was that this law, dispensing with middlemen and with court processes, enabled the man hurt to receive one hundred cents on the dollar paid out for such purpose by the employer. Suggestive of this attitude is a statement by one of the largest employers of labor in the city of Spokane, who when the question arose as to whether this system would not increase the rate of insurance, said: "What if the rates were a little higher, so long as the benefits went directly to the injured employee or his dependents and tended to a better feeling between employer and employee."

The employers were quite unfamiliar with the break-up of the accident fund into 47 groups, and were gratified to learn that they were classed with employers of their own kind and yet in groups sufficiently large to give effect to the insurance principle of distributing the risk and not bankrupting the establishment that might have a series of accidents.

Administratively the division of the plant into extra hazardous and nonhazardous departments constituted a vexatious problem, but the commission's attitude in treating the plant as a unit and including all employees therein was generally approved.

Another problem is the twilight zone between State and Federal jurisdiction in interstate commerce as applied to steamboats on Puget Sound and on the Columbia River, State boundary bridges and various railway operations, Alaska fishing boats with canning establishments in the State of Washington, stevedores and longshoremen loading and unloading ocean carriers under admiralty jurisdiction.

It is certainly to be hoped that Congress in its forthcoming legislation will so dovetail with State activities that compensation will be sure and the process of obtaining it rendered certain as between State and Federal courts or systems.

The problem of contractors is vexatious, jumping in their operations from one class to another with big jobs or small jobs or no jobs at all—in many instances without offices or records—now employed by municipalities and now by private citizens. The contractor erecting a 42-story building in Seattle is embraced under the law, and also the one employing two men building a chicken coop, who may fall from a trestle and claim State compensation. These items suggest the complexity of administrative detail.

The rates are tentative, subject to future adjustment; not by the commission, however, but by the legislature. A rate of 2½ per cent for sawmill employees is apparently yielding ample funds for their protection; but with a rate of 5 per cent placed on bricklaying and 3½ per cent on "carpenter work not otherwise specified," it remains to be seen if inequalities are not here present to be worked out and remedied by the legislature with the aid and advice of the present commission.

Rates in the State of Washington, while apparently fixed by the text of the law, are, in fact, automatically adjustable to the accidents which occur in all continuously operating classes at least. In the contractor classes equity between competitors seems to demand continuous monthly payment until the legislature revises construction rates.

The employers of my State have been marvelously fruitful in suggesting variations in rates and reasons therefor—often unmindful of the fact that a small class is a dangerous class for an individual employer to be in; for instance, the powder class, where eight girls from 14 to 21 years of age were instantly killed on November 1, requiring a fund to be set aside amounting to about $8,000 to insure the monthly payments to their parents. Only four powder plants, all but one very small, operate in the State of Washington. These plants, by reason of that accident, have witnessed their joint fund more than absorbed, making a deficit to be made up at the end of this year, a condition which applies to any class at the end of any year where a deficit at the present rates results.

On this question of rates it does not follow that casualty companies' rates heretofore represent the real hazard—rather "what the traffic will bear." Two sawmills of the same company operating within a short distance of each other illustrate my point. With no apparent difference in hazard one plant paid $1.35 and the other $1.50 per $100 of payroll.

We are not convinced in Washington that the casualty companies' experience at the present time will give any adequate standard of rates. They refused to give to the public figures which their actuaries had already compiled, but in their experience they have dealt with only 15 or 20 per cent of the injuries chargeable to industry. We are not sure that our State department is not as competent to find correct rates by experimentation as they are. Four times in one year in Seattle they changed the rates on automobile insurance. (Under our Washington law we adjust the rate each month by making an assessment or passing up the opportunity.) This is recognized by the companies themselves, as Actuary Wolfe, in a widely circulated address, recommends State control of rates as a cure for evils admittedly existing in these companies.

The business interests of the State, always jealous of the drain of funds to Wall Street or other eastern localities, are pleased with the principle of home rule of compensation funds. Says Gov. Hay:

"Out of $600,000 collected from the employers of the State of Washington in 1909 only $100,000 ever reached the injured workman or his family—half a million dollars drawn from the avenues of commerce and industry to pay an army of officers, agents, and adjusters of the liability companies and to line the pockets of the stockholders whose only interest is that of a dollar-and-cent proposition."

Administratively the absence of the first-aid feature has of course raised problems. Employers whose injured men have heretofore been sent to the hospital and first aid paid for by casualty companies now find the State gives no relief except by the payment after 30 days in part or in full to the workman on account of the injury. In some cases the attending physicians and city hospitals are reported not to give the best care and attention the case warrants, which, of course, represents ultimately an unnecessary burden upon the class to which his employer belongs.

VI. TWO MONTHS OF ACCIDENT EXPERIENCE.

Opponents of compulsory State insurance point out as the two greatest weaknesses of the system: First, that such a system does not operate effectively in preventing accidents, and, second, that it operates unfairly in grouping together employers whose establishments represent great differences in danger to the employees.

Affirmatively the Washington State Asylum endeavors to check accidents: First, with a penal increase of rates applied to any establishment where accidents for a sufficient period show careless management, defective or obsolete machinery; second, it also penalizes the violation of safeguarding statutes and the employment of children under working age by requiring the employer to pay into the fund as penalty 50 per cent of what the law allows the victim.

The present commission is in contact and cooperation with the State University and the State Industrial College to obtain special studies in causes of accidents and university extension lectures on methods and appliances for safeguarding, hence we anticipate large results, since it must be evident that employers will desire to save money rather than have accidents, for in many instances all they need is education.

Mr. Tecumseh Sherman, former labor commissioner of the State of New York, is much concerned for fear State bureaus will either be unable to afford as prompt compensation as the individual firms or casualty companies could, or if they do act with speed, it will be with a paternal indulgence that must cripple industries or seriously burden the general taxpayer who maintains the officials of inspection.

We feel that it is not proven that the State can not procure as competent employees as casualty companies, since we have been able to obtain in our service in Washington some of the best-trained and most-ambitious claim agents and auditors heretofore connected with casualty corporations in the State, and the compulsory associations of employers in our State where establishments, big and little, are peculiarly anxious that their competitor pay equally with themselves are prolific in suggestion, and they are ready for the voluntary associations looking to standardizing and accident prevention, which this commission will be active in getting organized.

Mr. Sherman does not like the Washington law, because the compensation is not measured in all cases by the wage, but we in Washington did not like Mr. Sherman's New York law, which provided a payment to a widow of a sum equal to four years' wages of her husband, in no case to exceed $3,000, which she might dissipate in her ignorance of financial pitfalls, or the provision to a workman totally disabled that he should receive a weekly payment not to exceed $10 a week, nor to extend more than eight years from the date of the injury, leaving the widow or the blind workman in old age a helpless charge on public or private charity, and depriving, under these conditions, the child of its legitimate birthright under such a law. Under our Washington law the first care has been that the child of the present shall have an opportunity to be a good citizen of the future.

Mr. Sherman, in his memorial to the congressional committee, insists that the excess paid by the good employer appears to give gratuitous insurance to the escaping firm. We must grant that our administrative problem is difficult as to the intermittent or alien contractor, the dummy corporation, the tramp ship, and the elusive little shop, but we believe that our system will catch such employers as readily as the casualty company, because the man hurt will come to the State for compensation and the employer must then deal with our department. If he refuses, we reach him with summary process, with civil suit in the name of the State, or with criminal procedure, or all three.

Our law is criticized as merely an insurance against destitution, and we grant the charge as to the widow and her flock, or as to the sightless or armless victim of a bloody misfortune of peace. Our law does give compensation in other cases.

Perhaps it is fair to the employer to say that no workman has any assurance that he will continue to earn his present wage for eight years or one year; but every workman is entitled that he shall not starve in civilized society if rendered unable to labor, and that his helpless dependents shall not be driven to charity, or worse. Our law provides for a monthly payment of from $20 to $52.50 to a workman temporarily totally disabled, providing such payment does not exceed 60 per cent of his wages; and our compensation scale for permanent partial disability runs from $1,500 for a major arm at or above the elbow, and $1,250 for loss of one eye or hand at wrist, down to $25 for the little toe or first joint of the little finger.

Furthermore, we see no reason why, as a matter of public policy, the State should not encourage a skilled workman with large earning power to provide private insurance for his family through the fact of being familiar with the maximum allowed by the State in event of his death or disability.

Mr. Sherman believes that the State commission would allow exaggerated and doubtful claims to please the working people. In Washington, however, the commission, with the maximum laid down by the legislature, has prepared a scale for practically all injuries, based on scientific information obtained from reports of the Surgeon General of the United States Army, standard texts, and 100 detailed schedules from eminent surgeons throughout the United States. The practice of the present commission is that no claim is allowed until the employer has made a detailed report, the claimant likewise, and also the physician and witnesses. In case of doubt the nearest agent is ordered to make special investigation; in case of continuing disability condition reports by the physician or employer are required to check simulation, fraud, and error.

The legal theory in Washington is that the sovereign State practically licenses these dangerous agencies operating for profit, requiring that degree of care from all operating them that none shall cause accidents, and if accidents do happen, as we know they must, then that the employer shall pay into a guaranty fund to care for the victims, and we believe that the Supreme Court of the United States, when it comes to this question, will find that the public welfare demands this legislation more imperatively than it demands contribution by banks to protect depositors.

The first two months of experience seem to show about 600 accidents per month, varying from the loss of life and total permanent disability down to trivial bumps and bruises and even torn trousers.

In closing, gentlemen of the Labor Legislation Association, as a citizen of one of the newest and most virile States of the American sisterhood, as a workman almost born in the mines of England and a graduate of the child-labor system of the mines of Pennsylvania, as an operative in and about the coal mines of Washington for 10 years, and having been honored with the privilege of representing organized labor on various occasions and for considerable periods, I point with pride, as an old phrase goes, to my magnificent State that without cowardice and without hypocrisy threw aside all fetters of ancient custom and entangling legal verbage and hide-bound decisions and enacted a law not in charity and not in malice but in justice to every man who invests his brain or his brawn in developing the resources of the Commonwealth. And in so doing the workmen of the State and the employers thereof are not unmindful of the greatness which must come to this State and its people.

The Panama Canal will bring ships and products not only from the Atlantic seaboard but from Europe with the steerage cargoes of wistful-eyed men from all sections of the Old World seeking work in a new land. We are tributary to the undeveloped empire of Alaska and the front door to the millions of the Orient. We are providing for that industrial empire on the western edge of the continent which is yet in its infancy. We are not unmindful of the magnificent mountains that surround the valleys and inland sea of Puget Sound, from which leap white torrents with the unharnessed energy of a million wild horses and sufficient for the turning of countless wheels that will needlessly grind and maim and dismember men unless such dangerous agencies are so operated that accidents will be reduced to the minimum. And we are not evading full responsibility that human beings who have given all that God gave them to the service of mankind shall be compensated for their mite offering, even though they be known by number and are of that class which have heretofore been termed "just wops."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we are about to vote on this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to call attention to an obvious error made in the reprint of the bill. On page 44 of this new print I find the words "or after," as though the amendment had been offered and adopted. As a matter of fact, no such amendment has been adopted, and I ask that the words be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the words will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD several telegrams and communications from railway men in Oklahoma. I have not the papers with me at the moment, and I ask permission to insert them hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have about reached the time to vote on this measure. The few minutes remaining give little opportunity for further debate. I can only state the case.

After years of effort on the part of the men organized and doing the work for the railroad companies the Congress of the United States passed the most favorable legislation in behalf of the men that has ever been passed by any country in the world. Doubt existed as to the constitutionality of the act. Lawyers throughout the country hesitated to trust their clients' cases under it, and only last February was the law sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Immediately upon establishing their rights the proposition comes to us to repeal the law establishing their rights and to substitute this new untried measure.

I am opposed to this substitute because I do not think it does the men justice. The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] favors it and manifests much interest in the men. I yield to his greater interest, because we all know his big heart, filled with love of mankind, that makes his very presence warm the neighborhood which he occupies.

Mr. President, two reasons are submitted in support of this bill. First, it is urged that we are to do away with litigation, a thing greatly to be desired, but who has shown that this measure can do away with litigation? Such a measure has not done away with it anywhere else. Our reports from England show us to-day an increase in litigation in their courts where the workmen's compensation act is involved. The reports that come to the commission from the various roads indicate that litigation is being minimized under existing law.

In my own State, in 1910, we duplicated for intrastate transactions the Federal employers' liability act. We have had the operation of the laws applied to intrastate transactions, and suits by employees against railways have practically stopped in Georgia. Liability being practically established by the employers' liability act, nearly every case is settled by the claim agents, and the percentage of litigation as compared to the accidents is less under our employers' liability act than it is under the English compensation laws.

To broadly state that you are presenting a measure which will stop litigation is easy. To present an argument to sustain the statement was not undertaken. What is there in this measure to stop litigation? You have made it much worse than the English act. The English act has a provision calculated to lessen litigation, in that it gives the maximum recovery for the most extreme injury and leaves all the subordinate injuries with the right to claim that maximum. The railroad companies have an inducement to settle all the smaller injuries lest the employee sue and the courts allow the maximum.

But this bill not only makes a maximum for the largest injuries, but goes on down to the smallest injuries and makes a very small maximum for them, leaving therefore no latitude to the employee to recover any considerable sum in any case and leaving him with no margin for negotiation. Under your proposed bill the claim agent can hold over the injured employee a threat that if he does not accept whatever is offered him he will be compelled to sue before the trial judge without a jury, with the right in the railroad to take the case up to the higher court, and with the further right to the latter, whenever it sees fit, to bring him back through the same process time and time again, and with the further threat that even if the employee recovers the workman's compensation act will give him practically nothing.

With this bill you are passing, confronting the employee, giving a maximum very small for all kinds of injuries, and graded smaller and smaller as you get to the smaller injuries, there is nothing to help him to settle and everything to say to the railroad company, "Litigate as much as you want. You can not have much to pay. Offer as little as you please. The employee must take it, or else the burden of the trial you put on him will be more than the amount he can possibly recover." Instead of stopping litigation, this provision furnishes the means to facilitate it, unless it is intended that the employee's compensation is reduced to nothing.

There is another way you could have stopped litigation as well as this. You could have passed a bill providing that under no circumstances could the employee have anything at all. I am surprised that that plan did not occur to some of the warm advocates of terminating litigation.

Now I want to come for a moment to the amounts provided in this bill and show you how unjust they are. It is said that you are providing for the man whose own negligence causes the accident, and you are also providing for the man who is injured through nobody's negligence, and because you are extending by the bill the compensation principle to these men heretofore not compensated you must make these severe cuts in the rights of those who can now recover full compensation.

I want to show Senators—and I can do it in a moment—that not one out of ten will receive rights in the future who have not them now. They have shown you no figures. They have talked loudly about $10,000,000, the present amount, and $15,000,000, the future amount. They have given you nothing to sustain this claim. There are no statistics as applied to the present law. Let us take the case of a conductor. What are the opportunities of a conductor being injured by his own negligence? He occupies practically the same place as a passenger. Not one case occurs out of fifty where under the present law he could not recover. This bill would pay him, if injured, in this one more case in fifty where now he can not recover, but it will cut down two-thirds from his present right of recovery in the 49 cases, and in the one additional case give him only one-third of his loss.

Take the case of an engineer. What are the opportunities for him to be injured outside of his own negligence? Through the negligence of the operators, through the negligence of the other engineer, through the negligence of the trainmen, through the condition of the track, and through defects in the engine. There are ten other ways to injure him to one from his own negligence. There are ten chances in which he is protected to-day to the one chance of protection that you give him, and yet for giving him that one new chance you cut the chances he now has down two-thirds, to give him one-third of his injury if he is hurt by this new chance.

You may take the case of any railroad employee, and the employee may take his own case, and look around and see that when you undertake to make him believe that you are adding ninety new opportunities to recover to the ten he now has, you are wasting words and that your claims are utterly without foundation.

I submit to the personal information of any Senator, I submit to his personal consideration, the case of any one of these employees of a railroad. Look over the field and see what the chances are for him to be injured, and see how many of them he already has covered, and how little you give him by this new legislation. You do not know whether it will apply to trackmen or not. You do not know whether it will apply to yardmen. You do not know whether it will apply to the men in the machine shops.

Now, how are the employees cut down by this new bill? You provide, first, that however much he may make he shall not be considered to have been making over $100. Is it fair? Would it spoil the whole scheme, instead of limiting him to $100, if you were to treat him on the basis of what he actually earned? Would such an amendment be destructive to this beautiful structure that has been so carefully prepared? It would increase the compensation more nearly to what the men actually lose by injuries.

Let me ask your attention to the second plan of compensation, which is based, it seems to me, upon a radically unsound principle. You take the men with permanent injuries—the loss of an arm or the loss of a limb or a foot. There is a permanent injury, and yet instead of fixing the percentage of his wages lost by the injury and giving him permanently that amount you give it to him for only a few months. If the injury is permanent, the compensation should be permanent.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], almost in tears, talked about these people who were going to be hurt between now and December, if you do not pass the bill to-day. I should like for him to tell what is to become of the men, after they have been hurt and have drawn the pittance you give them for several months, when your bill stops all payments to them? I would be glad to gather a few of his tears and mingle them with the tears of some of the Senators on the other side, and save them for the men permanently injured, whom you would compensate for only a few short months.

I insist, Senators, that any sound principle of compensation, where the injury is a permanent one—permanently lessening the capacity of the man to labor—should continue coequal with the time that the injury is to last.

I have prepared a number of amendments, and others will be offered. Amendments that I submit will not destroy the entire structure of the bill, but they will be a little improvement to it, and they are amendments which ought to appeal to those Senators whose sole concern is the good of the men, who are not thinking for one moment about the stockholders who own the road, who have no associations with those who own the road, but whose close relations with the men cause them to act solely for the good of the men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 4 o'clock). The time for voting has commenced.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. May I, just before the time is up, ask permission to have printed in the RECORD two letters on this matter in explanation, in part, of my vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letters are as follows:

SAN XAVIER DIVISION, NO. 313,
ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS OF AMERICA,
Tucson, Ariz., April 1, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Division No. 313 of the Order of Railway Conductors of America has instructed me to address a communication to you respectfully requesting that you support the bill that has been introduced in the Senate as S. 5382, by Senator SUTHERLAND, who was chairman of the committee appointed to secure an equitable workman's compensation law, and in the House as H. R. 20487, by Mr. BRANTLEY, vice chairman. Our joint national representative, Mr. H. E. Wills, who is now in Washington, will explain to you more fully the time, labor, and expense that the labor organizations have been to in getting these bills introduced. He not only represents the Order of Railway Conductors, but the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen as well, and we would deem it as a special favor if you would make an effort to become acquainted with Mr. Wills. Trusting that you will give this matter your attention and favorable consideration, we are,

Yours, truly, SAN XAVIER DIVISION, NO. 313,
By C. F. DAVANT,
Secretary and Treasurer.

DEWEY LODGE, NO. 460,
BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Tucson, Ariz., April 4, 1912.

Mr. MARK SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The members of this lodge are very anxious for the passage of workingmen's compensation act, and favor the bill introduced in the Senate as S. 5382, by Senator SUTHERLAND, and in the House as H. R. 20487, by Mr. BRANTLEY.

Any assistance you can give toward the passage of this bill will be appreciated by the members of this organization.

Thanking, etc.,

[SEAL.] J. H. HIGHBAUGH,
Secretary 460, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the following amendment: In section 4, page 2, line 20, after the word "specified," insert "but this shall not be construed to reduce the length of time over which payments shall extend wherever specific periods are herein fixed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. REED. I want to get the reference.

The SECRETARY. Section 4, page 2, of the bill, after the word "specified," in lines 19 and 20.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Secretary read the section as it would read when amended. It is impossible to understand the amendment without the context.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read as it would stand if amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended, section 4 will read:

SEC. 4. That the first 14 calendar days of disability resulting from any injury shall be excluded from the period of time for which compensation is hereinafter specified, but this shall not be construed to reduce the length of time over which payments shall extend wherever specific periods are herein fixed: Provided, however, That during said 14 days the employer shall furnish all medical and surgical aid and assistance that may be reasonably required, including hospital services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in response to the request of hundreds of thousands of these working men, and in order that Senators may understand the amendments in the bill, I move that the further consideration of the bill——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until June 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from North Carolina that under the unanimous consent agreement that motion is to be entertained immediately before the vote upon the final passage of the bill is taken; so it can not well be made now.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought the understanding was that it could be made at any time before the vote on the final passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; "immediately before," as the Chair understands it. The Chair will have the unanimous consent agreement read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is further agreed that on Monday next, not later than 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment then pending or which may be offered to the said bill, and upon the bill itself; and further, that immediately prior to the time for taking the vote on the passage of the bill, if a motion then be made to postpone the further consideration thereof to a day certain, it shall be entertained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see I am wrong, Mr. President. Having made the original proposition and having asked that that exception be made, and that the motion might be made at any time after 4 o'clock, I thought it in order now; but I see that under the unanimous consent agreement, as it here appears, it is not now in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, lines 6 to 8, inclusive, strike out the following:

The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts herein set forth in any trial before the court or jury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think if the Senator from Utah is heard from about the amendment it will obviate the necessity of a roll call on agreeing to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I may be permitted, so far as I can, I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be taken vive voce again. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator that it relates to the title, and the title will be considered after the bill has passed.

Mr. CULBERSON. It relates to the title and to section 3 also. They go together necessarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the title of the bill strike out the word "exclusive" and insert the word "optional," and strike out section 3 of the bill entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the reading of the section proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. That except as provided herein no such employer shall be civilly liable for any personal injury to or death of any such employee resulting from any such accident.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). I wish to state that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I am advised that if my colleague were present he would vote to sustain the committee and against the amendment.

Mr. BORAH (when Mr. HEYBURN's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] is necessarily absent. As has been stated, he is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I will allow this statement to stand for the day.

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is necessarily absent from the city. I will allow this statement to stand for every vote save the one upon the final passage of the bill.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when Mr. PENROSE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If present my colleague would vote "nay." I will allow this statement to stand for the day.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I have just been informed that if he were present he would vote "nay." I therefore desire to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER (after having voted in the negative). I understood that my pair, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], has not voted, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 52, as follows:

So Mr. CULBERSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 24 of the last print of the bill, amend section 14, paragraph 4, by striking out of that paragraph the following words:

If a trial by jury is not demanded by either party within five days after the filing and service of the exceptions a jury shall be deemed to be waived, and the court shall thereupon hear and determine the case without a jury.

Mr. STONE. Let us see how the section would read if amended as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as it would read if amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended, paragraph 4 of section 14, beginning at the bottom of page 23, would read:

(4) Where exceptions are filed, either party shall have the right, upon a written demand filed with the clerk, to a trial by jury, upon the claim for compensation under this act, as in cases at common law. The party making such demand shall at the time thereof pay to the clerk the sum of $5 as a jury fee. The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury. Where the case is tried by a jury the court may submit special interrogatories, to be answered by the jury in the form of a special verdict.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Just at that place I have an amendment to the amendment to perfect the section. I intended to offer it at a later time, but I think I will do so at this stage.

I move to amend, on page 24 of the last print, by striking out all after the word "by," in line 3, down to and including the word "exceptions," in line 4, and insert:

The party filing said exceptions within five days after the service of the exceptions, then the other party shall have the right for an additional five days to demand a jury on the terms aforesaid, and if neither party shall demand a jury within the times herein respectively allowed—

Then the section goes on to read—a jury shall be deemed to be waived, etc.

The intention of the amendment is to give the party to file the exceptions five days in which to demand a jury, and if he does not do so within five days then the other party shall have the right to five days.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as a matter of inquiry, would not the Senator be willing to let the amendment I offer be voted on and then offer his later?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I would be very glad to do so if it will not preclude my rights by doing that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is to perfect the text of the bill, the Chair understands, and that is perfectly in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to my amendment. Possibly it may not be antagonized.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let it be read. Let that part of the section be read as it would read if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, beginning with line 3, after the word "by," strike out the words "either party within five days after the filing and service of the exceptions," and insert the words:

The party filing said exceptions within five days after the service of the exceptions, then the other party shall have the right for an additional five days to demand a jury on the terms aforesaid, and if neither party shall demand a jury within the times herein respectively allowed—

So that if amended it will read:

If a trial by jury is not demanded by the party filing said exceptions within five days after the service of the exceptions, then the other party shall have the right for an additional five days to demand a jury on the terms aforesaid, and if neither party shall demand a jury within the times herein respectively allowed, a jury shall be deemed to be waived, and the court shall thereupon hear and determine the case without a jury. The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury. Where the case is tried by a jury the court may submit special interrogatories, to be answered by the jury in the form of a special verdict.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I see no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. That amendment is offered as an amendment to the amendment I offered?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is offered as an amendment to perfect the original text before the Senator proposes to strike out. That is the parliamentary course. Then will come the question on the motion to strike out.

Mr. REED. Very well. I merely wished to understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I desire to modify it, however, to include this language——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so included. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

Mr. REED. So that the entire limitation will be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. The question now is to strike out the words as they have been amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As amended. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 14, on page 24, of the reprint of the bill, beginning in line 2 with the word "If," to strike out the following words:

If a trial by jury is not demanded by the party filing said exceptions within five days after the service of the exceptions, then the other party shall have the right for an additional five days to demand a jury on the terms aforesaid, and if neither party shall demand a jury within the times herein respectively allowed a jury shall be deemed to be waived, and the court shall thereupon hear and determine the cause without a jury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). As before stated, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], and shall vote. I desire this statement to stand for the remainder of the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP (when Mr. DIXON's name was called). The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I make that statement for the day.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). In the absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). I desire that the statement made by me on the former roll call as to my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] shall stand during all the votes taken through the day.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Under the arrangement with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which will enable both the Senator from Mississippi and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and ask that the pair and the announcement stand for the remainder of the day. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 53, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3, on page 2, the following words:

Provided, That it shall be competent for such employer and employee to stipulate and agree in writing that the liability of the employer to the employee for any personal injury to or death of such employee shall be as prescribed in the act of April 22, 1908, entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have heretofore announced the transfer of my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I now make that announcement to stand for the remainder of the day. I vote "nay."

So Mr. BACON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send forward an amendment, and on its adoption I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, to be numbered section 31½, as follows:

SEC. 31½. That nothing in this act shall be held, in any manner, to deprive any State court of jurisdiction of all common-law and statutory remedies heretofore existing for all cases of negligence occurring upon any railroad doing business in the State in which said railroad is incorporated, notwithstanding the fact that said railroad at the time is engaged in doing an interstate business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from South Carolina has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Having a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Ashurst	Gore	O'Gorman	Simmons

So Mr. OVERMAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, lines 20 and 21, after the word "hundred" and before the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the words "and fifty," and in line 21, after the word "than," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to read:

For the purpose of such calculation, no employee's wages shall be considered to be more than $150 a month or less than $75 a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON and Mr. SMITH of Georgia demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I notice the absence from the Chamber of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. Having a pair with him I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

For the purpose of such calculation, no employee's wages shall be considered to be more than $125 a month or less than $75 a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again I announce my pair, and I withhold my vote. If the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] were present, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. REED's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is one other amendment which I propose.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "arising out of and in the course of his employment."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer an amendment. I move to strike out, beginning with line 17, on page 32, and ending with line 12, on page 33, both lines inclusive. The purpose is to do away with the discrimination between resident and nonresident dependents.

The SECRETARY. On page 32 it is proposed to strike out subsection 7 of section 21, which reads as follows:

(7) The foregoing subdivisions of this clause (A) shall apply only to dependents who at the time of the death of the deceased employee are actual residents of the United States or contiguous countries, except (a) if the nonresident dependent be a widow and there be no resident child or children entitled to compensation under this act, there shall be paid to her a lump sum equal to one year's wages of the deceased employee, as hereinbefore defined and limited, for the benefit of herself and nonresident children, if any; (b) if the nonresident dependent be a child or children under the age of 16 years and there be no widow, resident or nonresident, and no resident children entitled to compensation under this act, there shall be paid to such nonresident child or children a like lump sum to be divided among them share and share alike; it being the intention of the foregoing to exclude from the benefits of this act any such nonresident widow, child, or children, if there be any resident child or children entitled to compensation under this act, and to exclude from the benefits of this act all other resident dependents if there be any nonresident widow, child, or children entitled to take under the provisions of this subdivision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Not knowing whether the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] intends to return to the Chamber this afternoon, I make the announcement of my pair with him and will let it stand on all questions in connection with this bill until he returns.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As I observe he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Dixon	Lorimer	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. POMERENE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 33, at the conclusion of line 12, as a proviso:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after the word "subdivision," at the end of line 12, insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nonresident dependents living in foreign countries not contiguous to the United States shall have the same rights hereunder as resident dependents, if those countries accord to the nonresident dependents of their employees the same rights as are given to their resident dependents.

Mr. POMERENE. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 19, after the word "years" in the reprint, insert:

But any female child shall continue to receive her share until she reaches 20 years of age, unless sooner married.

So that if amended the paragraph will read:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "three," so as to read:

Provided, That if the number of children entitled to payment be subsequently reduced to less than three, the amount of the payments shall be correspondingly diminished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk an amendment, and upon it I ask for the yeas and nays. I have several other amendments, but I shall not ask for the yeas and nays upon the others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 27, page 42, by striking out lines 1 to 6, inclusive, as follows:

The term "dependent child over the age of 16 years," wherever it occurs in this act, or any reference to such child, shall be construed to mean a dependent child over the age of 16 years unable to earn a living by reason of mental or physical incapacity or a female child under the age of 20 years, unless sooner married.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

So Mr. REED's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. I offer an amendment, and call the attention of the Senator from Utah to it, it being an amendment that he practically accepted the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after the amendment already agreed to at that point, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], it is proposed to insert:

The evidence produced before the adjuster shall be taken in writing or in shorthand, and shall be, in case of appeal from the finding of the adjuster, transcribed and duly authenticated and filed with the clerk of the United States court, and may be thereafter read in evidence in any future hearing or trial in said cause under the same circumstances and with the same force and effect as a deposition may now be read in suits at law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest that it be amended by adding the word "if"; so as to read, "if the evidence * * * shall be taken."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That if the testimony shall be taken in shorthand it may be used, and then I shall have no objection, but I do not think we ought to compel the taking of testimony in shorthand before the adjuster.

Mr. REED. I will accept the modification suggested by the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that technically this amendment is not in order, it being an amendment to an amendment which has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, but it can be offered in the Senate. Perhaps meanwhile it may be perfected. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment for the present?

Mr. REED. I ask now to change the amendment by inserting in the amendment the word "if," and offer it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified. It is suggested to the Chair that the amendment would more properly come before the other amendment than after it.

Mr. REED. I offer it with reference to the bill and not the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 21, after the word "judgments," insert:

If the evidence produced before the adjuster shall be taken in writing or in shorthand, it shall be, in case of appeal from the finding of the adjuster, transcribed and duly authenticated and filed with the clerk of the United States court, and may be thereafter read in evidence in any future hearing or trial in said cause under the same circumstances and with the same force and effect as a deposition may now be read in suits at law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 13, paragraph 9, page 19, of the last print, by adding at the end of said paragraph the following:

That no costs shall be taxed against the employee if the adjuster or the court shall find as a fact that the refusal of the employee to accept the amounts offered was not unreasonable or unjustifiable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer the following amendment, and I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, amend section 21 by adding at the end thereof the following words:

Whenever it shall appear that the injury was occasioned, or directly contributed to, by the failure or neglect of the employer to provide the safety appliances required by the laws of Congress, then there shall be added to the sums provided to be paid under this bill 25 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Secretary to turn to the printed amendments that I have submitted and take them in their order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 2 of the proposed amendments, amend the bill by adding at the close of section 5 the following proviso:

Provided, That if the employee elects to furnish his own physician or surgeon to care for himself he may recover from his employer such expenses incurred therefor by him as are reasonable and just.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia submits the following amendment, which will be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And on this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SECRETARY. After line 16, on page 4, section 7, add the following proviso:

Provided, That where it is made to appear that the employer, through its officers and agents, had received knowledge of the accident within 30 days after the happening thereof no notice whatever shall be required to be given of the action by the employee to the employer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia demands the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has left the Chamber for the afternoon. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I shall withhold my vote on all the subsequent amendments to the bill.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bacon	Foster	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Paynter	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Kern	Pomerene	Swanson
Culberson	Lea	Reed	Watson
Davis	Myers	Shively	Williams
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Simmons

NAYS—49.

Borah	Crane	Lippitt	Root

Bradley	Cullom	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Cummins	McLean	Smoot
Briggs	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sutherland
Bristow	du Pont	Nelson	Thornton
Brown	Fall	Nixon	Townsend
Burnham	Gallinger	Oliver	Warren
Burton	Gardner	Page	Wetmore
Catron	Gronna	Percy	Works
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Perkins
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Richardson

NOT VOTING—23.

Ashurst	Gamble	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Bailey	Gore	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Heyburn	Newlands	Stephenson
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Owen	Stone
Dillingham	Kenyon	Penrose	Tillman
Dixon	La Follette	Rayner

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the close of section 7, at the bottom of page 5, the following words:

It shall be the duty of the employer, within five days after receiving notice through its officers or agents that an employee has received an injury in its service, to notify such employee whether said injury was received while such employee was employed in such commerce by such employer; and in any legal procedure which may follow the employer shall be bound by such notice, and will not be permitted to deny its truth, and on failure of said employer to give said notice said employer shall not be permitted to deny, in any legal procedure, the claim that said injury was received by such employee while employed in such commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment, which will be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will skip the next two amendments, and as the next one has been agreed to I will go down to line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, section 14, at the end of line 11, after the word "payment," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where an employee institutes suit for an injury claiming that same did not take place while he was employed in interstate or foreign commerce and fails to recover in such suit, the limitation of the time for his right to proceed under this act shall begin with the termination of such suit, and not with the time when the injury to him occurred.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After the word "suit," where it occurs in the fourth line of the paragraph, I move to add "on the ground he was employed in interstate commerce," so that the proviso will read "that where an employee institutes," and so forth, "and fails to recover in such suit on the ground he was employed in interstate commerce."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that if he would let his amendment read "upon the ground that he was engaged in such commerce" it would refer to both interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will accept that modification, and say "in such commerce."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I see no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I requested the Secretary to begin on line 9 on that page. He skipped an amendment on page 3 of my amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia state the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After the word "require," in section 13, paragraph 9, line 11, insert the words:

The reasonable attorney's fees of the employee shall be taxed as cost against the defendant by the adjuster or by the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that as the Senator had his amendment reprinted quite likely the Secretary has not the same draft the Senator has.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, of the reprint, beginning with line 3, the amendment to come in on page 19, paragraph 9, of section 13, after the word "require," insert the words:

The reasonable attorney's fees of the employee shall be taxed as cost against the defendant by the adjuster or by the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The next amendment was perfected on yesterday. It it on page 20, section 14, line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then we come down to line 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 14 by adding paragraph 8 after paragraph 7, as follows:

(8) Employees shall have the privilege of enforcing the rights given to them under this act before the adjuster or to proceed in any State court having jurisdiction, and no suit brought in a State court under this act shall be removed to the United States court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll, Mr. ASHURST responding in the affirmative.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A response having been made, under the rule the amendment can not be read again.

The roll having been called, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 48, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have very few more amendments to offer. I move to amend by striking out section 16, on page 26, where it appears in the bill, and in lieu to insert what I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 16, and in lieu insert the following as section 16:

SEC. 16. That on the hearing of a cause of action arising under this act either party shall have the right to elect to commute the monthly payments into a fixed sum, and in that event the fixed sum shall be the present value of the annuities herein provided for, the present value to be calculated on the basis of interest at 5 per cent.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 21, line 14, by striking out the words "for a period of eight years," and add, in line 15, after the word "death," the words "during the life expectancy of the deceased," so that if amended it will read:

(A) Where death results from any injury, except in the cases provided for in section 23, and except in those cases in which, in certain contingencies, a reduced period is hereinafter provided for, the following amounts shall be paid from the date of the death during the life expectancy of the deceased:

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. LIPPITT (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], with whom I am paired, voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 27, at the top of page 42, by striking out, "The term 'dependent child over the age of 16 years,' whenever it occurs in this act, or any reference to such child, shall be construed to mean a dependent child over the age of 16 years unable to earn a living by reason of mental or physical incapacity, or a female child under the age of 20 years, unless sooner married," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The term 'dependent child' shall be construed to mean a child over 16 years of age that is wholly or in part dependent for its livelihood or education upon the financial assistance of the person injured."

Mr. REED. I will say that the amendment is very similar to one that was voted down, but has a correction. I wish to say that because I do not want to be understood as offering the same amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 22 by striking out the words "such injured employee," on page 37, line 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "an employee entitled to compensation under clause E of section 21."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask for the yeas and nays upon it. It is the last time I will ask for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 21 by adding, at the end thereof the following words:

Wherever it shall be proven that the injury suffered was directly contributed to by the failure of the employer to comply with a public law, then there shall be added to the amounts herein to be paid 25 per centum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri demands the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the 27th day of May.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the second legislative day of the next regular session of Congress, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that only one motion to postpone is allowable under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is, Shall the bill pass, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Resolved, etc., That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, namely:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Under the Quartermaster General: For providing tents and other necessary supplies and services and for reimbursement of the several appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, from which temporary relief has already been or may be afforded, $402,179.65.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report (No. 699), to accompany House joint resolution 312:

The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 312) making appropriations for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, having considered the same, reports it back herewith and recommends its passage with the following amendments:

That the amount under the Quartermaster General be increased from $277,179.65 to $402,179.65—an increase of $125,000.

That the amount under the Commissary General be increased from $420,000 to $837,000—an increase of $417,000.

Total increase recommended, $542,000.

Amount of resolution as passed the House, $697,179.65.

Amount of resolution as reported to Senate, $1,239,179.65.

The following correspondence is respectfully submitted, showing the necessity for the increases recommended:

UNDER THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 6, 1912.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Appropriations Committee,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WARREN: I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of additional estimate of $125,000, submitted by the Quartermaster General for relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, and the papers pertaining thereto, which were sent this morning to the Secretary of the Treasury. It is understood that this estimate has been transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully,

H. L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 4, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress a special additional estimate of an appropriation of $125,000 required by the War Department for providing tents and other necessary supplies and services for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and for reimbursement of the several appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, from which temporary relief has already been or may be afforded.

The distress resulting from the floods in the Mississippi Valley, which have continued longer than was expected, necessitates the expenditure of larger amounts than were anticipated when the estimate for $275,000, now before Congress, was submitted.

Very respectfully,

H. L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 4, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that the special additional estimate of $125,000, for providing tents and other necessary supplies and services for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, this date forwarded to you by the Secretary of War for transmission to Congress, has received the approval of the President and that evidence of such approval is on file in this office.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. SCOFIELD,
Assistant and Chief Clerk.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 30, 1912.

The PRESIDENT.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I submit herewith for your consideration and action a special estimate for an appropriation of $125,000 required by the War Department for providing tents and other necessary supplies and services for relief of the sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys in 1912 and for reimbursement of the several appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, from which temporary relief has already been or may be afforded.

The Quartermaster General states that the distress resulting from the floods in the Mississippi Valley, which have continued longer than was expected, necessitates the expenditure of larger amounts than were anticipated when the estimate for $275,000 now before Congress was submitted.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Approved.

WM. H. TAFT.

MAY 3, 1912.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, April 30, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith additional estimate for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys which, it would now appear, will be required in addition to the $275,000 estimated for on the 14th instant.

Very respectfully,

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster General United States Army.

UNDER THE COMMISSARY GENERAL.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, May 6, 1912.

Hon. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We have found that the $420,000 for the relief of flood sufferers, which it is understood passed the House on Saturday night, will be inadequate. The latest reports from officers on the ground indicate that relief must be extended to 150,000 people for 35 days, at a cost of approximately $15,000 per day, and that the additional sum of $417,000 is necessary.

Estimate has been submitted to the President for this additional amount, and in order to expedite matters I am sending one to you, with a copy of the telegram on which it is based.

The Commissary General conferred with Gen. Bixby, Chief of Engineers, who confirms the statement made by Maj. Normoyle that the conditions will undoubtedly continue for at least six weeks more.

I urge that this additional amount of $417,000 be added to the $420,000 already appropriated by the House, making a total amount for subsistence of $837,000.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

VICKSBURG, MISS., May 4, 1912.

COMMISSARY GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.:

On April 16 I wired from Memphis as follows: First district, 15,000 destitutes; second, 15,000; third, 23,000; fourth, 30,000; total, 83,000 flood sufferers, with reports from all districts that more are coming in daily. Consensus of opinion that we will be obliged to take care of these people from three to six weeks. This estimate based on the cost of $10,000 per day for subsistence. Reports from districts at Vicksburg to-day as follows: First district, 5,000; second district, 17,000; third district, 30,000; fourth district, 105,000; fifth district, 8,000; total, 165,000. As to the fourth district, Capt. Hegeman, in charge, advises that the following is a conservative list: Natchez, 15,000 people; Greenville, 22,000; Tensas Parish, 15,000; Yazoo City, 2,500; Sunflower River, Miss., 15,000; Millekens Bend, La., 2,200; Atherton, 1,000; Mounds, La., 3,000; Thomastown, La., 1,400; Steels Bayou, 10,000; Delhi, La., 2,000; Jena, La., 1,000; Columbia, 1,500; Delta, La., 400; Black River district, Tensas River, Mason Bayou, 11,000; total, 105,000. As to the fifth district, Capt. Logan reports 8,000 to-day, but advises that he expects an increase to 15,000 under present conditions—that is, the break at Torras and Bayou Sara. Should break occur at Morganza, he states the number in the fifth district will be at least 50,000. In view of the pessimistic reports in consequence of the rise in the upper Mississippi and tributaries and the return to flood conditions in the first and second districts, where until recently conditions were improving daily, it is difficult to arrive at any definite conclusion as to the length of time flood conditions will prevail, especially in the fourth and fifth districts. From St. Louis I heard unofficially to-day that river men in general are of the opinion that the highest stage of water ever known there is expected with the June rise. It was stated, further, that a 40-foot stage was expected at that point in June. These reports, together with other unfavorable local reports from Memphis, are mentioned to show that it is difficult to make an estimate of the situation. Liabilities incurred for subsistence in all five districts to date is $312,000. The rations covered by same and remaining on hand to date should carry us to include May 10. In addition to the balance of the $420,000 appropriated for subsistence—that is, $108,000—I believe we should count on caring for 150,000 people for at least 35 days from May 10, at an approximate cost of $15,000 per day. This would call for an aditional appropriation of $417,000 over and above the original $420,000 appropriated for susbsistence. We have officers on duty as inspectors in the several districts, and by watchful administration the additional appropriation recommended should take care of the situation, and possibly beyond that date if necessary.

NORMOYLE.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, information has come that it will be impossible for the President of the Senate to be in the Senate to-morrow to preside. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] be chosen as President pro tempore to preside over the proceedings of the Senate on Tuesday, the 7th day of May, 1912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 304), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Tuesday, May 7, 1912.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 305), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Tuesday, May 7, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 7 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., Monday, May 6) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 7, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 6, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the power and efficacy of prayer; that the way is open; that whosoever will may come to the fountain of life and drink freely. When the sky is black above us and the heart is bowed in sorrow, out of the deeps we may cry unto Thee, and deep answers deep and the heart is comforted. When the skies are bright above us and the heart beats high with fondest hopes, we may be cheered on our way to every good purpose. When doubts arise and temptations assail us, our faith may be strengthened and the power of resistance increased. Hence we pray for Thy blessing, that we may be guided and strengthened for the work of this day, that it may be in consonance with Thy will. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. WILLIAM S. VARE, Member-elect from the State of Pennsylvania, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office as prescribed by law.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of House resolution No. 512 from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. What is the resolution about?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield? What resolution is that?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is the resolution for the investigation and inspection of meats, and so forth. It is a very extensive resolution, and should go to the Committee on Rules, inasmuch as it embraces a great deal of power and privileges that have never been conferred upon the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Has the gentleman conferred with the chairman of that committee as to the matter?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have not.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Then I object.

LEVEE ACROSS BRANCH OF ST. FRANCIS RIVER.

The SPEAKER. This is the day for unanimous consent and the suspension of the rules, and the Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21590) to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, Dunklin County, to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River in Missouri.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, in the State of Missouri, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a levee across an arm or branch of the St. Francis River, known as "Dunklin County Cut-off," at a point in section 32, township 19 north, range 9 east, in Dunklin County, Mo., along the bank of the St. Francis River, and near the head of the said branch or cut-off; and also to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River where it runs into the St. Francis River, in or near section 32, township 18 north, range 8, in Dunklin County, Mo.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River and to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River, in the State of Missouri."

DAMS ACROSS KANSAS RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam or dams across the Kansas River in western Shawnee County or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Topeka Commercial Club, organized under the laws of Kansas, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, and maintain a dam or dams across the Kansas River at a suitable place or places in western Shawnee County, or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,'" approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JACKSON. Is there anyone here appearing for this bill? I would like to know something about it, in the meantime reserving the right to object. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would suggest to the gentleman that if he would look up the bill he would find all the facts in the report.

Mr. JACKSON. I will ask the gentleman if he would as soon let it go over?

Mr. ANTHONY. I see no reason why the bill should go over, and if the gentleman knows any reason I would like to have him state it.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not know anything about it. I am trying to find out something about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not incumbent upon the gentleman, then, to make an investigation of bills he sees on the calendar and that are up for passage?

Mr. JACKSON. Unfortunately, I did not see it on the calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY. It has been on the calendar for some time, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. About how long?

Mr. ANTHONY. Since April 13. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this is a Senate bill. It has passed the Senate, and it is a bill which gives authority for the construction of one or two dams across the Kansas River for the purpose of supplying power to the city of Topeka, and the Topeka Commercial Club, a sort of quasi commercial corporation, asks for this grant with the idea that if the dams are constructed the power will be used for municipal and commercial purposes.

Mr. JACKSON. Is this the bill introduced by Senator Curtis?

Mr. ANTHONY. I introduced the bill in the House. It has the approval of Secretary Fisher.

Mr. JACKSON. I know something about the Curtis proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Topeka Commercial Club, a corporation organized under the laws of Kansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate not to exceed two dams across the Kansas River, at points suitable to the interests of navigation in western Shawnee County, or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.'

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS—LANDS OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know who is in charge of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Who is in charge of this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice until my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] can come in. He has a small amendment which he wishes to offer, and he wants to present the bill. He is reporting it. It is quite an important matter for our State.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to passing it over, but when it comes up I think I shall object to the consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent to pass over this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS FORT MASON MILITARY RESERVATION, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22204) granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War, across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby given the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War, to locate, construct, maintain, and operate a railroad and tunnel upon and across the property belonging to the United States at Fort Mason, in the State of California, upon such location and under such regulations as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] a question or two.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Very well.

Mr. MANN. I see this bill would give not only to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. the right to operate a railroad and a tunnel, but it would also give that right to any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War, without any limitation of time or limitation of persons, and, if passed, it would apparently hereafter confer upon the Secretary of War the right under such terms as he shall provide to allow anybody at any time to construct a railroad or tunnel across Fort Mason. Now, I take it that the gentleman does not desire to confer that right upon the Secretary of War.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman the history of this bill and my connection with it. The bill first passed a year or more ago. It was intended to give the Southern Pacific Railway the right to constuct this tunnel under the military reservation. The Southern Pacific Railway, having considered the advantages of it to them, and the cost, declined to undertake the construction. But the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. are exceedingly anxious to have the tunnel constructed. It will facilitate their work, and cheapen the cost of their undertaking in San Francisco.

The bill was offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and would have been pressed through the committee by him if it had not been for the fact that he was taken away on account of illness. After he had gone I received a note from him asking me to get the bill reported and endeavor to have it put through the House. I took the matter up with the War Department, and the officials of that Department have communicated their opinion with reference to it. That opinion is found in the report, which the gentleman from Illinois seems to have in his hand.

Less than a week ago I conferred with the Secretary of War about the matter, and he says that in the shape it is now in he has no objection whatever to it. It was the intention of Mr. KAHN—and the bill, if it does not provide for it, may be so amended without any trouble—that after the exposition is over, after they shall have completed their work, the tunnel shall be turned back to the War Department.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that I think it is quite proper that we should grant authority to construct the railroad and the tunnel, but there ought to be a limitation of time here, so that it will not confer indefinite power after the exposition is over to allow the Secretary of War to permit such tunnel or railroad as he may deem proper to be constructed. There should be a time limit inserted in the bill as to the construction of this railroad, because I take it that it is to be constructed before the exposition is held or it will be of no value so far as this is concerned. Would the gentleman be willing to agree to an amendment?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would be willing to agree to any reasonable amendment.

Mr. MANN. An amendment fixing the time and providing that it would not run beyond the close of the exposition for the construction of the tunnel, and reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly, if the gentleman will submit that amendment.

Mr. MANN. How long a time would be necessary?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am sorry to say that I am not sufficiently acquainted with the facts to be able to state.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It seems to me that the bill ought to have the proviso suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, and it ought to have the further proviso that "the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. MANN. That is one of the amendments that I just suggested.

Mr. RAKER. I wish to say, further, that I tried to get into communication with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., and called them over the telephone yesterday. I called the attention of one of the officials particularly to that part of the bill, on lines 4 and 5, which reads as follows:

Or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War.

It seems to me the right ought to be given to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and the right to an individual ought not to be granted in the bill.

Mr. MANN. It certainly ought not, unless for a limited time, so that it will not run beyond the life of the exposition.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that if they wish to let somebody else do it the right will not extend indefinitely in the future.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman know how soon the exposition company will require the use of this tunnel?

Mr. RAKER. They would commence in one or two months. They are working on the matter now. They are getting all the other conditions in shape, and the sooner they can get the right of way the sooner they will have the tunnel prepared for the use of the exposition.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can only say to the gentleman from Illinois that my part in this is played at the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who wrote to me about it.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not strike out the words:

Or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War—

So that the right will be given to the exposition company without any alternative proposition?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. RAKER. And then add the other provision as to the right to repeal. With that in it I think it ought to go through, and there would be no possible objection to it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Very well. I move to amend the bill by striking out——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not yet got unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. With those amendments there would certainly be no objection by anyone. I most earnestly hope that there will be no objection, so that the bill may become a law at an early date. It will be of great benefit and should pass.

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, does the amendment propose to limit the life of the concern? How long does it continue?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that if the bill does not meet his views in that respect, we are perfectly willing to accept an amendment. I only appear here as the friend of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who is away. The only desire is to give to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. the right to construct and operate this railroad for the purposes of the exposition.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection, except that I do not want the right to continue indefinitely.

Mr. RAKER. Make it a year after the exposition closes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 4 and 5, the words:

Or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no. The words "approved by the Secretary of War" ought to be retained in the bill. It is only necessary to strike out the words "or any other party or parties."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Whichever the gentleman prefers. I shall not object. Does the gentleman desire the words to be added "when approved by the Secretary of War?"

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who is to build the road?

Mr. RAKER. The Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co.

Mr. MANN. Then the words—

or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War—

may be stricken out.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what I thought.

Mr. MANN. That will give the exposition company the right which it desires.

Mr. RAKER. Should it not read:

That the consent of the United States is hereby given the Panama Pacific International Exposition Co. when approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. That is already in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. All right. Then that may be stricken out.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, lines 4 and 5, page 1, by striking out the words "or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding another section, that the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. MANN. Is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the act approved January 8, 1909, entitled "An act granting a right of way to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is necessary to repeal that act because, although it was passed in 1909, the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. refused to build the road.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas should read:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; that is my amendment. The Clerk is writing it now.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The committee amendment has not been voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding:

"SEC. 2. That the act approved January 8, 1909, entitled 'An act granting a right of way to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California' be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by striking out the words "or any other party or parties approved by the Secretary of War."

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF OLMSTEAD LANDS, NORTH CAROLINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20738) for the transfer of the so-called Olmstead lands in the State of North Carolina from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from and after the passage of this act, have charge of the several tracts of land in Clay and Graham Counties, N. C., known as the Olmstead lands, aggregating approximately 32,483 acres, being the lands conveyed to the United States by Levi Stevens and wife on March 15, 1869, in compromise and settlement of an indebtedness due the United States by E. B. Olmstead.

SEC. 2. That the Solicitor of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all title, papers, and correspondence relating to said lands on file in his office.

SEC. 3. That the said lands shall be subject to such of the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), as apply to lands purchased thereunder.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for the school sections within an Indian, military, and national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make exchange of lands with the several States for those portions of the lands granted in aid of common schools, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, which lie within the exterior limits of any Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, the said exchange to be made in the manner and form and subject to the limitations and conditions of sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stats., p. 796), and any such exchange whether heretofore or hereafter made shall restore full title in the United States to the base land, upon approval of such exchange, without formal conveyance thereof by the State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I shall have to object. The bill apparently would be in the interest of the State of California and a Mr. Hyde. The report makes this statement in a letter addressed to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]:

Shortly after Mr. Kingsbury took office as surveyor general of California, in January of 1907, he also discovered that indemnity or lieu lands were almost entirely controlled by F. A. Hyde. Hyde was enabled to control these lands by reason of the fact that until a section of school lands was placed within the limits of a reservation created by proclamation of the President, no lands could be selected in lieu thereof, nor could any applicant file an application for lieu lands in the State land office. For years Mr. Hyde was enabled to secure the first information as to the creation of national reservations, which thereby enabled him, under the laws of California, to file applications before any other person had the necessary information.

As far as I can learn from the bill and report, it gives Mr. Hyde a decided advantage by the passage of the bill, an advantage which he obtained improperly or through improper information furnished to him.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit an explanation?

Mr. MANN. That is what I want, and the reason I am calling the gentleman's attention to this fact.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call attention to the fact that there are about 450,000 acres of land in California that have been applied for under the various provisions and exchange asking for land owned by the United States. Filings were made upon that land and certificates from the Land Department and lists sent to the General Land Office. To-day there are no approvals of these lists, which involve about 450,000 acres.

The letter which the gentleman from Illinois read refers to my first correspondence with the Department of the Interior relative to the proposed amendment by Mr. Lake to the bill and a proposed amendment by Mr. Bolton—the part of the report found on page 6 of the bill referring to the act of the legislature of 1909, which confirms the right to these various parties who had originally filed upon this land. The department had held that exchange could be made in surveyed sections 16 and 36 in place within a reservation, and later the United States circuit court held that no such exchange could be made. Therefore this act of the Legislature of California was passed to confirm the original applicants of the land that they might obtain title. This matter was taken up with the Department of the Interior and the State officers of California, and an arrangement had by which if Congress approved of that exchange of title and transfer to the Government heretofore would be confirmed without patent and application of those made for the land would be in shape that if the Secretary approved the list, they would eventually get their title. I want to call the gentleman's attention particularly to the letter——

Mr. MANN. I have read all the letters in the report very carefully, and I will say to the gentleman that the letter I quoted from was not written, as the gentleman assumes, in reference to the Bolton amendment. That came up later in the correspondence. It had not been suggested at the time the letter I quoted from was sent.

Mr. RAKER. The letter was filed with the committee and published in the hearings of the committee and considered, and the Secretary's attorney, Judge Clements, said that this bill should not be amended so as to permit the clients, Benson and Hyde and others, to defeat the prior applications for this land.

Mr. MANN. The letter I quoted from was dated March 11 last. The gentleman wired to California on March 25 for the first time in reference to the Bolton amendment. Now, it is a fact, is it not, that these lieu lands are worth more than the original base lands?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. It seems they are very anxious to exchange them. Why should Mr. Hyde immediately get information concerning the forest reservation and then propose to select lieu lands for base lands if the base lands were not taken away?

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not object to this. Let me call attention to this one fact: Originally, for over 40 years——

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not doubt there ought to be some relief to the State of California, but I am not willing by unanimous consent to pass a bill which looks to me would be more beneficial to one man than to anyone else, and that man one who, through securing information improperly, acquired the title to a large share of the lieu lands.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in regard to the record. If he will let me explain, I think I can make it clear.

Mr. MANN. I have examined very carefully the gentleman's report and all the papers published in the report.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact. For 40 years and over the residents of California have made applications for these school lands, and they sent their applications to the various land departments, and then they were listed and sent to the Secretary of the Interior. None of these applications to-day have been approved. Now, these men have been using and cultivating these lands since that time.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that most of these lands were first controlled by Hyde?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. Then there is a false statement in the report.

Mr. RAKER. It is just the other way. When the case was decided by the Federal court at Los Angeles the Federal judge held that all selections of sections 16 and 36 in place that were in a forest reserve were not subject to be used as base.

Mr. MANN. What is the statement in the letter of the Attorney General?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is being pursued.

Mr. CARLIN. The regular order is to object or allow the bill to be read.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the debate is by unanimous consent, but it is in order unless the gentleman objects.

Mr. CARLIN. But I have demanded the regular order.

Mr. HAY. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily the Chair thinks that is correct, but——

Mr. CARLIN. I do not object to the bill, but I want the gentleman from Illinois to either object or not object.

The SPEAKER. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, and any individual who wants to cut off the debate can do so by objecting.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman what this statement means, on page 9 of the report:

> Hyde was enabled to control these lands by reason of the fact that until a section of school lands was placed within the limits of a reservation created by proclamation of the President, etc. For years Mr. Hyde was enabled to secure the first information as to the creation of national reservations, which thereby enabled him, under the laws of California, to file application before any other person had the necessary information.

Now, that is in reference to these lieu lands which the gentleman now seeks to perfect through this bill.

Mr. RAKER. No; that is not the condition. It has been assumed for years Messrs. Hyde and Benson had inside information of the Land Department, and when a reserve was created that they immediately filed upon the school sections within the reserve, but that does not apply to the lands now involved.

Mr. MANN. Did not they then immediately make application for lieu lands for these school-section lands?

Mr. RAKER. Not for these involved here.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; that is what the report says.

Mr. RAKER. No; let me call the gentleman's attention to this matter: Right after the decision of the circuit court and the passing of the legislature new parties went in and filed a second time upon all of these lands and now claim to own them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar and the Clerk will report the next bill.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

COST OF LIVING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 736).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying data, on cooperation and the cost of living in certain foreign countries. The information is supplementary to that contained in my message of March 13, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 6, 1912.

SUPERANNUATED EMPLOYEES (H. DOC. NO. 732).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on the subject of the retirement from the classified civil service of superannuated employees. To the plan proposed in this report and set forth in detail in the accompanying draft of a bill I give my unqualified approval, because I believe it to be sound in principle and just both to the Government and to its employees.

NECESSITY FOR A RETIREMENT PLAN.

It is unnecessary at this time to discuss at length the necessity for adopting some plan by which the service may be relieved of the loss from the inefficiency of the personnel caused by the retention on the rolls, after long and faithful service, of those who have passed the age when they can perform a full day's work. The subject is one with which all administrative officers are familiar. It has been referred to in several messages which I have sent to the Congress and in many reports of the heads of departments. It is conceded by everyone acquainted with the situation that some action must be taken. Under present conditions the loss to the Government will continue to increase. Some method other than the summary discharge of employees when they become inefficient on account of age must be adopted. The present practice of retaining such employees on the rolls and, as they grow older, expecting from them a smaller quantity and lower grade of work can not continue indefinitely without seriously impairing the efficiency of the entire service and imposing upon the Government a cost that will be in excess of the expense to be incurred by the adoption of a reasonable plan for remedying existing conditions.

PROPOSED PLAN OF RETIREMENT.

The plan submitted by the commission contemplates that each employee in the classified service in the executive departments and establishments at Washington shall be retired as soon as he reaches the age of 70 years and shall receive thereafter an annuity equal to one-half of his annual salary, with the provision that no annuity shall exceed $600.

I invite particular attention to the fact that the plan provides that each person hereafter entering the service shall pay the entire expense of his own retirement by contribution from his salary, so that when he reaches the age of 70 years the fund he has accumulated will provide his retirement allowance. In such a case the only contribution of the Government, if any, will be the difference between the interest earned by his savings deposited in the Treasury and invested by the Government and the rate of 4 per cent per annum. So far as concerns this class of persons, there certainly can be no reasonable objection to the plan, and I doubt if any plan more beneficial both to the Government and to the employee could be devised.

EMPLOYEES NOW IN THE SERVICE.

It is evident that the application of the plan only to those who hereafter enter the service would not relieve the present condition due to superannuation nor save the Government from the constantly increasing loss from that cause. It is not practicable for those now 70 years of age, or for those nearing that age, to provide the cost of retirement entirely at their own expense. To meet the existing situation and to put a retirement plan into effect immediately there must be some contribution by the Government. This contribution need be little more in the aggregate than is now the Government's loss from inefficiency due to superannuation. After a comparatively short period of years the annual payments made by the Government will be less than the loss it would sustain if no plan were adopted.

It is proposed that an employee now in the service who has reached the age of 70 years shall be retired and be paid by the United States an annuity equal to one-half of his average annual pay for the last five years, but no such annuity to exceed $600. As to an employee less than 70 years of age, it is proposed that he shall be retired when he reaches 70 on an annuity equal to one-half of his average annual pay for the entire period of his service (no annuity to exceed $600), and that there shall be deducted from his pay until he reaches 70 years such an amount, not exceeding 8 per cent of his pay, as, with 4 per cent interest, will purchase his annuity. In the case of an employee who has but a few years to serve before reaching 70, some contribution by the Government will be necessary to supplement his savings in order to provide an annuity of a reasonable amount.

ANNUITIES LIMITED TO $600.

A retirement plan is only a means to an end and that end is an increase of efficiency in the public service. The Government is not required to take charge of an employee's finances, nor is it justified in doing so except so far as it is necessary to protect the Government against the inefficiency of the employee due to superannuation. It is my opinion, therefore, that a plan of retirement should be so adjusted as to make the least possible demand upon the Government and at the same time draw from his personal control as little of an employee's money as possible. The proposed plan meets these requirements. While the maximum annuity of $600 is not sufficient to provide the luxuries of life, it is enough to insure an employee against want, even if he has been so unfortunate as to have made no other provision for his declining years. It is sufficient also to render ineffectual the appeals so often made to the sympathy of administrative officers when they attempt to remove from office an employee who has become inefficient through old age. At the same time the amount withheld from an employee's salary in order to provide his annuity is not sufficient to justify the thrifty in complaining that they are being deprived of an excessive portion of their income which they could invest more profitably.

RATE OF INTEREST ON SAVINGS.

In any compulsory saving plan it is but just that the Government should guarantee a reasonable rate of interest to its employees. Four per cent is the rate now paid by the Government on deposits of enlisted men of the Army and Navy, and it is the rate paid by many savings banks. The plan recommended by the commission contemplates the investment of the savings of employees in the highest class of securities and that the United States shall contribute such amount, if any, as may be needed to insure the employees receiving 4 per cent per annum.

APPLICATION OF PLAN TO EMPLOYEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

I am convinced that the application of the plan should be limited for the present to the classified civil service in the executive departments and offices at Washington, where the loss from superannuation is the greatest. While any plan is in its experimental stage it should be kept within narrow limits. If successful in operation in Washington, it can be extended as the needs of the service require.

COST TO THE GOVERNMENT.

It being conceded that no immediate benefit to the Government could accrue without some temporary help from it, I directed the Commission on Economy and Efficiency to make an investigation of the loss due to superannuation in the service at Washington. Its report sets forth in detail the results of this investigation. It has involved an examination of the efficiency of 22,754 employees, as such efficiency was reported by the departments. At no other time has such a thorough investigation been made of the service in Washington. An earnest effort was made to ascertain and to state in money the financial loss which is sustained from the inefficiency of aged persons in the service. While the loss shown as the result of the investigation is undoubtedly much less than the actual loss from superannuation, the figures are sufficiently large to justify the Government in giving temporary aid in putting the plan into operation. Accepting the very conservative figures as to the loss now sustained, the inefficiency in the service which is due to old age can be wiped out immediately and permanently in Washington by an average annual expenditure during the next 20 years of $226,986 over and above the annual loss that will be sustained from superannuation if no plan is adopted for avoiding it. The accompanying report shows further that the saving to the Government that will result from the adoption of the proposed plan will equal, in the course of the succeeding 16 years, the entire cost of inaugurating the plan.

STRAIGHT PENSIONS NOT ADVISABLE.

I am firmly convinced that the proposed plan is superior to any form of straight pensions, in that an employee upon retirement at any time may avail himself of his savings with the accrued interest, or his representatives may do so in the event of his death, whereas any form of pension or gratuity from the Government must inevitably be considered as a part of compensation and is available only to those employees who succeed in living to a given age, in remaining in the service to that age, and in living a sufficient time beyond that age to receive in pension payments the value of their deferred pay. Avoiding, therefore, the dangers and disadvantages of the straight pension, the proposed plan commends itself as satisfactory from the viewpoint of the Government and the viewpoint of the employees. It is advantageous to the Government, since the efficiency of the service will be increased by providing the means of retiring those who have reached the age of decline. It is advantageous to the employees, since it protects them from want in old age with the least interference in their private affairs, and makes the service more attractive to the younger employees by facilitating promotions to higher salaries and grades at earlier ages than is possible under present conditions.

CONCLUSION.

A careful study of the existing situation with reference to superannuation, and a consideration of the worse conditions that will appear in the future, leads me again to commend the subject to the earnest consideration of the Congress. I believe that the plan proposed in the commission's carefully prepared and exhaustive report is the best that has been devised for meeting the present and future needs of the service, and therefore I urge the enactment of the necessary legislation to put it into effect at an early date.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 6, 1912.

UNALLOTTED LAND, OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION, STATE OF NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5060) to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5060) to provide for the disposal of the unallotted land on the Omaha Indian Reservation in the State of Nebraska.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed, if necessary, and appraised, in manner hereinafter set forth, in tracts of 40 acres each, and, after such survey and appraisement, to sell and convey, in quantities not to exceed 160 acres to any one purchaser, all the unallotted lands on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, except such tracts as are hereinafter specifically reserved: Provided, That the said land shall be sold to the highest bidder under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, but no part of said land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof: And provided further, That prior to such appraisement and sale any member of the Omaha Tribe whose allotment is subject to erosion by the Missouri River shall be permitted to relinquish such allotment and select lieu lands of equal area from the unallotted lands, the lands so relinquished to become a part of the unallotted tribal lands and subject to appraisement and sale under the terms of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to reserve from sale, under the terms of this act, the following tracts of land for the purposes designated: Forty-nine acres of the land now used for agency purposes to be reserved for agency and school purposes for so long as the need thereof exists; 10 acres to be selected by the tribe for use as a tribal cemetery; 10 acres of the land now reserved for the use of the Presbyterian Church to be selected by the officials of said church for the use of the church so long as needed for religious or educational purposes; 2 acres of the land on which is standing what is known as the old Presbyterian mission building, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause a patent in fee simple to issue therefor in the name of the State Historical Society of Nebraska: Provided, That of the land now reserved for agency purposes the Secretary of the Interior is directed to reserve and set aside for town-site purposes 164 acres other than the 49 acres hereinbefore reserved, and shall cause the same to be surveyed and platted into town lots, streets, alleys, and parks, the lots to be appraised and sold under the terms of this act, but no bid shall be received therefor except from members of the tribe, and the streets, alleys, and parks are hereby dedicated to public use.

SEC. 3. That the appraisement directed by this act shall be made by three competent commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the completion of the surveys herein directed and authorized, one of whom shall be a resident citizen of the State of Nebraska, one an employee of the Indian Bureau, and one holding tribal relations with the Omaha Indians; said commission to be paid a salary of not to exceed $5 per day each while actually employed in the inspection and appraisal of said land, such appraisement to be completed within such a period after the date of the organization of said commission as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate.

SEC. 4. That the proceeds of such sale, after paying all the expenses incident to and necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, and after reimbursing the general trust fund of the tribe for any assessment paid therefrom for protecting the unallotted tribal lands from overflow, shall be divided pro rata among the children of the Omaha Tribe living on the date of the passage and approval of this act who have not received allotments of land under the acts of August 7, 1882 (22 U. S. Stat. L., 341), and March 3, 1893 (23 U. S. Stat. L., 630), and shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians when and in such manner as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior shall be to their best interests, and pending such expenditure by the said Secretary the sums due the respective Indians shall be placed to the credit of the said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, but in the event of the death of any such Indian while there remains in the Treasury to his credit any part of the sum so deposited the said sum shall be paid at once to his heirs, who shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the laws of descent in force in the State of Nebraska, and the action of the Secretary of the Interior in determining the legal heirs of any deceased Indian, as provided herein, shall in all respects be conclusive and final.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be reimbursable out of the funds arising from the sale of said lands.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts not consistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in the report of the department in reporting upon this bill it states as follows:

Section 4 of the bill provides that the proceeds derived from the sale of the tribal lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the individual credit of the unallotted children living at the date of the passage of the act, to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, each Indian to be paid his share with accrued interest when he reaches the age of 25 years.

That seems to have been changed in the bill. Does not the bill now provide—

But in the event of the death of any such Indian while there remains in the Treasury to his credit any part of the sum so deposited, such sum shall be paid at once to his heirs, who shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

And so forth.

What would happen? Suppose an Indian died with a sum to his credit in the Treasury and leaving small children who are incompetent to take care of themselves. They get the money, do they not, or their guardian, under this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I should think so. That is what the bill says. Would there be serious objection, do you think, for the Secretary, in his discretion, to pay according to the competency of the heirs?

Mr. MANN. Well, it says, on page 4, line 22—of course this is after the money goes into the Treasury to the credit of the Indian:

But in the event of the death of any such Indian while there remains in the Treasury to his credit any part of the sum so deposited, such sum shall be paid at once to his heirs, who shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the first line on page 5.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is where it says in accordance with the laws of descent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (reading):

The action of the Secretary of the Interior in determining the legal heirs of any deceased Indian as provided herein shall in all respects be conclusive and final.

Mr. MANN. That only allows the Secretary to determine the heirs, but it provides the money shall be paid at once to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. After the Indian is dead the money is paid to the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior has to determine, under the laws of Nebraska, who these heirs are in accordance with the laws of descent in force in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding of it is that in case of the death of the Indian that the money shall be paid to his heirs, as the bill states. Of course, it would have to be paid to his heirs, I think that is the intention.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that is the intention of the bill. The Secretary, however, has recommended that he be allowed to pay the money to the Indians when they reach the age of 25 years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The intention in formulating the act——

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled wrongly awhile ago——

Mr. MANN. When we find out what the gentleman's bill is we will fix that when it comes up.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And the demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the bill, but I object to discussion taking place before the bill is before the House for consideration. My point is, the Chair has to put the question, Is there objection——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is right.

Mr. CARLIN (continuing). And if there is no objection, I have none to the discussion of the bill when it is before the House.

Mr. MANN. Well, it has always been the custom, and it will always continue to be the custom, if bills are to be passed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, that gentlemen have the right to reserve the right to object until they make some inquiry about the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. That is perfectly proper.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a right to prohibit that by calling for the regular order.

Mr. CARLIN. Here we find ourselves going into a discussion of a bill upon its merits, which sometimes lasts an hour and deprives the House of an opportunity to act upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Now, I have no objection to this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that if he proposes to object, they might as well abolish the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. CARLIN. I have no desire——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has expressed his desire.

Mr. CARLIN. Let the gentleman understand me. I have no objection to inquiries being made, but I do object to gentlemen taking up the time of the House who propose to object when the time comes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman probably does not know what he will do in advance. Possibly he does; but I make inquiries in good faith.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman is doing that now, I will withdraw my demand for the regular order.

Mr. MANN. I do not ask any concession from the gentleman at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] withdraws his demand for the regular order of his own motion. The Chair will state that all of this interlocutory debate that takes place on unanimous consent is by unanimous consent, and until somebody objects, and if the question is raised the Chair would have to put the question whether they objected to unanimous consent to consider the bill or not. But the universal practice has been, in the House, that gentlemen inquire for a reasonable length of time as to the merits of the bill. The Unanimous Consent Calendar does not mean that a bill shall be rushed through without anybody knowing what is in it.

Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] is recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the committee amendments to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. JOHN W. GULICK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution No. 90, to authorize Capt. John W. Gulick, United States Army, to accept a position under the Government of the Republic of Chile.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Capt. John W. Gulick, Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, permitted to accept from the Government of the Republic of Chile the position of instructor of the Coast Artillery of the Chilean Army and the emoluments, rights, and privileges pertaining thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The resolution was read a third time and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PEPPER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONTINUATION OF PEACE COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 66, to amend the joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission in relation to universal peace.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution approved June 25, 1910, entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the appointment of a committee in relation to universal peace," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"That the said commission shall be required to make final report within two years from the date of the passage of this resolution."

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this resolution in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the body of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the time within which the commission authorized by the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to authorize the appointment of a commission in relation to universal peace,' approved June 25, 1910, is required to make final report is hereby extended for two years from the 25th day of June, 1912, but in every other respect said joint resolution shall continue in full force and effect."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows:

Joint resolution extending the time for making final report by the commission authorized by the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the appointment of a commission in relation to universal peace," approved June 25, 1910.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10648) amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and protect the same."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 20, 1905, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so that section 5 thereof shall read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That no mark by which the goods of the owner of the mark may be distinguished from other goods of the same class shall be refused registration as a trade-mark on account of the nature of such mark unless such mark—

"(a) Consists of or comprises immoral or scandalous matter.

"(b) Consists of or comprises the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States or any simulation thereof, or of any State or municipality, or of any foreign nation, or of any design or picture that has been or may hereafter be adopted by any fraternal society as its emblem, or of any name, distinguishing mark, character, emblem, colors, flag, or banner adopted by any institution, organization, club, or society which was incorporated in any State in the United States prior to the date of the adoption and use by the applicant: Provided, That said name, distinguishing mark, character, emblem, colors, flag, or banner was adopted and publicly used by said institution, organization, club, or society prior to the date of adoption and use by the applicant: Provided, That trade-marks which are identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, or which so nearly resemble a registered or known trade-mark owned and in use by another and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public or to deceive purchasers shall not be registered: Provided, That no mark which consists merely in the name of an individual, firm, corporation, or association not written, printed, impressed, or woven in some particular or distinctive manner, or in association with a portrait of the individual, or merely in words or devices which are descriptive of the goods with which they are used, or of the character or quality of such goods, or merely a geographical name or term, shall be registered under the terms of this act: Provided further, That no portrait of a living individual may be registered as a trade-mark except by the consent of such individual, evidenced by an instrument in writing: And provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any mark used by the applicant or his predecessors, or by those from whom title to the mark is derived, in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes which was in actual and exclusive use as a trade-mark of the applicant or his predecessors from whom he derived title for 10 years next preceding February 20, 1905: Provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the registration of a trade-mark otherwise registrable because of its being the name of the applicant or a portion thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRANTLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPORT OF INDIGENT PERSONS, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 267) providing for assisting indigent persons, other than natives, in the District of Alaska.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act 5 per cent of all the moneys collected by the clerks of the district courts in Alaska for licenses and occupation taxes in the District of Alaska, now paid by the said clerks into the Alaska fund and to the treasurers of the several incorporated towns in Alaska, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and there held as a separate fund for the relief of the indigent persons, other than natives, in Alaska.

SEC. 2. That the said fund shall be disbursed upon the recommendation of the governor of Alaska to such persons and in such manner as he may direct: Provided, That the governor, in his annual report, shall submit an itemized statement with proper vouchers of all expenditures under this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] make a very brief statement of the purpose of the bill, if he will, and explain particularly why there is a change made so that the money that is now paid out of license fees for the support of the insane is diverted to other purposes by this bill and the insane are not provided for at all.

Mr. HARDY. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the Delegate from Alaska, as well as the governor of Alaska and all the other persons who appeared from up there who were interested in the matter, explained to us that the insane were provided for by some method under the school fund, and this was specifically for the purpose of taking care of those who might be hurt or injured or something of that sort, or indigent as described in the bill.

Mr. MANN. The law provides that a certain amount of this license fund shall be used for the benefit of the insane, or may be used for that purpose. I think since that law was passed we have provided an insane hospital up there. There may be some provision in relation to it carried in the sundry civil bill. Is the gentleman quite confident that that is entirely provided for in other ways? Why should we provide out of the General Treasury for the care of the insane in Alaska when we turn over all the license fees, partly for the care of those who are incapacitated and partly for other purposes?

Mr. HARDY. I will state, if the gentleman will permit, that possibly the Delegate from Alaska is more intimately acquainted with the exact status of the law than I, and he will be here directly. But my impression is——

Mr. MANN. The time for him to be here is when the bill is up.

Mr. HARDY. I myself am responsible, possibly, for his being away just now.

The statement that I have to make is that all parties from Alaska are agreed that the insane are taken care of under other provisions of law. Furthermore, I will call attention to the fact that this bill undertakes to provide specifically for a division of 10 per cent, so that it would be applied separately to each of the four districts, and if it should not all be absolutely required it would be turned back to the general fund, to be used by the Territory of Alaska for road improvements. Not a dollar of it comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The governor of Alaska appeared before our committee and recommended the passage of this bill practically in the form in which it is presented, did he not?

Mr. HARDY. Yes; both the Delegate and the governor.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The Delegate and others from Alaska who understood this subject recommended the passage of this bill, and we drew up this bill in committee for the purpose of meeting exactly the wishes of the governor and the Delegate from Alaska and everybody who appeared before the committee.

Mr. MANN. I know; but there are other people who have a right beside the people of Alaska. It is very natural that they should want to get all they can, and it is perfectly proper that they should, but the question is whether we will turn over to them all the licenses received and in addition pay out of the General Treasury for the partial support of those people.

Mr. HARDY. This bill does not divert anything. It only changes the percentage of a certain fund that may be applied to the purposes of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the insane are already provided for by act of Congress, and while the original act provided that the insane should be provided for out of this fund? If somebody has worked out a plan so as to provide for them out of the General Treasury, we should be informed of it.

Mr. HARDY. I will only state that the insane are provided for by other legislation. I do not know what that legislation is. And this bill is designed to give 10 per cent of the "Alaska" fund, or so much thereof as is needed, for the care of the indigent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether a provision like this is made with respect to other Territories?

Mr. HARDY. I could not say as to that. This bill came over from the Senate without any administrative regulations, and the Senate bill set apart only 5 per cent of this fund.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this has been done with respect to all the other Territories, and it has been the rule in Alaska for years.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as that is concerned, for years we have been taking this fund in Alaska and turning over the license fees that are collected, partly for the benefit of the road fund and partly for the care of the indigent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Leaving it in the discretion of the governor to disburse it?

Mr. MANN. A certain percentage of it is used for road improvement, and a certain percentage is used for the care of the indigent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. One moment. I would like to ask a question. The House passed, a few days ago, a bill to organize the Territory of Alaska. If we pass this pending bill, and that other legislation should be enacted, what becomes of this law?

Mr. HARDY. My impression is that this law would bind until the legislation enacted by Congress should change it. It would hold until that Territorial government was organized.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is clear that they would have this burden to assume?

Mr. HARDY. They have already assumed it. It does not add anything to the burden. It takes 10 per cent of certain local taxes which they now pay and appropriates it to this purpose.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman says it does not add anything to the burdens of these people, or only takes 10 per cent, the fact is that we turn over the residue of the fund to be used for the building of roads, and every year there is a proposition made here, which we usually agree to, to appropriate a certain sum out of the Treasury, in addition to the fund under this section, for the building of roads. I agree with the gentleman that the indigent must be cared for.

Mr. HARDY. It is a matter of necessity, which is urged upon us by every consideration of humanity and insisted upon by the people there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HARDY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, as amended by an act approved May 14, 1906, and as further amended by an act approved February 6, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation or trade licenses, outside of the incorporated towns in the Territory of Alaska, shall be deposited in the Treasury Department of the United States, there to remain as a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the "Alaska fund," and to be wholly devoted to the purposes hereinafter stated in the Territory of Alaska. Thirty per cent of said fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be devoted to the establishment and maintenance of public schools in said Territory; 10 per cent of said fund shall be, and is hereby, appropriated and authorized to be expended for the relief of persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident; and all the residue of said fund shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory: Provided, That the clerk of the court of each judicial division of said Territory is authorized, and he is hereby directed, whenever considered necessary, to call upon the United States marshal of said judicial division to aid in the collection of said license moneys by designating regular or special deputies of his office to act as temporary license inspectors, and it shall be the duty of said United States marshal to render such aid; and the said regular or special deputies while actually engaged in the performance of this duty shall receive the same fees and allowances and be paid in the same manner as when performing their regular duties.

"'SEC. 2. That at the end of each fiscal quarter the Treasurer of the United States shall divide the amount of said 10 per cent of said fund so received during the quarter just ended into four equal parts, and transmit to each of the four United States marshals in Alaska one of said equal amounts

"'SEC. 3. That each of said marshals is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money received by him under this act as may, in his discretion, be required for the relief of those persons in his division who are incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and who are indigent and unable to assist and protect themselves: Provided, That each marshal, with his quarterly report, shall submit an itemized statement, with proper vouchers, of all expenditures made by him under this act, and he shall at the time transmit a copy of said statement to the governor of the Territory: Provided further, That any unexpended balance, remaining in the hands of any marshal at the end of any quarter, shall be returned to the Treasurer of the United States, and by him deposited in the said "Alaska fund," and the said sum shall be subsequently devoted, first, to meeting any actual requirements for the care and relief of such persons as are provided for in this act in any other division in said Territory wherein the amount allotted for that purpose has proved insufficient; and, second, if there shall be any remainder thereof, said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 3, in line 17, the words "Sec. 2," and the same in line 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 17, strike out the words "Sec. 2," and also, in line 23, strike out the words "Sec. 2."

Mr. MANN. The reason for that is that this is an amendment to section 1 of an act, and it all ought to appear as one section instead of being subdivided into several sections; otherwise no one would know where the section ended.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any objection to striking out those two divisions and to make it all a part of section 1 instead of having three sections.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If it is understood that sections 2 and 3 are new material and not a part of the old law.

Mr. MANN. That is the very object of my amendment, so that section 1 shall read "as follows."

Mr. HARDY. I think the amendment is all right.

The amendment of Mr. MANN to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. On page 3, in line 18, we have the word "Treasurer." The provision is—

That at the end of each fiscal quarter the Treasurer of the United States shall divide the amount—

And so forth. I think that should be "Secretary of the Treasury." It is the Secretary who makes the vouchers and warrants upon which money can be obtained, I suppose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HARDY. It is a matter of construction, and I think the word "Treasurer" would be sufficiently definite. The official designation is "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. MANN. I would not be certain, but I think it is the Secretary of the Treasury. Whichever it is, it will not do to put in the other, because they probably would not get the money. As it is to be transmitted, I think it would be the Secretary of the Treasury. I move, in line 18, page 3, to strike out "Treasurer" and insert the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, strike out the word "Treasurer" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HARDY. The question I was going to suggest was that one motion be made to cover the word "Treasurer" there, and also in subsequent parts of the bill where the word "Treasurer" occurs, as in line 10, page 4.

Mr. MANN. At the other place it is a provision for returning it to the Treasurer, I think.

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It might be returned to the Treasurer.

Mr. HARDY. Still, if it is technically correct in one place it is in the other.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. HARDY. I am trying to get it right in both places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. The same change ought to be made in line 10, page 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent that the same change be made in line 10, page 4.

Mr. MANN. That ought to be "Treasury" instead of "Treasurer."

Mr. HARDY. On page 4, line 10, change the word "Treasurer" to "Treasury."

Mr. MANN. On further consideration I think we had better leave it as it is.

Mr. HARDY. Then I will leave it as it is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. There is a provision on page 4, that after the money is expended for the indigent:

And, second, if there shall be any remainder thereof said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of wagon roads, bridges, and trails in said Territory.

Mr. HARDY. That is done upon reports from each separate division, authorized and required to be made by the terms of the bill.

Mr. MANN. But the bill says, "Provided further, That any unexpended balance remaining in the hands of any marshal at the end of any quarter shall be returned to the Treasurer of the United States and by him deposited in the said Alaska fund, and the said sum shall be subsequently devoted, first, to meeting any actual requirements," and so forth.

And then it says, "If there shall be any remainder thereof said remainder shall be devoted to the construction and maintenance of roads," and so forth.

Does it mean the remainder at the end of a quarter or at the end of a year?

Mr. HARDY. It means at the end of a year. Alaska is divided into four sections. We did not know whether each section would consume, for the needs of the indigent, all the 10 per cent allotted to it, each section having one-quarter of the 10 per cent; one section might have large demands for indigent needs and another small demands, so the purpose was to provide for the entire demand of the four sections, using any surplus in one section to eke out the needs or deficiency of another, and if at the end of a year all the sections had not consumed the whole 10 per cent it would go back to the road fund.

Mr. MANN. Although I am not prepared to say how it ought to read, I am inclined to think there will be trouble about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide assistance to persons in Alaska who are indigent and incapacitated through nonage, old age, sickness, or accident, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. HARDY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STREET RAILWAY IN SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, this is a very lengthy bill, and we might avoid reading it if I reserve an objection and make a statement. This bill proposes a 50-year franchise to a street railway corporation in Hawaii. It exempts property from taxation for a period of 10 years, and while it attempts to prevent stock watering, it apparently fails to accomplish the purpose. It should be amended in many important particulars, and I am constrained to object.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. LENROOT. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill granting a franchise to an electric railway company in a small town in the Island of Hawaii. The town has a population of about 7,000 people scattered around a circular bay. A wharf is being built 2 miles from the center of the town. It will be expensive to get from the wharf to the business part of the town and more expensive to get freight between these points. Now, they have to pay for passenger fare 50 to 75 cents. The people concerned are desirous of having this railway built which will haul them for a 5-cent fare and haul freight much cheaper than the present arrangement will. Then there is a large tract of Government land lying near by, which will be open for occupation in the near future, between the center of the town and the wharf that it is thought will be settled by working people. There are only about 7,000 people here, and it is difficult to finance a company to build a railroad in a town of this size.

This bill went through the Hawaiian Legislature with only one vote against it. After that it was carefully examined by the governor, and a number of amendments suggested by him, which are not incorporated in it. He thought, as amended that it protected absolutely the interests of Hawaii and the town of Hilo and the public. It was then carefully examined by the Secretary of the Interior who had indorsed it, with the amendments suggested by the government of Hawaii. Then the Committee on Territories considered it and added other amendments, and in its present shape it is indorsed by all of these persons and tribunals and by the Delegate from Hawaii.

It is true that it does give a 50-year franchise, and it exempts the property from taxation for a limited period, but gentlemen will understand that it is difficult to raise money to build an electric railway line of this character in a town of this size. In every particular the interests of the public are protected by this bill, and I have heard no objection coming from any source in reference to it, except by a railway company in Hawaii that this electric line will probably parallel for a short distance. The governor, the legislature, the Secretary of the Interior, the Delegate from Hawaii, the Committee on Territories, all unanimously indorse this bill, and the only objection to it comes from this steam railway company whose lines may be paralleled by this line. I hope the gentleman will not object, because this is a growing town and it needs better transportation between the different parts of the town and from the wharf to the business part of the town than it has. We ought not to allow the selfish objections of a corporation already there stand in the way of this needed enterprise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in reply to the gentleman, I do not question his good faith or that of the committee in the preparation of this bill, but the arguments which have been made by the gentleman from Virginia have been made in nearly every city of the United States as an excuse for granting a franchise that never ought to have been granted. I have no objection to granting a franchise to this street railway corporation, but I am not willing as a Member of Congress to stand here and approve of the provisions in this bill, which are absolutely vicious in principle, and I therefore object.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will suggest to the gentleman that he let the bill come up and offer such amendments as he wishes.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not had an opportunity to see the bill until this morning, and although I have in mind several amendments, I have not prepared any.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will ask unanimous consent to let the bill be passed, without prejudice, until the gentleman prepares them.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will make a request to pass it over until the next unanimous-consent day——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can put the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar again. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, is not this suspension day, and will not a motion to suspend the rules be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a motion to suspend the rules until the Unanimous Consent Calendar is disposed of.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. A motion to suspend the rules will be in order after this calendar is through.

REPAIR OF LEVEES, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 309) appropriating money for the repair of levees on the Mississippi River.

The Clerk read the title.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this has been passed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, House joint resolution 309 is identical with the Senate resolution which came over the other day and to which the House agreed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Therefore the gentleman wishes it stricken from the calendar?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the House resolution laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the House joint resolution be laid on the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEGALIZING CERTAIN CONVEYANCES HERETOFORE MADE BY UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Be it enacted, etc., That all conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or by the Union Pacific Railway Co., of land forming a part of the right of way of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. granted by the Government by the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed: Provided, That no such conveyances shall have the effect to diminish said right of way to a less width than 100 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. The committee has made such important committee amendments that I ask to have them reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. Page 1, line 3, after the word "by," insert the following: "And all rights acquired by adverse possession against."

Second. Page 1, line 3, after the amendment just suggested, the word "the" before "Union" should begin with a capital letter.

Third. Page 1, line 4, after the word "or," strike out the word "by."

Fourth. Page 1, line 5, the word "the," preceding the word "Union," should begin with a capital letter.

Fifth. Page 2, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all conveyances, agreements, or acts heretofore made or done by, and all rights acquired by adverse possession against The Union Pacific Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., or The Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co., or the successors or assigns of any of them, conveying any land forming a part of the right of way between Denver, Colo., and Cheyenne, Wyo., of or by any of said companies under any act of Congress or defining the limits of said right of way or restricting the same, are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed: Provided, That said conveyances, agreements, or acts shall not have the effect to diminish said right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of said railroad as now established and maintained."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. REES and Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. I wish to ask if the gentleman would have any objection to inserting the name of the Leavenworth, Pawnee Western Railroad Co., the Union Pacific Railroad Co., eastern division, and the Kansas Pacific Railroad Co.?

Mr. NORRIS. Where does the gentleman propose to insert them?

Mr. REES. The names ought to follow in the first section, I suggest, either just before or just after the names of the companies the gentleman has named.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the gentleman, that will cover the Kansas situation, will it?

Mr. REES. I think that will cover the Kansas situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are the technical names of the Union Pacific system down there under which it was organized?

Mr. REES. Yes; I understand those are the technical names.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN. Does that mean to enlarge the scope of the bill or simply perfect the names?

Mr. NORRIS. In my judgment it would not enlarge its scope. I think that simply proposes to add to it the technical names of the Union Pacific Railroad as they exist and did exist in Kansas.

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman has provided in section 2?

Mr. NORRIS. No; section 2 is for Colorado. I provided in section 1 for the State of Nebraska. The amendment should be put in section 1.

Mr. MANN. Well, in section 1 you only cover the Union Pacific, and in section 2 you cover both.

Mr. NORRIS. I have an amendment to the section, which I expected to offer, to perfect the names, as there is one mistake in the names now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas wants to perfect the names. I would like to know whether it is the intention to simply perfect the names so as to cover all the property or to add a lot of other rights of way about which we have no information.

Mr. REES. It is not my intention to add any rights of way, I will say to the gentleman. The Kansas situation, as far as the Union Pacific running through it, is just the same as it was through Nebraska and Colorado.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. REES. I will yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood I had the floor, and I yielded to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CLAYTON. Suppose you recognize me in my own right and we will settle the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not do that; the gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it does not make any difference in whose time I am recognized, as I merely want to make an observation. This bill was introduced January 3, 1912, and the Committee on the Judiciary have given several hearings on this bill and we endeavored to perfect it, and on the suggestion, I believe, which originated with the Representatives of Colorado and indorsed by former Gov. Thomas, of Colorado, and former Judge Banks, of Denver, Colo., and following the suggestions of a gentleman from Greeley, Colo., who appeared before the committee at the instance of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER], this section 2 was explained to the committee before it was incorporated into the bill. It was made manifest to the committee that this section 2 ought to be added to the bill. Now, there has been no suggestion of the sort made by the gentleman from Kansas until a few minutes ago. Doubtless he is correct in his statement that it is necessary to make this bill more comprehensive than it is in the form in which it was reported, but I for one would like to know the reason for making the proposed amendment.

Mr. REES. If the gentleman will turn to page 52 of the hearings he will find a statement there from N. H. Loomis which gives a history of that part of the Union Pacific Railroad in Kansas.

The name of the company was originally the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railway Co. Now, some of these acts of the Government and of the railway took place during the time that the railroad company bore this name; and simply in order to make the names technically correct I thought it wise to make this correction.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question? Have you reduced your amendment to writing?

Mr. REES. I have reduced it to writing, but I am not sure as to the proper place in which to insert it. I thought probably it ought to be in both the first and second sections.

Mr. NORRIS. There will be no occasion for it in the second section. That applies only to the situation in Colorado, and specifically states "from Denver to Cheyenne." I hope the gentleman will not offer the amendment until the amendments I have here are offered, because it will come in appropriately, I think, after one I want to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, insert the words "and all rights acquired by adverse possession against."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "The," with a capital T.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks we had better complete the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Because this amendment comes in ahead of it in the order of the bill is the reason that I wish to offer it now. I have no objection, however, if you desire to go on with the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "by."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "the" at the end of the line and insert the word "The" with a capital "T."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer it merely to correct a possible error in the names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by inserting, after the word "Company," appearing at the end of line 5 and the beginning of line 6, the following: "or Union Pacific Railroad Co."

Mr. MANN. Where does that come in?

Mr. NORRIS. That comes in right at the beginning of line 6, after "Company," but the word "Company" is partly on line 5.

Mr. CLAYTON. Just before the word "of."

Mr. MANN. How would that read then?

Mr. NORRIS. It is another technical one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. NORRIS. I will explain. The original company was "The Union Pacific Railroad Co.," and the word "the" was a part of the corporate name. The next company was the "Union Pacific Railway Co.," the word "the" not being a part of the corporate name. The third company was "Union Pacific Railroad Co.," which is exactly like the original company, except there is no "the" in the corporate name, and this amendment is simply put in to get into the law the technical name of the present company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. If any amendment is to be offered by the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. NORRIS. Then it ought to follow this amendment.

Mr. MANN. It should be, properly, an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding the following.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?

Mr. REES. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. REES. To follow the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Co.——

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman wants the word "or" in there.

Mr. MANN. Necessarily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment with the change suggested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., eastern division, or the Kansas Pacific Railway Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, add a new section, as follows, beginning with line 10:

"SEC. 2. That all conveyances, agreements, or acts heretofore made or done by, and all rights acquired by adverse possession against the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., or the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co., or the successors or assigns of any of them, conveying any land forming a part of the right of way between Denver, Colo., and Cheyenne, Wyo., of or by any of said companies under any act of Congress or defining the limits of said right of way or restricting the same, are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed: Provided, That said conveyances, agreements, or acts shall not have the effect to diminish said right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of said railroad as now established and maintained."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 17, page 2, the words "or by."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, of the amendment, strike out the words "or by."

Mr. MANN. They do not belong in there.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think they do, either.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly plain that the title should be amended.

Mr. CLAYTON. The title ought to conform to all these amendments that have been added to the bill. That is manifest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the amendments that have been adopted.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. NORRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD some letters. One of them is a letter addressed to Representative LOBECK in behalf of this legislation. Another is a letter addressed to Representative KINKAID of Nebraska to the same effect. Another is a letter addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary by the Hon. Charles S. Thomas, former governor of Colorado. There is a similar letter addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary by the Hon. James J. Banks, a former judge, now a practicing attorney, Denver, Colo., to the same effect.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do.

Mr. RUCKER or Colorado. Of course I do not mind the gentleman minimizing the efforts of the Representatives of Colorado in the passage of this bill——

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was in charge of this bill, and he knows that the Colorado Members were responsible for the insertion of the second section in this bill. I do not care about being ruthlessly set aside. I simply want to be treated fairly.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman has spoken a little too quickly. I was going to say that the Members from Colorado had repeatedly interviewed the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and had appeared before that committee in behalf of this legislation. I was about to give the gentleman from Colorado credit for his usual industry and care in looking after the matters of Colorado. [Applause.] It applies to all of the Members from Colorado, as much so to his colleagues as to himself, and I know that the gentleman is generous in wanting to accord to his colleagues that equal industry and patriotic fervor that he claims for himself. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I was actuated only by a spirit of fairness to the committee chairman in making the statement. I was aware he was familiar with my efforts generally, but I knew he was unadvised that I was instrumental for section 2 appearing in the bill, which applies to Colorado.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of certain letters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the letters referred to:

ALDA, NEBR., February 26, 1912.

Hon. C. O. LOBECK, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR LOBECK: Please permit me to presume on my personal friendship with you by sending you the inclosed petitions forwarded me by friends in the west part of the county.

There is a universal desire along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad to have this right-of-way matter settled. We believe House bill 16689 will greatly aid in settling the disputed titles; and if the bill is promptly passed, settlement may be effected before actual homicides grow out of the intolerable state of things existing along this road for the past three years.

Very truly, yours,

HUGH F. MCINTOSH.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE,
Brady, Nebr., February 24, 1912.

Hon. M. P. KINKAID,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Herewith find petition praying for the passage of House bill 16689, the sentiments of the people in this part of the country. There is, and always has been for years, a sentiment against the railroad for claiming the 400 feet of right of way as according to the first grant of the United States. The railroad forfeited their rights under that grant.

Respectfully,

E. H. SPRINGER.

DENVER, COLO., March 28, 1912.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to commend to your favorable consideration a bill now pending in the House of Representatives, which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is entitled "A bill legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co." and was introduced by Mr. NORRIS. Its purpose is to validate conveyances made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. of land forming part of its right of way. The railroad company conveyed these lands years ago for a valuable consideration and are now bringing actions to have the deeds canceled on the ground that it had no power to alienate this land.

Mr. NORRIS's bill, as originally drawn, only covers conveyances made along the right of way of the main track of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. The old Pacific railway system, which was created by acts of Congress, consisted not only of this main land running from Omaha west, but of a number of "feeders" starting from such points as Kansas City and St. Joseph to be connected with the main line at about the one hundredth meridian. Of these, what became later known as the Kansas Pacific was the only one that was complete, and it was only complete as far west as Denver. A local road called the Denver Pacific had, in the meantime, surveyed and graded a line from Denver to Cheyenne, connecting with the Union Pacific main line, and by an act of Congress of 1869 the Kansas Pacific was relieved from the necessity of continuing its line to the junction with the Union Pacific main line and was permitted to contract with the Denver Pacific to build its line, the same to be used jointly by the two companies. All of these railroads subsequently became and are now part of the present Union Pacific system, and amendments have been, or will be, introduced whereby conveyances by the Denver Pacific road will be included in the act.

I am the attorney for certain persons living along the line of the Denver Pacific road whose titles are now being attacked, although they date back to 1869 or 1870, and are based upon deeds from the Denver Pacific road itself or from land companies organized by its officers and directors, who acquired the land by patent from the United States Government and afterwards sold it.

It is claimed now, although the claim was never made until two or three years ago, that the road was granted a 400-foot right of way, and that as it could not alienate it—as decisions of the United States Supreme Court held—the deed should be canceled without compensation. As a matter of fact, the act of 1869, which permitted the Kansas Pacific Co. to contract with the Denver Pacific and build the line to Cheyenne, says nothing about the width of the right of way, and it has always been supposed by the railroad company and by everybody else that the right of way was 100 feet, and this is all that has ever been used or that it is likely will ever be necessary to use.

I have written to Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, Representative from this State, asking him to see that the bill is properly amended so as to afford relief to the residents of this State who bought their land from the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co. or land companies organized by its officers.

The purpose of the bill is a most worthy one, being practically merely to confirm the title of the present owners of property bought from the railroad company or its officers. This property was sold to bona fide purchasers, and a great deal of it has been improved. Taxes have been paid on all of it for nearly 40 years, and there is every reason why their title should be confirmed and none why it should be destroyed.

The only opposition to the bill, I am informed, comes from the Union Pacific Railroad Co., which is trying to invalidate, through the courts, its own acts. The decisions of the courts, and especially of the United States Supreme Court cases, are very doubtful. Estoppel, occupancy, payment of taxes, and the statute of limitations being all apparently ineffective as defenses to the present owners of property, therefore relief is sought through Congress.

I feel that the property owners along the line of the Denver Pacific road are entitled to even more consideration than those along the main line, for on that line the act of Congress expressly granted a 400-foot right of way, and on the line of the Denver Pacific the statute was at least ambiguous.

Trusting you can give this act your favorable consideration, I am, with best wishes,

Yours, very truly,

C. S. THOMAS.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to and ask your assistance in a matter which I am convinced is one deserving your attention and assistance, and which will affect the property interests of a number of people living in this State.

There is now pending in the House a bill legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., introduced by Mr. NORRIS, of Nebraska, which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on which a hearing is set for April 2.

This act provides that all conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. of land, forming a part of the right of way granted to it by the Federal Government, are legalized, and it is proposed to amend this bill so as to widen its scope to include not only the Union Pacific Railroad Co., but also the old Kansas Pacific and Denver Pacific which are now parts of the Union Pacific system.

It may doubtless seem strange that an act of Congress should be necessary to validate these deeds. The fact is, and this reveals the equitable nature of the proposed act, that the validity of these conveyances is attacked by the present Union Pacific Co., the grantee of the companies which executed the deeds and received the consideration paid for the land.

The old Denver Pacific Railroad runs between Denver, Colo., and Cheyenne, Wyo., which is only a few miles beyond the Colorado line. It was built about 1870 to connect Denver with the main line of the Union Pacific at Cheyenne, and it connects at Denver with the western terminus of the Kansas Pacific. Under an act passed in 1869, the Kansas Pacific was relieved from the necessity of constructing its line farther than Denver, as required by the earlier acts, and was permitted to contract with and use the line of the Denver Pacific. Along the line of this Denver Pacific road has grown up a number of thriving towns, as it passes part of the way through one of the most productive agricultural regions of Colorado. Although, in the earlier acts, the right of way of the Union Pacific Railroad had been fixed at 400 feet, there was nothing in this act of 1869 which fixed any particular width for the right of way.

It was always assumed by the Denver Pacific Railroad Co., and by others, that a right of way 100 feet wide existed until about the year 1907 or 1908. About that time certain decisions of the United States Supreme Court in regard to the Northern Pacific right of way, holding that the right of way granted by Congress to the railroad company could not be alienated even by deed from the railroad company itself, doubtless induced the Union Pacific Co., which had by this time acquired the Denver Pacific Railroad, to claim a right of way 400 feet wide and to assert that all titles which had been acquired beyond the 100-foot strip the road had been using and without the 400-foot strip were void.

These titles had been acquired in two ways: One, by direct conveyance back in the early seventies from the railroad company; and, two, by conveyance from the land companies organized by the officers and directors of the railroad company, for the purpose, as the articles of incorporation state, of acquiring, holding, and disposing of lands lying along the lines of the said road. Under these deeds many persons entered possession of these lands, improved them, conveyed them, and paid taxes on them for nearly 40 years. The lands were sold originally by the railroad company or the land company to bona fide purchasers, and it was the idea of no one until within the last two or three years that these titles were not as good as any titles in the State. The courts have practically held that neither the payment of taxes nor the statute of limitations can affect the right of the railroad company to the land.

If you can see your way clear to lend your support to this bill, it will of great benefit to the towns lying along the line of this road in Colorado. Every consideration of equity and fair dealing demands that the people who now occupy these lands, and who bought them in good faith and who have expended a great deal of money in improving them in some cases, should get this relief.

The railroad company has always found the 100-foot right of way sufficient for it, and there is no claim on its part that it is not sufficient now. The road is a single track between Denver and Cheyenne, and 100 feet would give it room to lay seven or eight parallel tracks, which it will never by any possibility be necessary for it to do. It has additional land at all stations for depots, sidetracks, etc.

The action of the railroad company in bringing suits to recover these lands has awakened a great deal of antagonism toward it, particularly along the line of the road, and if this bill of Mr. NORRIS's is passed it will be a very popular measure and will be the means of confirming honest property owners in their just rights.

The original bill, as introduced by Mr. NORRIS, only provides for the validation of conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Co. His bill was drawn probably for the benefit of residents in Nebraska along the line of the old Union Pacific or Kansas Pacific. I understand that amendments have been proposed to include the Denver Pacific. I am especially interested in conveyances by the Denver Pacific Railway Co. and the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co., or by any land company composed in whole or in part of officers or directors of any of the aforesaid corporations, and which were incorporated for the purpose of acquiring, holding, and disposing of lands lying along the lines of said companies or any of them.

When the Denver Pacific and the Kansas Pacific were building the directors of the two roads jointly organized land companies, received patents from the United States for lands and—in good faith—sold them for a valuable consideration. Many of these good people now on the lands, or their grantors, bought from these land companies, and the validation of the conveyances by the railroad companies alone, without including the land companies' conveyances, would not protect them.

With best regards, I am,

Yours, very truly, JAS. J. BANKS.

SALE OF MARINE-HOSPITAL SITE, OCRACOKE, N. C.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21481) providing for the sale of the old marine-hospital site at Ocracoke, N. C.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell and convey the old marine-hospital site at Ocracoke, N. C., to the highest bidder after due advertisement thereof, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and to deposit the proceeds in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read the first committee amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "Ocrakoke" and insert the same word spelled "Ocracoke."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, insert, after the word "Carolina," the following: "to the highest bidder after due advertisement thereof."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended House bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AUSTIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPECIAL EXAMINER OF DRUGS, ETC., PORT OF BOSTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 275) to make the special examiner of drugs, medicines, and chemicals an assistant appraiser at the port of Boston.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the special examiner of drugs, medicines, and chemicals in the district of Boston and Charlestown, Mass., shall, in addition to his duties as special examiner, for which he shall be appointed with special reference to his qualifications, perform the duties and hold the rank of an assistant appraiser.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I hope somebody may be able to give a reason for the passage of this bill. There is no reason given in the report of the committee of the House, and there is no reason given in the report of the committee of the Senate, and there is no reason given in the recommendations concerning it by the Secretary of the Treasury. If there is a reason for it, somebody ought to give it. The gentlemen who reported it in both House and Senate and the Secretary of the Treasury did not seem to be able to find any reason for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the examiner of drugs at the port of Boston has been in charge of the laboratory division, and it is necessary as a part of his responsibility, and should be necessary, for him to sign certain papers. It very much facilitates the work of the department if he can sign these papers as assistant appraiser, which he can not do at the present time.

This bill involves no change of salary and is simply asked for by the Treasury Department and the collector of customs at Boston as an administrative aid to the department's work there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HOLEB, ME., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3160) to establish Holeb, Me., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Holeb, Me., be, and the same is hereby, established a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me., and that the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said subport of Holeb, Me.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to discontinue Lowelltown as a subport of entry whenever he may be satisfied that the maintenance of such subport is no longer necessary to the transaction of the public business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question about the bill. Will or will not this bill multiply the number of these small ports that we have in this country where it costs more dollars to collect than we get in—more dollars for expenses than the total revenues of the port?

Mr. PETERS. This bill will not increase in any way the expenses of the department. The port which is to be abolished is Lowelltown, Me., near the boundary between Maine and the Province of New Brunswick, at the point where the Canadian Pacific goes from the State of Maine into Canada. It is proposed to have the business done at the other station, Holeb, Me., a short distance to the east, at which place the Canadian Pacific is now establishing facilities for transacting the business. There is no change whatever in the relations of the Government, and it will not add anything to the expenses.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it necessary to have such a subport?

Mr. PETERS. It is. This is on the main line of the Canadian Pacific, and there is a substantial amount of business done there. The value of the imports for the last fiscal year was about $63,000, on which were collected $9,464 in duties.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill. I merely want to add that in my judgment the whole system of the collection of customs duties ought to be revised and the districts reshaped and the expense of collection materially reduced, as many Secretaries of the Treasury have told us could be done.

Mr. PETERS. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Texas in those views.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform us whether it is the intention of the Treasury Department to discontinue the subport at Lowell town?

Mr. PETERS. That will be done as soon as the facilities at Holeb are completed, but it was impossible for the first subport to be discontinued and the second one to be established at the same moment, because it is necessary to have the facilities at Holeb completed before the subport at Lowell town can be abolished.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that will be done as soon as the new one is authorized?

Mr. PETERS. We have the assurance of the Treasury Department that as soon as the subport at Holeb is established the one at Lowell town will be discontinued.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And that there will be no additional expense to the Government by reason of the passage of this act?

Mr. PETERS. There will be no additional expense to the Government by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. FOSTER. This does not say that they must discontinue the subport at Lowell town. It simply gives them the right to do it if they so desire.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If that is so, it ought to be amended.

Mr. PETERS. That was the form in which the bill came to us from the Senate, and the Secretary of the Treasury is anxious to discontinue the Lowell town subport just as soon as he possibly can. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to discontinue Lowell town "whenever he may be satisfied that the maintenance of such subport is no longer necessary to the transaction of public business." He will do so as soon as the tracks at Holeb are completed.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how far apart are these two subports?

Mr. PETERS. I think they are about 4 miles apart.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does the gentleman really think that 4 miles is a great enough distance to make this change necessary, especially if the gentleman, who as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means succeeds in putting wool, sugar, and meat on the free list, and bringing Canada in under a reciprocity agreement, all of which, I understand, he favors, in which event we shall have no import duties to collect from entries made at either of these ports upon those articles?

Mr. PETERS. I do not catch the point of the gentleman's question. I see by looking at the report that Holeb is 10 or 12 miles from the international boundary. It will be used instead of Lowell town, which will be discontinued as a port and as a stopping place by the railroad.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not true that one town being 10 miles from the other, there is at the same time no assurance that the one subport will be discontinued when the other is established?

Mr. PETERS. I say exactly that. The establishment of the subport of entry at Holeb is for the express purpose of providing for the discontinuance of the subport at Lowell town. There will be no more ports established than exist at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PATENTS TO PUBLIC LANDS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23238) to authorize the issuance of absolute and unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in cases where patents for public lands have been issued to entrymen under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1909, and June 22, 1910, reserving to the United States all coal deposits therein, and lands so patented are subsequently classified as noncoal in character, to issue new or supplemental patents to such entrymen, conveying to them the absolute and unqualified title to the lands so previously entered, patented, and thereafter classified as noncoal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Shall I make a statement about the bill?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can do whatever he likes. When he gets through I shall object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Of course, if the gentleman is going to object, there is no use in making any statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I reserved the right to object. Unless the gentleman desires to make a statement, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, of course if the gentleman is going to object, I do not know that there is any use in my making a statement.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Can we not have the privilege of knowing the grounds of the gentleman's objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman inform us what his objection is to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object to the principle of the bill, I object to the form, I object to the substance, I object to the manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Outside of that I suppose it is all right. [Laughter.] Is there anything the gentleman does not object to in connection with it?

Mr. MANN. I am not sure; I have not found anything in it that appeals to me.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to interrogate the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. MANN. Yes; as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to call attention to the fact that on April 4, 1911, I introduced a bill, H. R. 50, which in substance is the same as the bill of the gentleman from Colorado. I called upon the chairman of the committee some time early in the special session and asked to have the bill referred to the department. I discovered in the winter that it had not been so referred, and I had the House bill No. 50 referred to the department, and it was reported favorably. I noticed that immediately following the receipt of that report the gentleman from Colorado introduced the bill which is now on the calendar and which is practically the same bill that I introduced. Can the gentleman explain how it happens that a bill should be introduced by himself, acting as chairman of the committee at the time, and substituted for a bill that had already been referred to the committee, and upon which the department had made a report?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that I did not know that he had a bill or that he had had a favorable report upon it. The gentleman never came before the committee and called attention to that fact.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That explanation is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say, furthermore, that I have had for a year letters inquiring if there could not, in some way, be some provision made, or ruling of the Interior Department, or a bill passed that would grant the people an absolute title to their lands on these coal reservations where the lands had been afterwards classified as being no coal thereon. I submitted a written request to the Department of the Interior for a statement as to their views on the subject, and, if it met with their approval, for a memorandum draft of a bill. I do not know that I am violating any confidence when I say that I prepared this bill in conformity with the suggestions of the department. I introduced it, it was referred to the department, and the Secretary made a favorable report upon it. I understood the gentleman from Wyoming had a bill similar to this, but as he did not press it and as I had for some time been in communication with the Department of the Interior on this and other public-land matters and the inquiries about this measure kept coming in, I called the matter up myself and it was favorably reported by the committee. It is not a matter that affects Colorado any more than other sections of the country. As the acting chairman I merely attended to this as I did to many other matters of public concern.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not think that this has anything to do with my objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. I never heard of this until the other day.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is his intention to object to the bill?

Mr. MANN. It is.

Mr. CARLIN. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. I object.

ANNUITIES TO THE SIOUX INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21887) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Nebraska desires to make a statement, I will reserve an objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. In the end I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman might as well make his objection now.

Mr. MANN. I always give a man a show for his white alley. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. That is not much of a show, to notify him in advance that you will object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the gentleman from Illinois should object to this bill; it passed the House last year with nearly or the same provisions that it now has.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman why I object. In my judgment, it will take three and a half million dollars out of the Public Treasury without any consideration whatever.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I do if I have to answer now. I was willing to let the gentleman from Nebraska make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN LAWRENCE AND PENNINGTON COUNTIES, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20480) excepting certain lands in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described townships in the Black Hills Forest Reserve, S. Dak., to wit, township 3 north, 1 east, and all of townships 2 north, 1 east, and 2 north, 2 east, which are within Lawrence County, and township 1 north, 3 east, in Pennington County, Black Hills meridian, are hereby excepted from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," approved June 11, 1906. The lands within the said townships to remain subject to all other provisions of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman what this bill means to do and why these exceptions to the property in these counties?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In 1906 the Congress passed a general act permitting the settlement of homesteaders on agricultural lands within forest reserves. Section 4 of that act excepted out the counties of Lawrence and Pennington, S. Dak., from the general operation of the act for the reason that portions of the lands in these counties were mineral in character, and it was desired not to open to agricultural settlement any portion of lands that might be mineral. Later certain townships within these counties were found to be agricultural lands and nonmineral, and an act precisely like this was passed in relation to them. Now, this excepts certain other townships which are ascertained by the department to be agricultural, and the effect is only to put them under the operation of the general law.

Mr. SABATH. Has this the approval of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It has the approval of the Department of Agriculture, and the Interior Department also has recommended the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Does this refer to the whole county or only such parts that are agricultural land?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It only applies to certain lands in these townships, which are agricultural. It only applies to such valleys and lands as are suitable for agriculture, and in each instance the application must be made to the Department of Agriculture to examine and list the sections that the applicant wants to settle as agricultural.

Mr. SABATH. It does not provide for an exception to the lands in the entire county?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Oh, no; only to these townships. It makes the general law for agricultural entry applicable the same as it is to all agricultural lands.

Mr. SABATH. In what form are these opened to settlement?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Only by homestead entries; by anybody that is a qualified homesteader.

Mr. SABATH. Now can people like those living in my country ascertain what lands are open for settlement?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They can go out there and apply to have them listed as agricultural lands, and when that is done they can enter them.

Mr. SABATH. The reason that I ask the question is that I have received many letters from people in my section making inquiries about the lands.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that in my judgment some of the best homestead opportunities in the United States are in portions of these forest reserves, and particularly in the Black Hills Forest Reserve, and settlers are going there and availing themselves of these opportunities, and it is open to anybody.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman think this land should be open to settlement?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do, by all means.

Mr. SABATH. And it is good land?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Very.

Mr. SABATH. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill being on the Union Calendar, I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois calls my attention to the advisability of a slight change in the language for the purpose, perhaps, of expressing more clearly the meaning, and I offer as an amendment, in line 5, to strike out the word "all" and insert "so much," and in line 6 to strike out the word "which" and insert "as." It is simply a matter of phraseology.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "all" and insert in lieu thereof the words "so much"; page 1, line 6, strike out the word "which" and insert in lieu thereof the word "as."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16461) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 269 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 269. That no judgment shall be set aside, or reversed, or new trial granted, by any court in the United States in any case, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless in the opinion of the court to which the application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of the parties. The trial judge may in any case submit to the jury the issues of fact arising upon the pleadings, reserving any question of law arising in the case for subsequent argument and decision, and he and any court to which the case shall thereafter be taken on writ of error shall have the power to direct judgment to be entered either upon the verdict or upon the point reserved, if conclusive, as its judgment upon such point may require."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

1. On page 1, line 8, insert after the word "judgment" the words "decree, or order," so that the line as amended will read "that no judgment, decree, or order shall be set aside," etc.

2. On page 1, line 9, after the word "court," strike out the word "in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of," so that the bill as amended will read "courts of the United States" instead of "courts in the United States."

3. On pages 1 and 2 of the bill, strike out all after the word "criminal," on page 1, line 10, down to and including the word "parties," on page 2, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on account of any error which does not injuriously affect the substantial rights of the party complaining."

4. On page 2, line 3, after the word "may," insert the words "in his discretion."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 16461:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16461) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States, report the same back with certain amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The several amendments as reported are as follows:

1. On page 1, line 8, insert after the word "judgment" the words "decree or order," so that the line as amended will read "that no judgment, decree, or order shall be set aside, etc."

2. On page 1, line 9, after the word "court," strike out the word "in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of," so that the bill as amended will read "courts of the United States" instead of "courts in the United States."

3. On pages 1 and 2 of the bill, strike out all after the word "criminal," on page 1, line 10, down to and including the word "parties," on page 2, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on account of any error which does not injuriously affect the substantial rights of the party complaining."

4. On page 2, line 3, after the word "may," insert the words "in his discretion."

The amendments suggested are designed to perfect the form of the bill without in any essential particular affecting its purpose.

The bill, as originally drawn, was prepared by a committee of the American Bar Association, by which also it has been under discussion for five years. In an amended form it passed the House of Representatives unanimously on the 6th day of February, 1911, and in the message of the President sent to Congress on December 21, 1911, we find the following recommendations:

"The American Bar Association has recommended to Congress several bills expediting procedure, one of which has already passed the House unanimously, February 6, 1911. This directs that no judgment should be set aside or reversed or new trial granted unless it appears to the court, after an examination of the entire cause, that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of the parties, and also provides for the submission of issues of fact to a jury, reserving questions of law for subsequent argument and decision. I hope this bill will pass the Senate and become law, for it will simplify the procedure at law."

Similar legislation to that now proposed has been adopted in Illinois, Kansas, Ohio, and Wisconsin, and by constitutional amendment in California; has passed both houses of the Legislature of the State of New York, and on the 2d day of April, 1912, was before the governor of that State for his signature.

No doubt a similar rule has been applied without express statutory mandate in the courts of other States. The necessity for Federal legislation on this subject is well illustrated by a comparison of the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Railroad Company v. O'Reilly (158 U. S., 334) and its language in the case of Cunningham v. Springer (204 U. S., 647). In the former of these cases it is said:

"While an appellate court will not disturb a judgment for an immaterial error, yet it should appear beyond a doubt that the error complained of did not and could not have prejudiced the rights of the party duly objecting."

On the other hand, in the latter case, it is said:

"These three illustrations * * * illustrate the importance of a strict application of the principle that the excepting party should make it manifest that an error prejudicial to him has occurred in the trial in order to justify an appellate court in disturbing the verdict."

In other words, in the first of these cases the Supreme Court holds that an error is presumed to be prejudicial until the contrary appears, and in the second, that an error is presumed to be harmless until the contrary is made to appear. It is the purpose of the first section of the present bill to enact in so far as the appellate courts are concerned that in the consideration in an appellate court of a writ of error or an appeal judgment shall be rendered upon the merits without permitting reversals for technical defects in the procedure below, and without presuming that any error which may appear has been of necessity prejudicial to the complaining party.

The second clause of the bill is drawn so as to provide a method by which in a proper case a verdict on questions of fact may be taken on the trial, reserving questions of law for more deliberate consideration either by the trial judge or in the appellate court. It authorizes the court to direct judgment to be entered upon the verdict or upon the point reserved, if conclusive, as its judgment upon such point reserved may require. This amendment gives additional value to the trial by jury. It will prevent the delay, expense, and consequent injustice caused by new trials upon every issue when the judgment of the appellate court differs from that of the trial court upon some point of law.

To quote from the opinion of the New York Court of Appeals in a recent case:

"It frequently happens that cases appear and reappear in this court after three or four trials where the plaintiff on every trial has changed his testimony in order to meet the varying fortunes of the case upon appeal."

Extreme instances of such delay may be found in the Hillmon case (145 U. S., 285; 188 U. S., 208), where the second judgment of reversal was 23 years after the trial began; and Spirnger v. Westcott (166 N. Y., 117), where there were four appeals and the recovery was $900 for the contents of a trunk.

The common-law practice of demurrers to the evidence and judgments non obstante veredicto embody the same idea with some limitations, while the judicature act of England carries the same principle and has so justified itself in practice that in that country final judgment is rendered on appeal in 90 per cent of the cases in which the judgment below is reversed, and in only 10 per cent of the reversals is a new trial ordered.

Your committee believe that the reforms embodied in this bill are wise and consonant with the promise of Magna Charta, that justice shall be denied or delayed to no man, and that the administration of justice shall not be so cumbrous, dilatory, and consequently expensive that it shall be obtainable only by the rich.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

COINAGE OF 3-CENT PIECES AND ½-CENT PIECES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23570) to authorize the coinage of 3-cent pieces and ½-cent pieces, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as soon as practicable after the passage of this act there shall be coined at the mints of the United States a 3-cent piece of the standard weight of 60 troy grains and a ½-cent piece of the standard weight of 30 troy grains, with no greater deviation from the standard weight than 2 grains each piece, and said coins shall be composed of 75 per cent copper and 25 per cent nickel. The diameters and the devices of said coins shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That upon one side there shall be an inscription of the word "Liberty" and the year of the coinage, and upon the reverse there shall be an inscription of the words "United States of America" and a designation of the value of the coin. Said 3-cent piece shall have one perforation in the center, and shall be a legal tender in any payment to the amount of 30 cents. The ½-cent piece shall be a legal tender in any payment to the amount of 25 cents.

SEC. 2. SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act all 1-cent pieces coined at the mints of the United States shall be of the standard weight of 48 troy grains, with no greater deviation from the standard weight than 2 grains each piece, and shall be composed of 75 per cent copper and 25 per cent nickel.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] first how many amendments there are to the bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. One amendment.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean in his report when he used this language:

The committee amendments were both suggested by the Director of the Mint after more thorough investigation subsequent to the introduction of the bill.

And again:

The second amendment strikes out the provision requiring the perforation in the 3-cent piece?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that this report was prepared for the committee which acted upon the bill.

Mr. MANN. Prepared before it was read?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It was prepared in anticipation, and when the committee acted upon the bill they only saw fit to make one amendment, and this report was put in the box without that correction having been made.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that was a little negligent, not to mention swift?

Mr. ASHBROOK. We wanted to be on time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman remembers what happened once when Congress passed a law in reference to the coinage of silver. We did not get over the agitation concerning it, politically, for many years. If the gentleman makes a report before the bill is ordered to be reported, and that report does not correctly state what the bill proposes to do, it might lead to disastrous consequences.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The report shows that but one amendment was made by the committee, and, as I stated to the gentleman, this report was put in the basket without the second amendment being stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that when we are changing the coinage laws we are entitled to have the committee give examination to the report it makes, and not make a report that has not been acted upon by the committee or authorized by the committee, which shows either negligence or carelessness on the part of some one?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not understand that the committees pass on the reports. They order the reports made, as they did in this case. I plead guilty to having put the report in the basket without this erasure having been made.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that in the first paragraph of the bill the diameter and device of these coins are left to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have not the slightest doubt but that these officers would desire to take great pains to make the diameter of these coins such as would not interfere by similarity with other coins now in use. Still, I think that Congress ought not to leave that subject in a condition of uncertainty. As the gentleman knows, there are a great many valuable devices for counting coins, some of them being quite expensive, that are used very largely by banking and commercial institutions. These machines are dependent entirely for their working principle upon the diameter of the coin, and therefore if the new coins were to be made of the same diameter as the old coins it would wipe out of existence to a very large extent these machines and cause a loss of the money invested in them. They are owned largely, as I said, by banks and others having to do with the handling of coin.

I therefore suggest to the gentleman whether he would have objection to amending the bill on page 2, line 2? That is the portion of the bill having reference to the diameter of the coins to be determined by these officers. I suggest to add after the word "Treasury," page 2, line 2, the following:

But the diameter of neither of the said coins shall be identical with the diameter of any other United States coin in common use.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that the Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, appeared before the committee and made a statement that this matter had been carefully considered, and if the gentleman will read the hearings of the committee he will see that the Director of the Mint stated that he had given that question a great deal of consideration; that he had conferred with the manufacturers and users of counting machines and slot machines, and does not want a coin that would interfere with these machines, and did not propose to make a coin that would interfere with them in any way. I am ready to accept the gentleman's amendment. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have no doubt of the disposition of these officers, but these same officers would not, of course, always remain in office.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota offer an amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will, if the gentleman in charge of the bill does not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a Union Calendar bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reminds the Chair that this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I started to make that request, and was interrupted. I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would be very glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman considered the change of the 1-cent piece, and whether the change of composition will necessarily mean a change of diameter?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It will make no change whatever in the size of the penny. It changes the composition only. It will then have the same composition and appearance as the 5-cent piece.

Mr. TILSON. It will go into the same slot machine and counting device as at present?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I so understand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 2, line 2, by inserting after the word "Treasury" the following: "but the diameter of neither of the said coins shall be identical with the diameter of any other United States coin in common use."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. What necessity is there for half-cent pieces?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that it was the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury that there was a very great demand for it. This bill was originally introduced for the 3-cent piece only, but after conference with the Secretary of the Treasury he recommended, as will be seen by the printed report, that it should include the half-cent piece.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it for the department stores that you want it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is for the use of the people. It is believed that with a half-cent piece the people would get the benefit. The half cent now goes to the grocer and merchant in making change, and if there is a half-cent piece the people will get the benefit in making change.

Mr. AUSTIN. Have you considered the question of putting "In God we trust" on these new coins?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am in favor of it, but we have not included it, because these coins never had this motto on them.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, strike out, after the word "piece," the following: "shall have one perforation in the center, and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended House bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This is the end of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may be able to make as much progress as possible with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention to bring up the legislative bill the first thing?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina] informs me that he will move to take it up at 11 o'clock. Of course, something unforeseen may occur, but that is his intention.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Reserving the right to object, there is an item in the bill in which many Members are interested who might not be here at 11 o'clock, thinking that the House was going to meet at 12 o'clock. I want to know whether that item will be taken up before 12 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not tell the gentleman that, as I am not in charge of the bill, and it happens that I shall be in the chair, so that I shall have no control over the matter.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there will be any trouble about it. Besides, it is easy enough to make a point of no quorum and notify everybody.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FIFTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE, ETC.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 234, making provision for the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] moves to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the Governments of the commercial nations of the world an invitation to be represented officially at the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, to be held in Boston, Mass., September 24 to 28, 1912.

That for the necessary expenses of the meeting in the United States of the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, including a tour by the foreign delegates of the principal commercial, industrial, agricultural, and social centers of the United States, for the purpose of acquainting them with our institutions and enterprises, $50,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated.

That the Secretary of State is hereby requested to ask the Governments of the commercial nations of the world to notify the leading business organizations of their respective countries of this action by the Congress of the United States of America and suggest their cooperation.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] demands a second.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York 20 minutes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution provides in substance that the President of the United States be authorized to extend invitation to the governments of the commercial nations of the world to send delegates to the meeting of the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, to be held in Boston, September 24 to 28, 1912. It further provides an appropriation of $50,000, which is to be expended in the transportation of the delegates from the foreign chambers of commerce, after the close of the Boston meeting, to certain of the commercial and industrial centers of the United States to which they have already been invited.

It is the purpose of this resolution to give a national character, by invitation of the Government, to this meeting in September, which is in itself a national event. This Congress of International Chambers of Commerce has already held four meetings. Two years ago the meeting was in London. It was proposed by the American delegation there that the next meeting should be held in this country.

The importance of this meeting of this congress of international commercial bodies can not be overestimated. Sixty-two commercial bodies in our principal cities have already passed resolutions favoring the passage of this resolution. Thirty-four governors of States have already accepted invitations to act as members of the American honorary committee, and are themselves to serve on the delegations from their respective States to this meeting to be held next September. I will add at the conclusion of my remarks a list of these chambers of commerce and these governors. The entire expense of the meeting in Boston are to be borne by the citizens of that city. Both the foreign delegates and those from this country are to be entertained there. A sum of money is being raised in Boston, between $75,000 and $100,000, and with that money the meeting itself is to be run. It is to the great advantage of our country that these representative business men shall have an opportunity to see America and to meet the principal commercial people in our large cities and properly realize the great resources of our country.

Appreciating this benefit, the commercial organizations from the Atlantic to the Pacific have extended invitations to these delegates to visit them. When the delegates are in these cities they will, of course, be the guests of the local organizations, and will be entertained there as they are to be entertained in Boston, by the local citizens. This appropriation is asked to pay the transportation between these cities. Not one cent of this appropriation is expected to be spent within the city of Boston or the State of Massachusetts, and its only purpose is to allow an opportunity for these delegates to see the whole of our country. We are to open up in a few years the Panama Canal, and the great industrial opportunities of the South are confronting this country. This proposes to make a particular effort to obtain from the South American Republics large representations of their commercial men, and it is hoped that by sending these delegates through our country we can not only encourage the friendly feeling between the United States and those various countries who are sending their men to us, but that we can also greatly extend our trade and show to these delegates the facilities we have for supplying the demand for various commodities in their own home markets.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. PETERS. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the number of delegates from the foreign countries that will attend this convention?

Mr. PETERS. About 500.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And this appropriation is to pay for the expenses of the transportation of these delegates?

Mr. PETERS. Purely for the transportation of these delegates. It is particularly essential to have an invitation given because they are officials, they have an official relation with the Government they represent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would suggest that the gentleman reserve the balance of his time to answer the watchdog of the Treasury who is to follow him.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PETERS. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman think that in the matter of transportation and entertainment to be given these delegates of the various trades from foreign countries that the cities where they are to visit could very well take care of the transportation without calling upon the Treasury?

Mr. PETERS. I think that would be asking too much of the local bodies. The meeting is an international meeting, and local bodies are doing all of the local entertainment; we are anxious, and the committee is anxious to send these delegates from Boston out through to the Pacific coast if possible. Invitations have been extended farther west than Chicago, and it is for this transportation that it is proposed to ask the assistance of the central Government.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Why should the Treasury of the United States be called upon to pay for the transportation of delegates to an international congress to the various cities throughout the country?

Mr. PETERS. Because it is an international event; it is an official event; and because the local bodies are straining themselves to take care and provide for the entertainment of the visitors.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Were the invitations issued before there was any official recognition? Does not the resolution carry the recognition?

Mr. PETERS. Yes; but this is the first official recognition of it. The invitation from this country had to be tendered at the meeting in London two years ago, when Congress was not in session.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and from it I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has consumed seven minutes, and the gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure in connection with this request, coming from the Boston Chamber of Commerce, to tell this House that this particular chamber recently dealt with this House in a way which was not narrow, not niggardly, and not mean. I had the pleasure of being a member of a special committee of three which sat in Boston during the fall, and at that time the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Boston put at our disposal for 10 days 2 large rooms and a clerical staff, for which they refused to receive any compensation. It is a pleasure on this floor to acknowledge the courtesy of the Boston Chamber of Commerce to this House.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is to pay, on behalf of the United States Government, just what other Governments have for years paid for the same purpose, neither more nor less, except this; that whereas Great Britain for this express purpose pays $400,000 a year, we are called upon to pay less than one of our cities pays—the extreme total of $50,000.

The gentlemen who will come hither are not private merchants or manufacturers engaged upon their personal business. They are official members of official bodies known to and recognized by every Government on the Continent of Europe, and they come in behalf not of themselves but of the nations of which they are citizens.

The chambers of commerce abroad are on a strictly official basis; not like our own bodies, voluntary organizations. It is my belief, sir, as a manufacturer and business man, that this investment will be returned many times over, and that it is necessary, unless we are to appear before the nations of the world as unwilling to do for their official bodies what they have cheerfully heretofore done for us.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to use any of his time?

Mr. PETERS. If no one desires to oppose the resolution, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not had an opportunity; the gentleman has been occupying all the time. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution. It comes with poor grace from representatives of great commercial bodies in the various cities of the country to come begging Congress for what they call a mere pittance in order to advertise their businesses and enterprises to their competitors from abroad. I know of no objection to the Government extending an official invitation to these delegates from other countries to come and participate in an international convention in this country. I should not object to the paying out of the Federal Treasury of the expenses of public officials who might properly participate in such a conference and represent officially the Government of the United States. But that is not what is proposed here. This is an innovation. I know of but one other instance in which traveling expenses of visiting delegations to this country were paid from the Treasury—that was at the time of the Interparliamentary Union, which held its convention in this country, and so many Members of Congress desired to participate and had shared the hospitality of other countries that they felt unable to resist the temptation to pay out of the public funds for the entertainment of men occupying similar positions to those occupied by themselves here.

Why should the Congress pay the traveling expenses of these visitors about the country in order that its natural resources, its beauties, its picturesqueness, and the enterprise of its people might be shown to persons coming from other countries to this particular convention? There is to be an International Congress of Hygiene and Demography in this country within a very short time. The delegates will represent a very important phase of public service throughout the world. Why should we not provide funds to enable them to travel about the country and to see its wonderful enterprise and development? There is now being held in this city the Ninth International Conference of the Red Cross, comprised of persons engaged entirely in philanthropic work, not engaged in enterprises for their own benefit, not coming to this country to ascertain whether they can develop and improve their own businesses so as to outdo American manufacturers in their own home market, but coming here in order to develop and to promote projects which have for their purpose the amelioration of suffering wherever it may be found throughout the civilized world. Yet nobody suggests that they be sent about the country at the expense of the Federal Government that they may have better opportunities to be informed as to the conditions under which certain catastrophes might happen, resulting in an appeal to the generosity of the peoples of the world under the peculiar conditions arising from great disasters. Yet the great business interests of the country, the men who are obtaining most of the advantage from legislation——

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment—the men who are enriching themselves at the expense of all the people under our very generous tariff laws, they are not willing to contribute $50,000 so that these delegates may be carried about the country and see what the American manufacturers are doing. They are willing to entertain these delegates when they arrive in their cities, but they ask that the Public Treasury be imposed upon to defray the traveling expenses. If 50 of the great cities of this country interested in these interprises contributed $2,000, or only $1,000, apiece, they would readily meet these expenses.

Twenty-five important commercial centers of the country, if they would contribute $2,000 apiece, would meet this proposed expenditure; but it has become so customary to look upon the Federal Government as the only thing undefended in the United States, the one place for which no one raises a protecting hand——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment—that there is an overflowing Treasury to which everybody should apply, into which everybody should dip to help along their particular pet enterprises, that these eminent gentlemen, members of the commercial bodies of the country, are appealing to Congress for this appropriation of $50,000. Shame on the business interests of America that they should put themselves in the attitude of coming as supplicants to the Federal Treasury in order that they may transport about the country the representatives of commercial life of the other civilized nations. Now I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

Mr. RODDENBERY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. To whom does the gentleman think this $50,000 is to be paid? The resolution does not state.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I have not thought anything about it. I have examined the joint resolution and wondered by whom the money would be disbursed, but as I hope it will not be disbursed at all, I was not so much interested in that phase of the matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, if he contends that these commercial cities that entertain these commercial bodies should pay for the entertainment, would not he be justified, when the brother of an emperor or a king comes here, in asking that the citizens of Murray Hill, who alone entertain them, should pay for that entertainment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the question is too involved to determine at this time. If Murray Hill, N. J., or Murray Hill, N. Y., determines to entertain the brother of an emporer or a king and they can obtain the consent of the gentleman to be entertained, I have no doubt they will furnish the money to do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, they did not, however.

Mr. PETERS. In reply to the——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman to ask a question, but not to reply to anything.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to make a statement, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield for a statement in my time.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to correct a statement——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not permit the gentleman to correct my statement in my time.

Mr. PETERS. Well, to answer a question of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can do that in his own time. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. As the gentleman and myself are going to vote against the payment of this $50,000 I am anxious to ascertain against whom we are to vote. I would rather like to press the gentleman to tell us where and to whom this money is to be paid. If we are to appropriate Government money to be disbursed we should know to whom it is to be paid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he inquire from those who are proposing this legislation for that information, because I am not responsible for it. Mr. Speaker, think of the city of New York and its chamber of commerce, representing the wealth, business, and prosperity of that great metropolis expecting the Federal Government to pay for the transportation of 500 delegates from Boston to New York in order that they may be entertained. Think of the Board of Trade of Chicago, anxious to have the representatives of these business enterprises of Europe and South America come to their city to see the progress it has made in business and manufactures and to extend its hospitality to them, asking the Federal Government to pay their expenses to Chicago. I would sooner guarantee their expenses back from most of the places to the seaport than to pay to take them to some of those communities which would depend upon the Federal Government for such expenses.

Mr. Speaker, this is an innovation. We can not refuse to do for the delegates of every congress of an international character assembling in the United States under the official invitation whatever is done for these delegates. It is best that the Congress should commence now with the business interests of this country and have a precedent established that those who are interested in bringing such enterprises to this country must be willing and ready to pay the expenses incident thereto.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think that if they are expecting Congress to render this aid that they ought to consult Congress before calling a meeting of these boards of trade, and so forth?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They probably would have done so if, as I have already stated, it had not been the practice to look upon the Federal Government as the only unprotected Treasury in the United States. How much time have I used, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 12 minutes, and has 8 minutes remaining.

M. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. PETERS. I yield four minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], would have the Members of the House believe that the foreign chambers of commerce interested in the movement in behalf of the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce, to be held in the United States, are actuated solely by a desire to participate in a junket. And for his particular benefit, and the benefit of the Members of the House who have not had the opportunity to consider the proposal, I desire to direct attention to the pamphlet issued by the Boston Chamber of Commerce and containing a brief summary of the aims and objects of the International Congress.

It declares that the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Industrial and Commercial Associations is an organization representing the business men of the entire world. The delegates to the Congress are of two classes: First, the official delegates designated to attend the congress by the Governments of the leading commercial nations; second, the delegates appointed by the leading business organizations of the world who are affiliated with the congress. The purpose of the congress is to facilitate the commercial intercourse of nations and to promote cordial relationship between them. It strives to secure harmony of action on all international questions affecting commerce and trade by enlisting the cooperation of the various nations to obtain uniform laws with reference to commercial matters. To this end it considers at its biennial sessions questions of international scope affecting business and business relations. The recommendations adopted by vote of the delegates are carried out by a permanent committee, the headquarters of which are at Brussels, and which keeps in touch with the constituent organizations and the Governments of all countries.

The First International Congress of Chambers of Commerce was held at Liege, Belgium, in 1905. This meeting resulted in the appointment of a permanent committee and the decision to hold these congresses every two years. The second congress was held at Milan, Italy, in 1906; the third congress at Prague, Austria, in 1908; and the fourth congress was held in London, England, in 1910. At these congresses the organization was perfected, rules adopted, a permanent committee elected, and special committees appointed.

These congresses have attained a notable place in the business life of Europe. In America, sometimes, it is not appreciated that the chambers of commerce in many European countries are almost governmental in character. The relations between the leading commercial organizations of Europe which are included in the international congress and the various European Governments have always been of an extremely cordial nature. The interest taken in the work of the congress by business men of highest standing of various nationalities, together with the official recognition vouchsafed by the Governments of the various countries, has made possible the very tangible results already achieved. The intangible results in the promotion of international commercial good will are practically incalculable.

The first congress enjoyed the patronage of the Belgian secretary of state for foreign affairs and minister of industry and labor. The second congress was held under the patronage of His Majesty the King of Italy, while the honorary presidents were the Italian ministers of foreign affairs and of industry and commerce. The third congress was opened in person by its honorary president, His Imperial Highness the Archduke Charles Francis Joseph. The fourth congress in London was opened by the Rt. Hon. Sydney Buxton, M. P., the president of the board of trade, and had as an honorary vice president, Prime Minister Asquith, of England. Associated with the congress were the English governmental and commercial leaders.

With England and Germany to-day it is a life and death struggle for commercial supremacy, as their industries could not survive without export trade.

That a real need for foreign markets is here now is evidenced by the figures of our trade with the world as compiled by the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor.

These statistics show that the foreign commerce record of the United States for the calendar year 1911, so far as relates to total imports and exports, shows imports $1,532,931,861, a larger total than in any year except 1910, which showed $1,562,904,151 as the value of imports. The exports of the calendar year 1911 were valued at $2,092,375,141, a larger total than in any preceding year, and considerably larger than the total of $1,923,426,205 shown by 1907, the former high-record year in exports. The excess of exports over imports in the calendar year just ended was $559,441,280, a larger excess of exports than in any year since 1908, when the total was $636,000,000, while that of 1900 was $649,000,000.

These figures demand that foreign trade be intelligently and systematically developed, to the end that we shall have entry to the markets of the world in consonance with the increasing dependence of our industries upon foreign markets.

The time has passed when we can safely regard foreign markets as dumping grounds for surplus products during periods of business depression at home.

The foreign market should be regarded in its true light—it is the primary market of the future, whose requirements and customs must be understood and complied with to secure results.

The same degree of business sagacity and wisdom that has made industries a success at home is required even in a larger degree abroad where the keenest of competition obtains.

When we consider that 10 years ago there were few well-organized and effective commercial bodies in the United States and that to-day there are nearly 6,000, we have some idea of the interest taken generally in the country in the proposition under consideration.

The membership is recruited from the progressive business men of the country, and who are alive to the needs of the hour and desirous of aiding in the development of our resources, which are the life of this Nation.

The serious problem involved by our unfortunate position from a maritime standpoint is apparent to every man. A war between England and Germany to-morrow would be productive of panic in this country, as we depend almost wholly upon these nations for the handling of our commerce, which to-day consists largely of manufactured goods.

How important it is can be gleaned from comparison of the import and export trade with our South American neighbors. In the year ending June 30, 1911, the total value of the principal articles of import from Latin America into the United States were but $369,796,530, while the principal articles of export from the United States to Latin America for the same period were $270,663,222.

But of these imports and exports more than $100,000,000 represented manufactured goods, the work upon which furnished employment for a three months' term at least annually to many of our industries, and the importance of which must be self-evident to every Member of the House.

We can not bring our country, with its varied industries, to every foreign power we transact business with, but we can bring the leading representatives of foreign trade to our country and in this great international congress provide means for the material increase of our foreign trade, insure permanence of employment to thousands of employees, and that will largely aid the prosperity of our country and the happiness of our people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] has six minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] eight minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have said something in the past of the great enterprise of the State of California. I want to now emphasize my appreciation of the wonderful State on the Pacific coast. I observe by the hearings which were had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs that gentlemen who represented the State of California were very anxious that a commercial congress should visit the Pacific coast, and I observed the willingness whereby they would take these delegates from one end of the State to the other free of cost, transport them to the different industrial cities in that great State, that they might see what they had out there, and I have contrasted that with the action of the city of Boston, on the east, that has, I think, shown its willingness to take this great commercial congress, but at the same time appear upon this floor and ask that $50,000 be appropriated from the National Treasury to help them do so. And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in all this we are reminded of the fact that the great city of Boston on the east needs this help from the National Treasury to look after this commercial congress; and, of course, we ought to give it to them. I will guarantee that if this great commercial congress will come to the city of Chicago, in my own State, there will be no trouble in entertaining it when it gets there and, if necessary, they would be willing to help pay the expenses of this commercial congress in the city of Boston.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. In just a minute. The enterprise that has been displayed in the past by the city of New York, the city of Chicago, the city of St. Louis, the cities of San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal., would never permit those cities to come to this Congress and ask that $50,000 be taken out of the Treasury to help to entertain the congress that Boston wants to be held in their city in September.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to say that the citizens of Boston are paying the entire expense of the congress and are raising between $75,000 and $100,000 to do so. They wish to give the citizens of Chicago and other cities an opportunity to show the delegates their cities. Boston itself does not wish this appropriation—not a cent will be spent there; it is purely for transportation expenses. Boston provides national hospitality for the congress; it should not be called upon to pay the delegates' expenses in traveling to Chicago and to the other cities which have extended invitations to them.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I suppose the city of Boston is fully capable of looking after itself. I suggest that if Boston is not able to take care of this great commercial congress and look after it properly, you should change this resolution and simply invite the commercial congress to meet in the city of Chicago, and then I am satisfied that all the money that is necessary will be immediately raised without coming to this Congress and asking that $50,000 be appropriated out of the National Treasury. I am surprised that the great city of Boston, with all its commercial enterprises, with all its factories and diversified industries that we have heard so much boasting about throughout the country in the last few years, should have its Representatives come to this Congress and ask $50,000 out of the Treasury because they want the President to invite delegates to a national commercial congress to meet in the city of Boston. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has three minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] has six minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] that he perhaps misunderstands the reason why the export trade of the United States with the South American countries is not greater than it is. It is not because representatives of business enterprises in South America have not been in this country, but it is because of the lack of shipping facilities from this country to South America. If, instead of frittering away years of time here in attempts to provide special privileges in the way of subsidies for some ships, some intelligent legislation had been enacted so that American ships could take their former place in the oversea trade, the exports from this country to the South American countries would have largely increased over what they are at present.

The fact can not be denied—I have looked through the report on this bill carefully, and it contains a large number of communications from various commercial bodies throughout the United States—that the opinion is prevalent that those gentlemen who are members of these associations will be benefited because of the development in the trade, the enlargement of the business in which they are engaged, by the tour which it is proposed shall be taken by these delegates.

If the American manufacturers and the American business men had the enterprise they are supposed to have and were willing to pay for the advantages and opportunities to extend the trade of America, instead of having the cost placed upon those who are not participants in the profits to be derived, there would be little complaint about the failure to extend the export trade and little difficulty about extending it as much as it could reasonably be extended. [Applause.]

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not yield. I am informed that the boards of trade and chambers of commerce throughout the United States are so numerous that if they would contribute $10 each to the fund they could easily raise the requisite amount of money.

Only a short time ago, within a few weeks, there was a gathering in this city to organize a national chamber of commerce. Why not let it do something practical now? Let it finance the proposed tour of these delegates.

One other thing. This international congress can rival in many respects those that have taken place in other countries. True, it may not be possible for this commercial congress to be opened by "His Imperial Highness," or "His Royal Highness," or the brother of the Emperor, but good average American citizens who have been honored and complimented by their fellow citizens by being placed in important official positions, and who properly have control of such activities, will very gladly and properly participate in these exercises, and although they may lack the distinguishing and confusing titles that have been read by the gentleman from Massachusetts for our enlightenment and confusion. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the matters involved in this resolution are broader than the gentleman from New York has presented to the House. Under the resolution, and as the matter now stands, the people of Boston have fixed the time and the place for holding this convention, and there are to be in attendance 500 or more delegates from foreign countries, coming to the United States to meet at Boston for the purpose of consultation and advice and seeing what they can in this country.

There is no provision beyond that. The resolution does not go any further than that. Now, with 500 delegates from foreign countries, members of the chambers of commerce, members of commercial clubs, and members of industrial associations, visiting this country in that way, ought not this Government as a Government say to these men who have come from such a distance: "We have the grandest country on earth in natural resources and in manufacturing facilities, and we want your trade. We want you to become acquainted with the United States, and when you get through with Boston, the Chamber of Commerce at New York, and then the Chamber of Commerce at Chicago, and then the Chamber of Commerce at Kansas City will invite you? And after that the Chambers of Commerce at San Francisco and at Sacramento, Cal., or the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg., will invite you, and show you what they have?" These delegates should see the resources of the United States, and to do so they must go over the whole country. [Applause.]

Mr. Bunker, of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, as part of my remarks, I submit his statement there made when this bill was being considered by your committee, which is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM M. BUNKER, REPRESENTING THE SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. BUNKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the name of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce I thank you for the chance to indorse the resolutions providing for the proper and profitable entertainment of the foreign delegates to the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, to be held in Boston September next.

We of the Pacific coast felicitate Boston and our common country on an occasion destined to stimulate trade and promote international thought. International thought is the goal of goals of the near future. This though Americans are still groping for national thought. Of sectional thought we have enough and to spare. Through international thought we may achieve a foreign trade success worthy of the country. Unless we think internationally we will continue to lag in the world race for foreign trade.

With the Panama Canal nearing completion, we of San Francisco, we of California—yes, we of the Pacific coast—are trying to measure up to approaching advantages and responsibilities. We are trying to think on international lines.

We have already discarded sectional feeling. We have already learned to think nationally. We have already learned that superior climates and superior soils and manifest destiny do not automatically produce prosperity. Successful as we are, we of the coast are not as successful as we should be. And so we seek commercial attrition. The coming of commercial and industrial men, and picked men at that, from all parts of the world looks good to us.

In Great Britain and Germany the commercial organizations work with the Government for foreign trade. These organizations are broadly representative and thoroughly democratic. Their success is due to efficiency and elasticity. The constituent members of the central and controlling organization in Great Britain are British chambers of commerce. The link that should connect American commercial organizations with the Government has yet to be forged. As a condition precedent our commercial organizations must be educated and inspired.

The foreign delegates to the international congress will assist in this campaign of education. Their very presence in this country will suggest a new commercial movement. Therefore we ask that they be taken north, south, east, and west and brought into close contact with business men. We are not proposing a showy and purposeless junket. We are pointing to an opportunity to awaken and electrify the American business world. We want American organizations in all parts of the United States to learn the secret of an efficiency that has enabled other countries to win foreign trade, especially the trade of Latin America. We want our business men to learn through personal contact and personal questioning the thousand and one essentials that can only be learned in this way.

Students of trade currents are especially interested in these resolutions, because they know that chambers of commerce and similar organizations want to prepare for the changes in domestic as well as foreign trade and anticipate the opening of the Panama Canal. These organizations are beginning to sense the situation. According to the Bureau of Manufactures, Department of Commerce and Labor, there are over 5,000 strictly commercial and industrial organizations in this country, with a membership of over 500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. I am a friend to San Francisco, and I know how enthusiastic the business people are in San Francisco, and of course you want these delegates from foreign countries to visit San Francisco and see the wonders of California and the Pacific coast.

Mr. BUNKER. We are thinking nationally and trying to think internationally.

The CHAIRMAN. You want them to visit you, do you not?

Mr. BUNKER. We want them to visit the Pacific coast; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And if they agree to come you will pay all expenses?

Mr. BUNKER. And when they come there we will take them around, up and down the State, with its 1,200 miles of seacoast and nearly 400 miles——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). And the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco will pay the expenses?

Mr. BUNKER. We will pay the expenses and take care of them in California, and the other Pacific Coast States will follow the same plan.

Mr. CURLEY. The export trade of the United States in the last fiscal year was in the vicinity of $3,000,000,000. If our industries are to expand, they can only expand as a consequence of the increase of our export trade, and affairs of this character will assist in that expansion.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SHARP. Won't the practical effect of this trip of these foreign agents to our cities result that instead of our own great concerns sending to them its traveling men all over the world to get orders, will it not bring the prospective purchasers to our own doors and in that way help our commercial expansion?

Mr. FLOOD. What will become of our commercial travelers, then?

Mr. SHARP. We will have more of them.

Mr. BUNKER. I think that would be one of the results. I think we may assume that, because of the commercial experiences we have had.

* * * * * * * *

I think you will agree with me, gentlemen, that an American awakening is in order.

And so we say, we of the Pacific coast, and especially we of the exposition city, send the delegates along and we will give them a characteristic welcome. We want to be looked over and criticized and contrasted. And yet through a change common to communities as well as to individuals we may be in a mood to accept commendation.

We want to show our foreign friends the matchless site of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. We want them to glimpse the high ideals of that enterprise. We want them to realize that the exposition will mirror the splendors and superiorities of modern progress.

Gentlemen of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for the reasons that have been advanced, for equally convincing reasons that will suggest themselves to you, we ask that you advocate the adoption of these resolutions, and thus give the business of the country a friendly and practical impulse.

The chambers of commerce and other commercial and industrial organizations and bodies of California are urging the passing of this resolution. I hope it will pass. We want foreign trade for our surplus products. This is a good way to inform the outside world what we have and its superior quality. This is a national and not a local matter. We should not be small on questions that affect the national growth and welfare. If you want to get people interested, you must show them, and here is a great opportunity, and it should be accepted. The way to know what we have is to see it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] has four minutes remaining.

Mr. PETERS. I yield one minute to my colleague [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is no difference of opinion on this floor as to the desirability of extending our foreign trade. Here is a practical proposition for that purpose, and for that purpose solely. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] represented their own constituents in opposing this appropriation, there would be some force in it; but the Merchants' Association of New York and the Commerce Association of Chicago have both advocated and are advocating the passage of this resolution and the making of this appropriation.

Now, if it were simply a question of these delegates coming to Boston, holding a convention there, and then getting on board ship and returning to Europe, neither the Boston Chamber of Commerce nor anyone else would be here asking for an appropriation; but when they have seen what there is to be seen in Boston and vicinity, the Boston people are public spirited enough to want them to go on and see the rest of the country and get the benefit which they may obtain by visiting New York and Chicago and San Francisco and the other points where they can get real information about the great industries of this country.

Mr. PETERS. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I take it that every city with a commercial organization is willing to pay the expenses incident to the entertainment of delegates from abroad when they visit that city, but there is the practical difficulty that unless the delegates visiting from abroad travel under the control and direction of some Government official there is no way by which they can be taken from one place to another in an orderly manner; and if they do travel under the direction of Government officials, then the Government should pay the ordinary traveling expenses.

With our foreign trade increasing as it has recently increased, with our foreign exports of manufactures increasing, we ought to be willing to expend a little sum of money in order that these delegates from abroad may see, not merely Boston, on the Atlantic coast; not merely New York, on the Atlantic coast, but the great interior of our country, where the heavy business is done; and I do not believe that the people who pay the taxes ought to be deprived of the privilege of having these foreign delegates visit all parts of the country and all the people in the country who pay the taxes.

This is not a new proposition, as has been suggested by some gentlemen. We have done this several times before with different foreign visitors, and it is to our interest that when these visitors come to Boston, or before they come to Boston, the State Department shall have the opportunity to lay out a program for them throughout the United States, where these delegates may visit different commercial cities and have their local expenses paid by the local organizations, but do it in an orderly way, passing through Boston and New York, through Cincinnati and Chicago, Minneapolis and Kansas City, and points farther West, and through the southern portion of the country. I know of no other way by which it can be arranged except by the method of having the State Department, or the other Government officials who will have charge of it, arrange a program and act in cooperation with the commercial bodies of the different cities.

When the delegates see this great country and make acquaintances and friends here it will greatly aid us, not merely in selling our goods abroad, but it will aid us in purchasing those goods which we buy abroad. In the interest of the country, in my judgment, the resolution ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to modify my original motion, and ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment, on page 2, line 8, which amendment is in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. He asks unanimous consent to modify his motion.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent to modify my motion.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know in what manner the gentleman proposes to modify his motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I reserve the right to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 8, by inserting the words "to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman be willing further to modify his request so that instead of "$50,000" it be "$50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," and also to modify his resolution "that none of this appropriation should be expended except for the purpose of transportation"? The resolution now reads:

That for the necessary expenses of the meeting—

In Boston; that is what it means when you say "in the United States."

Mr. MANN. The Government officials would have to be paid.

Mr. PETERS. It is very difficult for me to determine the meaning of so long and complicated an amendment as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, but under a motion to suspend the rules we are absolutely denied the right of offering amendments, and unless this comes in by unanimous consent it can not come in at all.

Mr. PETERS. I have offered an amendment which I think meets the objection that the gentleman originally made, and I can not offhand pass on the meaning or effect of so long an amendment as the gentleman proposes to offer to the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. It merely restricts it to the transportation expenses. I heard the minority leader make the same criticism on an appropriation of a certain amount without a reservation the other day, that without the restriction the entire amount would be expended. I am opposed to the resolution, whether amended or not amended, but would like to make it the least objectionable possible.

Mr. PETERS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I confess that I have been attending a committee meeting and am not familiar with what the proposition is except that I have caught it since I came in. I think I know what it is in a general way, but I would like to know if the expenditure of this money is safeguarded so that the expenditure may not be covered up by a secret certificate in the Treasury. If it is not, I shall object.

Mr. MANN. It does not come under that provision.

Mr. HAMLIN. Neither did the money appropriated for the Lake Champlain celebration, but it was covered in that way.

Mr. MANN. It was erroneously covered that way.

Mr. PETERS. This is safeguarded; the Secretary of State is responsible for the expenditure of the money.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modification proposed by the gentleman from Georgia and accepted by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "dollars," insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary to use for transportation only."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the modifications that have been stated.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PETERS demanded a division.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER. On this question, the ayes are 59, and the noes are 41. Two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the House refuses to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that will not apply to the vote already taken which has been announced.

Mr. PETERS. I will withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. And I make the point of no quorum on the vote.

The SPEAKER. What is the point the gentleman from Illinois makes?

Mr. MANN. That there is no quorum and was no quorum when the vote was taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker had already announced the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will not contend that in announcing the vote the Speaker has to take cognizance of whether there was a quorum present?

Mr. MANN. Not at all, but it is the invariable practice that where a point of no quorum is made it vacates the vote.

The SPEAKER. The point that no quorum is present has been withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. But I renewed it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. I did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-nine Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. MANN. But there is an automatic call of the House on the vote.

Mr. HAY. The Speaker had announced the vote.

Mr. MANN. The Chair always announces the vote before a point of no quorum is made. No other business was transacted before the gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of no quorum, and where a point of no quorum is made the rule provides for an automatic vote.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides for an automatic call of the House when a vote is being taken.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, under the rule the point of no quorum can be made at any time before any other business is transacted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, no one has ever made the point of no quorum that I know of before the announcement of the vote. It was always made after the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman, before he begins reading authorities, to allow the Chair to state this situation as it is. A standing vote had been taken, and the Chair had announced the vote, and announced that two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative the motion to suspend the rules was lost, and had started to recognize the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Massachusetts was on his feet addressing the Chair; and this is the rule. I read from page 375 of the Manual, paragraph 756.

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present, and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn there shall be a call of the House.

That is the rule providing for an automatic call of the House on a question. That is precisely what took place. A quorum failed to vote. I made the point of order that no quorum was present, and objected for that reason. The gentleman from Massachusetts had made the point immediately upon the announcement of the vote that a quorum was not present. Jefferson's Manual provides—although I can not lay my hand on it just now—that a point of no quorum can be made on a vote at any time before any further business is transacted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Illinois think that after a vote is announced, 59 for and 41 against, and an announcement by the Speaker that two-thirds having failed to vote for the motion, that it is lost—is not that transaction closed, and is not the announcement that it is lost business within the meaning of the rule? And is not the time immediately after the vote is announced the time to make the point of no quorum, if made at all?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of no quorum immediately after the announcement of the vote. The Speaker has been in the House many years, and knows that the point of no quorum is always made by the defeated side; and until there is an announcement no one can know which the defeated side is.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the present occupant of the chair as to the decisions upon that question coincide very largely with the statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The Chair announced the vote, 59 in the affirmative to 41 in the negative, and the Chair always stops long enough to give any Member that has any objection to the announcement which he knows is coming, to take any action.

Mr. MANN. On this question the gentleman from Massachusetts was on his feet—I was observing him—endeavoring to make a point of no quorum while the Chair was making the announcement.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, Mr. Speaker, my colleague will remember that he did not make the point of order until after the announcement of the vote.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.), in pursuance to the order heretofore made, the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, May 7, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $13 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $14 per month; 1½ years, $14.50 per month; 2 years, $15 per month; 2½ years, $15.50 per month; 3 years or over, $16 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $21 per month; 6 months, $22.50 per month; 1 year, $24 per month; 1½ years, $27 per month; 2 years or over, $30 per month. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to length of service or age.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom, shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

"All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension, under any other general or special law, than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

"SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension, under this act, except in applications for original pension by persons who have not heretofore received a pension.

"SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall include any person who served during the late Civil War, or in the War with Mexico, and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as each application for pension under this act is adjudicated, to cause to be kept a record showing the name and length of service of each claimant, the monthly rate of payment granted to or received by him, and the county and State of his residence; and shall at the end of the fiscal year 1914 tabulate the record so obtained by States and counties, and shall furnish certified copies thereof upon demand and the payment of such fee therefor as is provided by law for certified copies of records in the executive departments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico."

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOHN A. M. ADAIR,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it quite proper, before adopting the report, that I should make a statement to the Senate indicating what has been done by the conferees.

The annual increase to the pension appropriation bill, under H. R. No. 1, as it passed the House, was $75,651,548.

The annual increase to the pension appropriation bill under the Senate amendment to the House bill was $24,112,578.

The average increase per year for five years under the House bill was approximately $56,500,000.

The average increase per year for five years under the Senate amendment was approximately $20,400,000.

The conference committee increased the Senate amendment by $1,685,000, making the annual additional cost, approximately, $25,798,000, or an annual average increase for each year for five years of $22,000,000.

It is probable that Senators desire at this time to know exactly what the appropriation bill will have to carry in additional amounts to meet the new provisions of the pension law. After the conferees had agreed, I wrote to the Commissioner of Pensions to obtain new figures upon the estimated cost of this bill as modified by them for the five ensuing years, giving the amounts of additional cost each year. I will ask that the letter may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, May 6, 1912.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your personal request of this date relative to the cost of the bill H. R. 1, as agreed to by the conferees (entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, solders and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico"), I have the honor to advise you that the approximate increase in the annual value of the pension roll thereunder as estimated by this bureau is $25,797,702. The number of beneficiaries is estimated at 420,965, and the average annual increase per pensioner is $61.28. The approximate increase in disbursements for pensions under this bill is estimated as follows:

First year	$12,000,000
Second year	35,000,000
Third year	23,000,000
Fourth year	21,000,000
Fifth year	19,000,000

The average increase per year for the first five years is $22,000,000.

Very respectfully,

J. L. DAVENPORT, Commissioner.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I submit a table herewith showing the amount of pension which would be received by the survivors at the several ages and for the several lengths of service during the war. Where any column in this table contains two numbers, the lower number is the measure of pension which the soldier would receive under the Senate amendment, and the upper number is the amount he will receive under the conference agreement. I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows:

Age.	90 days.	6 months.	1 year.	1½ years.	2 years.	2½ years.	3 years.
62	$13.00	$13.50	$14.00	$14.50	$15.00	$15.50	$16.00
66	15.00	15.50	16.00	16.50	17.00	18.00 / 17.50	19.00 / 18.00
70	18.00	19.00	20.00	21.50 / 21.00	23.00 / 22.00	24.00 / 23.00	25.00 / 24.00
75	21.00	22.50	24.00	27.00 / 25.50	30.00 / 27.00	30.00 / 28.50	30.00 / 30.00

Mr. MCCUMBER. A glance at the table will show that the only changes made by the conferees were changes that involved the amounts of pensions of those of advanced years or of longer service. I will give to the Senate at this time the increases. There were no increases whatever to those between 62 and 66 years of age. There were no changes in the amounts that would be received by the soldier who had attained the age of 66 years and who had served less than two and one-half years. Under the Senate amendment the soldier 66 years of age who had two and a half years of service would receive $17.50 a month. The conferees increased this 50 cents a month, making it $18. The soldier of the same age who had served three years under the Senate amendment would receive $18 per month and under the conference report $19 per month, or an increase of $1 per month. The soldier who had reached the age of 70 years and who had served one and a half years under the Senate amendment would receive $21 per month; under the conference report he would receive $21.50 per month, or an increase of 50 cents. On two years' service, under the Senate bill, he would receive $22 per month; under the conference report, $23 per month, or an increase of $1 per month.

Under the Senate amendment he would receive for two and one-half years' service $23 per month; under the conference report $24 per month, or an increase of $1 per month. For three years' service and over, under the Senate amendment, he would receive $24 per month; under the conference report $25 per month, or an increase of $1 per month. The soldier who has attained the age of 75 years, and who has had one and one-half years' service, under the Senate amendment would be entitled to receive $25.50 per month; under the conference report for one and one-half years' service he would receive $27 per month, or an increase of $1.50 per month. For two years' service, under the Senate amendment, he would receive $27 per month; under the conference report $30 per month. The $30 per month, Mr. President, is the greatest amount that is allowed any soldier, and therefore $30 would be received by the 75-year-old soldier who had served two years, under the conference report, whereas he would have had to serve three years in order to have received the $30 under the Senate amendment.

These are the only changes in amounts. As heretofore shown, this report increases the Senate amendment $1,685,000 per annum, or it would make an average annual increase of about $1,400,000 for the five succeeding years.

I think, Mr. President, it is proper at this time to explain the reasons which actuated the conference committee in agreeing to other amendments and in receding from one of the Senate provisions. Section 4 of the bill as it passed the Senate provided as follows:

That the Commissioners of Pensions shall make, at the time of submitting his next annual report, a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or District, containing a statement or table which shall contain the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences, of all pensioners of the United States; and shall thereafter, as said annual reports are submitted, make separate reports similar in all respects, except that such subsequent reports shall contain only those added to the pension roll during the fiscal year for which each annual report is made.

Mr. President, the impossibility of making the report called for in this section within the time therein mentioned, namely, at the time of the making of the annual report for 1912, will be apparent to anyone upon second thought. The expense and delay to the business of the bureau will appear from the reading of the letter from the Secretary of the Interior of date April 12, 1912, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 12, 1912.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry of the 5th instant relative to section 4 of H. R. No. 1, as amended by the Senate, in which it is provided that the Commissioner of Pensions shall make, at the time of submitting his next annual report, a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or district, containing a statement or table giving the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners of the United States.

The Commissioner of Pensions advises me that it is probable that more than 400,000 claims will be filed under this bill (should it become a law) within a year after its enactment; and that to adjudicate these claims and keep the regular work of the bureau current the services of the entire clerical force of the bureau will be required for at least two years—even if he be not required to submit a list of the pensioners on the roll with the information called for in this section.

The commissioner further advises me that to furnish the list of pensioners with the data asked for in this section, at the time of submitting his next annual report, the services of practically the entire available force of the Bureau of Pensions will be required for from two to three months in its preparation. He states that it will be necessary to withdraw from the files of the bureau the papers in nearly 600,000 individual pension cases, and to make a careful examination of the reports of the War or Navy Department in each case in order to determine the length of service rendered. This requirement applies to all the survivors of the Civil War on the pension roll, as well as those who served in the War with Mexico, the Spanish War, the Regular Army and Navy, and the various Indian wars. The work of adjudicating the claims filed under this bill can not be carried on while an investigation is being made of the same cases to determine the length of service. This section will therefore require a practical suspension of the adjudication of claims under the bill for some three months.

However, if the requirement as to length of service be omitted, all the other data required by this section may be obtained from the records of the pension agencies without the examination of any of the cases in the files of the Bureau of Pensions. Omitting length of service, it is believed that the other data could be furnished by the pension agencies with a slight additional force of temporary clerks within 30 days and with no serious interference with the settlement of the new claims filed under this bill.

The Commissioner of Pensions advises me that it would entail very little extra expense to prepare a list for publication at the close of each fiscal year, said list to contain the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners in the case of all first allowances under this bill, and that such a list in two years' time would contain practically all the survivors of the Civil War. Provision might then be made to furnish a statement giving the same data relative to all other pensioners on the roll, which would thus complete the entire pension roll.

It must be remembered that such a list published at the close of the present fiscal year would contain the present rates of pension, while under this bill the rates of nearly all the survivors of the Civil War will have been increased in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

For these reasons it would appear to be advisable that this section be modified to omit the length of service, or that provision be made for the publication at the close of each fiscal year of a list containing the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners to whom first allowances have been made under this bill; or that the preparation of the entire list be postponed until the close of the fiscal year 1914, by which time all the claims under this bill will have been disposed of, the rates of pension adjusted in accordance therewith, and the lengths of service ascertained in all such cases.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS, Acting Secretary.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, it will be observed from this letter from the department that to adjudicate the claims under this bill and to keep the work current in the Pension Bureau the services of the entire force of the bureau would be required for at least two years, even though no other work was imposed upon them. So that, if we attempted to get the data within the time prescribed, we would necessarily delay the work of adjudicating the pension claims that would be filed under the bill.

It will also be observed that the whole available force would be required three months in order to get the data, even though they did nothing else in the work of the Pension Bureau; in other words, it would be impossible to get the data within the time required under the bill, though every clerk in the Pension Bureau should be put to work upon that matter, as about 600,000 cases would have to be examined in the Pension Bureau and data would also have to be obtained from the War Department in that many cases.

This would operate as a suspension of all other business. And even though it were possible to secure it in time, it would be inaccurate as to the rates of pension, because the figures would have to be based upon the pension received under the present law, whereas such figures would have to be changed in probably over 400,000 cases in the next two years to conform to the facts. Hence the information would be wholly inaccurate and not what the Senate desired to secure by its amendment.

Both length of service and the amount of pension are material matters in this section. Therefore to effectuate the purpose sought to be obtained by the Senate provision within a reasonable time, without delay to other business, the conferees agreed to section 5 of the bill as reported by the conferees, which is as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as each application for pension under this act is adjudicated, to cause to be kept a record showing the name and length of service of each claimant, the monthly rate of payment granted to or received by him, and the county and State of his residence, and shall, at the end of the fiscal year 1914, tabulate the record so obtained by States and counties, and shall furnish certified copies thereof upon demand and the payment of such fee therefor as is provided by law for certified copies of records in the executive departments.

By this substitute we shall be able at the end of two years to secure accurate data, which will be open to the public, and which can be obtained, in whole or in part, upon the demand of of any person.

Again, Mr. President, section 4 of the Senate amendment also provided:

And that no person shall receive a pension under this act who is or shall be in receipt of an income of $2,400 per year.

The Senate conferees receded from this provision. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior of date April 12, explaining the effect of this provision, seemed to justify the Senate conferees, in order to secure an agreement, in abandoning this amendment. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 12, 1912.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry of the 5th instant in connection with the bill H. R. No. 1, as amended by the Senate, wherein it is provided that no person shall receive a pension under this act who is or shall be in receipt of an income of $2,400 per year.

The Commissioner of Pensions advises me that under this provision it will be necessary that evidence be furnished by every applicant under the bill—should it be enacted into law—showing the amount of his annual income. He further advises me that it will also be necessary to call for corroborative proof in support of the claimant's allegations as to his income in each claim filed. Upon receipt of the evidence filed in response to the requirements it will be necessary to make a careful examination of the same to determine whether the requirements have been met, and in many cases additional evidence will be necessary to reconcile discrepancies or to supply omissions therein.

It is the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions that this provision in the bill, if retained, will reduce the number of certificates which the bureau would otherwise be able to issue under this act by about one-third; that is, that one-third less certificates can be issued in the same length of time with the income clause retained than could be issued were that clause omitted. Without such a provision it was estimated that it would require about two years to adjudicate all claims which would be filed under this bill. It is believed, therefore, that it would require about one-third longer or three years to adjudicate all claims if this clause be retained.

It seems probable, as you state, that not to exceed 2 per cent of the veterans of the Civil War are in receipt of an annual income of $2,400, and therefore that the number of survivors who would be excluded from the benefits of the bill under the income clause would be about 9,000. The average increase per pensioner under this bill is $57.27. The annual increase to which these 9,000 would otherwise be entitled is $515,430, which would, of course, reduce the annual cost of this bill by that amount.

The Commissioner of Pensions is of the opinion that it will be necessary for him to assign between 200 and 300 clerks, who are now engaged upon other work, to the adjudication of claims under this bill in addition to the regular examining force of the bureau. The additional administrative expense in ascertaining the income of all applicants under said section, in view of the fact that the services of such clerks on that particular line of work will be required for one year longer than otherwise, and that quite a large number of the claims must necessarily be referred to the field for special examination, is estimated at about $500,000. This is not the increase per annum, but the entire increase in the cost of administration in connection with the cost of the bill with the income clause retained, while the reduction in the cost of pensions which would result therefrom is about $515,430 per annum.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, reduced to two simple propositions, this letter shows that it would cost as much to the Government of the United States to enforce that provision as it would be able to save under that provision; and, second, it would require an extra year in the adjudication of the claims of soldiers who file under this law. During that period possibly 45,000 soldiers would pass away, who would be deprived of their pension during the last year of their lives. Therefore the conferees on the part of the Senate receded from that provision of the bill.

Mr. President, there was a defect in the wording of the February 6, 1907, law which was not cured by an amendment to that law, but which was cured by a provision in the pension appropriation bill of 1907. This provision, which has been inserted by the conferees as section 4, provides as follows:

That the benefits of this act shall include any person who served during the late Civil War, or in the War with Mexico, and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897.

The amendment, as it passed the Senate, provided that the act was to be an amendment of the act of February 6, 1907. The conferees agreed that, in order to avoid any possible construction that this act should be deemed to repeal the act of February 6, 1907, that the provision declaring it to be an amendment should be stricken out and that the new act should be considered merely as granting the right to additional and increased pensions to such as desired to take advantage of it, and those who do not desire so to do will still be receiving their pensions under the old law.

As this bill originated in the House, it might be called a purely service-pension bill, and hence the title "An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico" was appropriate. The Senate amendment destroyed the purely service character of the House bill, and therefore the committee of conference agreed to amend the title so as to read:

An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

Mr. President, as shown in the last letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, this act will give an average annual increase to each soldier and sailor of the Civil War, over and above his present pension, of $61.28. This sum, however, represents only an average. As a matter of fact, the annual increase to the older veterans will be very much more than that amount; and all of the younger veterans will have the consolation of knowing that as advancing age decreases their ability to labor and increases their wants there will be awaiting them an increase in pension to at least partially meet their requirements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, all of us have a great many inquiries for information as to this bill, and I ask that of the concise statement which has just been submitted by the chairman of the committee 5,000 copies be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 645) for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that 5,000 copies of the statement just made by the Senator from North Dakota be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to suggest to the Senator that his request should be that they shall be for the use of the Senate. If he requests that 5,000 copies be printed as a public document for the use of the document room or for the use of the Senate, then they will go to our document room.

Mr. BRISTOW. I did say for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not catch that part of the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. BRISTOW. I also ask that the bill be printed as a part of the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 23774) providing an appropriation to check the inroads of the Missouri River in Dakota County, Nebr., which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 29, 1912.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS, Washington, D. C.:

During 20 years I have had to take cognizance of frequent efforts to secure additional so-called health legislation, mostly in the eastern States and cities. Never once has this been asked for by the people, either by way of protection or otherwise, but always by physicians seeking greater monopoly in the healing art. The Owen bill, at present pending before Congress, is the most glaring specimen of this sort of class legislation that I have ever seen, and it is so utterly un-American that it should be defeated, especially because of the fact that, on the fact of defeat, the American Medical Association has now undertaken to secure large numbers of signatures to petition for favorable action by Congress upon their monopolistic pretentions.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

Mr. OWEN. I present a paper, being abstracts from those who indorse Senate bill No. 1. I ask that the abstracts lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the abstracts were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ADVOCATES OF AN IMPROVED NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE, A NATIONAL BUREAU OR DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

POLITICAL AND INDIVIDUAL.

The Republican national platform, 1908:

"We commend the efforts designed to secure greater efficiency in national public-health agencies and favor such legislation as will effect this purpose."

President Taft:

"For a very considerable period a movement has been gathering strength, especially among the members of the medical profession, in favor of a concentration of the instruments of the National Government which have to do with the promotion of public health. In the nature of things, the Medical Department of the Army and the Medical Department of the Navy must be kept separate. But there seems to be no reason why all the other bureaus and offices in the General Government which have to do with the public health or subjects akin thereto should not be united in a bureau to be called the 'Bureau of Public Health.' This would necessitate the transfer of the Marine-Hospital Service to such a bureau. I am aware that there is a wide field in respect to public health committed to the State, in which the Federal Government can not exercise jurisdiction, but we have seen in the Agricultural Department the expansion into widest usefulness of a department giving attention to agriculture when that subject is plainly one over which the States properly exercise direct jurisdiction. The opportunities offered for useful research and the spread of useful information in regard to the cultivation of the soil and the breeding of stock and the solution of many of the intricate problems in progressive agriculture have demonstrated the wisdom of establishing that department. Similar reasons, of equal force, can be given for the establishment of a bureau of health that shall not only exercise the police jurisdiction of the Federal Government respecting quarantine, but which shall also afford an opportunity for investigation and research by competent experts into questions of health affecting the whole country, or important sections thereof, questions which, in the absence of Federal Government work, are not likely to be promptly solved."

Ex-President Roosevelt:

"Our national health is physically our greatest national asset. To prevent any possible deterioration of the American stock should be a national ambition. We can not too strongly insist on the necessity of proper ideals for the family, for simple living, and for those habits and tastes which produce vigor and make men capable of strenuous service to their country. The preservation of national vigor should be a matter of patriotism.

"For this reason, and because many of the problems of public health are interstate in their character, the aid of the Federal Government is necessary to supplement the work of State and local boards of health. Federal activity in these matters has already developed greatly, until now it includes quarantine, meat inspection, pure-food administration, and Federal investigation of the conditions of child labor. It is my own hope that these important activities may be still further developed.

* * * * * * *

"I also hope that there will be legislation increasing the power of the National Government to deal with certain matters concerning the health of our people everywhere; the Federal authorities, for instance, should join with all the State authorities in warring against the dreadful scourge of tuberculosis. I hope to see the National Government abreast of the foremost State governments."

Ex-Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks:

"I am thoroughly in sympathy with such a movement."

Ohio State Legislature.
Ohio Republican platform, 1908.
Delaware Republican platform, 1908.
The Republican Club, New York City.
The Democratic national platform, 1908:

"We advocate the organization of all existing national public-health agencies into a national bureau of public health, with such power over sanitary conditions connected with factories, mines, tenements, child labor, and other such subjects as are properly within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government and do not interfere with the power of the States controlling public-health agencies."

Ex-President Grover Cleveland:

"I am in complete sympathy with the aims and purposes [to establish a national department of health] of this committee [of one hundred on national health]."

Mr. William J. Bryan:

"Congress should appropriate money to carry on investigations into diseases national in their scope."

Independence League platform, 1908:

"We favor the creation of a national department of public health, to be presided over by a member of the medical profession, this department to exercise such authority over matters of public health, hygiene, and sanitation which come properly within the jurisdiction of the National Government and do not interfere with the right of States or municipalities."

Ex-President Eliot, of Harvard University:

"I have a very stronge sense of the value of the work already done by the committee of one hundred on national health and of the importance of the work immediately before it, namely, the creation of a national bureau of public health, with a commissioner of health at its head."

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry:

"The supervision of the public health, being the most important work in the preservation of our natural resources, should be given to a national department of health, the head of which should be a member of the President's Cabinet and by education and experience be skilled in matters relating to the department over which he is called to preside."

Others commending the movement are Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture; Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician, Division of Vital Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor; Surg. Gen. Torney, War Department; Rear Admiral Charles F. Stokes, Surgeon General United States Navy; Hon. Andrew D. White, ex-president Cornell University, ex-ambassador to France; and many thousands of individuals.

STATE.

Hon. William Hodges Mann, governor of Virginia:

"I sincerely hope that the Committee [on Public Health and National Quarantine, in the Senate] may have evidence before it which will justify a favorable report, and that a department of public health, under a secretary with a seat in the Cabinet, may be established."

Among other indorsements from State governors are those of—
Hon. William M. O. Dawson, governor of West Virginia.
Hon. Samuel G. Dixon, governor of Pennsylvania.

Hon. George E. Chamberlain, governor of Oregon.

Hon. Albert E. Mead, governor of Washington.
Hon. Coe I. Crawford, governor of South Dakota.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Dr. Joseph Y. Porter, president of the Conference of State and Provincial Boards of Health of North America:

"It has been the hope of the State health officers for a number of years that finally the representatives of this great Government might recognize the fact that we are deserving of a representative in the President's Cabinet, and that therefore a department of public health should be inaugurated by Congress."

This conference of State health officers has more than once passed resolutions indorsing the proposal for a national department of health.

CITY.

Dr. J. E. Crichton, department of health of Seattle, Wash.:

"To mention the points which impress me as most important, as the commissioner of health of the second largest American port on the Pacific, I would begin by saying that there should be a national department of health with a Cabinet member, preferably. A bureau of health as a second choice, of course. I believe a Cabinet office is necessary and proper in order that there may be some proper control of vital statistics and the registration and proper reporting of communicable diseases."

Dr. Ernest J. Lederle, commissioner of health, New York City.

BOARD OF TRADE AND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Lancaster (Pa.) Board of Trade:

"Whereas the most important subject before the American people to-day and for all time to come is the proper conservation of the physical and mental energies of the race, in order to insure the perpetuation of the sterling qualities of virile manhood and womanhood so essential to the continued preeminence of the Nation and to bring to each citizen his just share of the joy to be derived from perfect health; and

"Whereas this condition can be most materially assured and hastened through the creation of a Federal health department, in charge of a competent health commissioner, who, by means of educational propaganda, closer quarantine, and interstate regulation, can thereby better safeguard the Nation's health; and

"Whereas Senate bill No. 6049 (now No. 1), introduced by Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma, provides for the establishment of a health department and a Cabinet officer in charge of the same: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the directors of the Lancaster Board of Trade, of Lancaster, Pa., That we heartily favor the passage of Senate bill 6049, and earnestly urge the members of the United States Senate from this State to give their active support to its final enactment."

SCIENTIFIC.

American Association for the Advancement of Science (1906; reindorsed in 1911):

"Whereas the American Association for the Advancement of Science has appointed a committee of one hundred on national health, and this committee is performing a work of great importance for the welfare of the Nation: Be it

MEDICAL.

American Medical Association:

"Whereas, Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Senator from Oklahoma, has introduced in the Senate of the United States Senate bill No. 1, creating a department of public health for the purpose of giving proper study to the causes of disease; and

"Whereas such a department has been formally approved in the platforms of all of our great political parties, and by President Roosevelt and President Taft, in order that our country may be placed on plane with the other civilized nations of the world in the conservation of our greatest national asset—the health and lives of our people; and

"Whereas through sinister and corrupt efforts of the patent medicine manufacturers, and those opposed to the honest administration of the pure food and drug laws, many worthy persons have been misled into believing that this great measure, designed solely for the protection of the public health and for the prevention of disease, is designed to have any jurisdiction in limiting the practice of medicine: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the American Medical Association pledges its support to the principles of the Owen bill, Senate bill No. 1, creating a department of public health; that it repudiates and denounces the misrepresentation of this measure and the base slanders against the medical profession distributed through the corrupt efforts of the interests which are behind the so-called League of Medical Freedom; that it declares itself as distinctly opposed to any effort, now or hereafter, by the Congress to regulate or control the practice of medicine or to discriminate for or against any school or system of practice: And in order the better to give effect to the principles herein set forth, be it further Resolved, That the proposed organization of a national department of health, as contemplated in the bill recently introduced into the Senate of the United States by Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, of Oklahoma, we believe to be a measure of the greatest national importance and we bespeak for it your earnest support."

RACE DEGENERACY (S. DOC. NO. 648).

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a copy of an address delivered by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., before the medical congress at New Haven, Conn., last year. I ask that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

HEALTH CONSERVATION (S. DOC. NO. 647).

Mr. OWEN. I present a paper by Parker H. Sercombe, of Fairhope, Ala., relative to the bill (S. 1) to establish a national department of health. I ask that the paper lie on the table and be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the memorial will lie on the table and an order for the printing thereof will be entered.

UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands is in conference between the two Houses, and the conferees on the part of the Senate are the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. The Senator from South Dakota is absent and can not serve. The Chair has been requested to ask that he be excused from further service and to substitute the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] in his place. Without objection, that substitution will be made.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the workmen's compensation bill which has been sent to the other House had an error in the enrollment. I therefore move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate in order that the error may be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

COST OF LIVING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 736).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying data, on cooperation and the cost of living in certain foreign countries. The information is supplementary to that contained in my message of March 13, 1912.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY IN THE CIVIL ESTABLISHMENT (H. DOC. NO. 732).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on the subject of the retirement from the classified civil service of superannuated employees. To the plan proposed in this report and set forth in detail in the accompanying draft of a bill I give my unqualified approval, because I believe it to be sound in principle and just both to the Government and to its employees.

NECESSITY FOR A RETIREMENT PLAN.

It is unnecessary at this time to discuss at length the necessity for adopting some plan by which the service may be relieved of the loss from the inefficiency of the personnel caused by the retention on the rolls, after long and faithful service, of those who have passed the age when they can perform a full day's work. The subject is one with which all administrative officers are familiar. It has been referred to in several messages which I have sent to the Congress and in many reports of the heads of departments. It is conceded by everyone acquainted with the situation that some action must be taken. Under present conditions the loss to the Government will continue to increase. Some method other than the summary discharge of employees when they become inefficient on account of age must be adopted. The present practice of retaining such employees on the rolls and, as they grow older, expecting from them a smaller quantity and lower grade of work can not continue indefinitely without seriously impairing the efficiency of the entire service and imposing upon the Government a cost that will be in excess of the expense to be incurred by the adoption of a reasonable plan for remedying existing conditions.

PROPOSED PLAN OF RETIREMENT.

The plan submitted by the commission contemplates that each employee in the classified service in the executive departments and establishments at Washington shall be retired as soon as he reaches the age of 70 years and shall receive thereafter an annuity equal to one-half of his annual salary, with the provision that no annuity shall exceed $600.

I invite particular attention to the fact that the plan provides that each person hereafter entering the service shall pay the entire expense of his own retirement by contribution from his salary, so that when he reaches the age of 70 years the fund he has accumulated will provide his retirement allowance. In such a case the only contribution of the Government, if any, will be the difference between the interest earned by his savings deposited in the Treasury and invested by the Government and the rate of 4 per cent per annum. So far as concerns this class of persons, there certainly can be no reasonable objection to the plan, and I doubt if any plan more beneficial both to the Government and to the employee could be devised.

EMPLOYEES NOW IN THE SERVICE.

It is evident that the application of the plan only to those who hereafter enter the service would not relieve the present condition due to superannuation nor save the Government from the constantly increasing loss from that cause. It is not practicable for those now 70 years of age, or for those nearing that age, to provide the cost of retirement entirely at their own expense. To meet the existing situation and to put a retirement plan into effect immediately there must be some contribution by the Government. This contribution need be little more in the aggregate than is now the Government's loss from inefficiency due to superannuation. After a comparatively short period of years the annual payments made by the Government will be less than the loss it would sustain if no plan were adopted.

It is proposed that an employee now in the service who has reached the age of 70 years shall be retired and be paid by the United States an annuity equal to one-half of his average annual pay for the last five years, but no such annuity to exceed $600. As to an employee less than 70 years of age, it is proposed that he shall be retired when he reaches 70 on an annuity equal to one-half of his average annual pay for the entire period of his service (no annuity to exceed $600), and that there shall be deducted from his pay until he reaches 70 years such an amount, not exceeding 8 per cent of his pay, as, with 4 per cent interest, will purchase his annuity. In the case of an employee who has but a few years to serve before reaching 70, some contribution by the Government will be necessary to supplement his savings in order to provide an annuity of a reasonable amount.

ANNUITIES LIMITED TO $600.

A retirement plan is only a means to an end, and that end is an increase of efficiency in the public service. The Government is not required to take charge of an employee's finances, nor is it justified in doing so except so far as it is necessary to protect the Government against the inefficiency of the employee due to superannuation. It is my opinion, therefore, that a plan of retirement should be so adjusted as to make the least possible demand upon the Government and at the same time draw from his personal control as little of an employee's money as possible. The proposed plan meets these requirements. While the maximum annuity of $600 is not sufficient to provide the luxuries of life, it is enough to insure an employee against want, even if he has been so unfortunate as to have made no other provision for his declining years. It is sufficient also to render ineffectual the appeals so often made to the sympathy of administrative officers when they attempt to remove from office an employee who has become inefficient through old age. At the same time the amount withheld from an employee's salary in order to provide his annuity is not sufficient to justify the thrifty in complaining that they are being deprived of an excessive portion of their income which they could invest more profitably.

RATE OF INTEREST ON SAVINGS.

In any compulsory saving plan it is but just that the Government should guarantee a reasonable rate of interest to its employees. Four per cent is the rate now paid by the Government on deposits of enlisted men of the Army and Navy, and it is the rate paid by many savings banks. The plan recommended by the commission contemplates the investment of the savings of employees in the highest class of securities and that the United States shall contribute such amount, if any, as may be needed to insure the employees receiving 4 per cent per annum.

APPLICATION OF PLAN TO EMPLOYEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

I am convinced that the application of the plan should be limited for the present to the classified civil service in the executive departments and offices at Washington, where the loss from superannuation is the greatest. While any plan is in its experimental stage it should be kept within narrow limits. If successful in operation in Washington, it can be extended as the needs of the service require.

COST TO THE GOVERNMENT.

It being conceded that no immediate benefit to the Government could accrue without some temporary help from it, I directed the Commission on Economy and Efficiency to make an investigation of the loss due to superannuation in the service at Washington. Its report sets forth in detail the results of this investigation. It has involved an examination of the efficiency of 22,754 employees, as such efficiency was reported by the departments. At no other time has such a thorough investigation been made of the service in Washington. An earnest effort was made to ascertain and to state in money the financial loss which is sustained from the inefficiency of aged persons in the service. While the loss shown as the result of the investigation is undoubtedly much less than the actual loss from superannuation, the figures are sufficiently large to justify the Government in giving temporary aid in putting the plan into operation. Accepting the very conservative figures as to the loss now sustained, the inefficiency in the service which is due to old age can be wiped out immediately and permanently in Washington by an average annual expenditure during the next 20 years of $226,986 over and above the annual loss that will be sustained from superannuation if no plan is adopted for avoiding it. The accompanying report shows further that the saving to the Government that will result from the adoption of the proposed plan will equal, in the course of the succeeding 16 years, the entire cost of inaugurating the plan.

STRAIGHT PENSIONS NOT ADVISABLE.

I am firmly convinced that the proposed plan is superior to any form of straight pensions, in that an employee upon retirement at any time may avail himself of his savings with the accrued interest, or his representatives may do so in the event of his death, whereas any form of pension or gratuity from the Government must inevitably be considered as a part of compensation and is available only to those employees who succeed in living to a given age, in remaining in the service to that age, and in living a sufficient time beyond that age to receive in pension payments the value of their deferred pay. Avoiding, therefore, the dangers and disadvantages of the straight pension, the proposed plan commends itself as satisfactory from the viewpoint of the Government and the viewpoint of the employees. It is advantageous to the Government, since the efficiency of the service will be increased by providing the means of retiring those who have reached the age of decline. It is advantageous to the employees, since it protects them from want in old age with the least interference in their private affairs, and makes the service more attractive to the younger employees by facilitating promotions to higher salaries and grades at earlier ages than is possible under present conditions.

CONCLUSION.

A careful study of the existing situation with reference to superannuation, and a consideration of the worse conditions that will appear in the future, leads me again to commend the subject to the earnest consideration of the Congress. I believe that the plan proposed in the commission's carefully prepared and exhaustive report is the best that has been devised for meeting the present and future needs of the service, and therefore I urge the enactment of the necessary legislation to put it into effect at an early date.

KANSAS RIVER DAMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam or dams across the Kansas River in western Shawnee County, or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Topeka Commercial Club, a corporation organized under the laws of Kansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate not to exceed two dams across the Kansas River, at points suitable to the interests of navigation in western Shawnee County, or in Wabaunsee County, in the State of Kansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMERENE. A similar bill, in fact a duplicate of that bill, was referred a couple of weeks ago to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and I would suggest that a reference be made to that committee. They have somewhat considered it.

Mr. SMOOT. In looking into the question I find that all similar bills have always gone to the Finance Committee, and that is the proper committee to which it should go. I do not see why it should be changed.

Mr. POMERENE. A former bill was referred by the Senate to the other committee.

Mr. SMOOT. A bill introduced in the Senate may have been referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, but every bill of this kind has been acted on in the past by the Committee on Finance, and I think that is the proper reference.

Mr. LODGE. It is the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures. There is no Committee on Coinage. All coinage bills have heretofore gone to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. The Senate committee is the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, and presumably the former bill was referred to that committee.

Mr. POMERENE. It was. I misnamed the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance unless otherwise ordered. The Senator from Ohio can make a motion to refer it to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference will be to the Committee on Finance.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, and consider bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why not proceed in regular order to the consideration of the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. My object is to get rid of as many bills as possible by 2 o'clock to which there is no objection. At that time the unfinished business will be taken up, and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will address the Senate. There are a good many bills upon the calendar, and if we expect them to pass the House we ought to get them to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is one matter on the calendar to which there may not be any objection, and that is the resolution calling for a report from the Department of Commerce and Labor in regard to labor conditions in Lawrence, Mass. If there is objection to that resolution, I will move to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I could not promise as to whether there will be any objection to that resolution or not. The only question would be that if there is any strong or determined opposition to a measure and it should be taken up, it will take the balance of the time until 2 o'clock, and nothing will be accomplished. We have now only 40 minutes until 2, and I thought we could get through with a number of bills to which there is no objection. I hope the Senator from Washington will look at the matter in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington objects, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. The first business on the calendar will be stated.

STANDARD OIL CO. AND AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

The first business on the calendar was Senate concurrent resolution 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Mr. POMERENE. I am advised that the rule in regard to resolutions of this character is that they shall be first referred to the proper committee and be reported back by the committee. I was disposed to insist upon the consideration of the resolution in the Senate without a reference, but in view of what has been the practice I will consent, with the permission of the Senate, that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and I do this with the hope that there will be a reasonably prompt report upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2151) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use, at his discretion, surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 256) affecting the sale and disposal of public or Indian lands in town sites, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been twice read, and certain amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] asked that it go over the last time it was reached. He is not here, and therefore I will ask that it go over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4762) to amend an act approved February 6, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 8, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' and to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands,' and to provide for the more efficient adminstration of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 459) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribes of Indians was anounced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

LAWRENCE (MASS.) STRIKE.

The resolution (S. Res. 231) for the investigation and report by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor regarding certain labor conditions in Lawrence, Mass., was announced as next in order, and the Senate resumed its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Is there not an amendment pending to that resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a pending amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, after the word "country," in line 8, the words "also what action has been taken by the local authorities at Lawrence to forcibly interfere with the free passage of said aliens or others from the city of Lawrence and State of Massachusetts to other States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] that there are some other words in the resolution which seem now to be needless, particularly those in reference to the strike. The strike is over, and the Senator does not desire to limit it, I suppose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the words in reference to that matter be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the name "Massachusetts," in line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "and especially those now engaged in strike."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that, because of the limited time now remaining until 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate, I shall not ask to take up this bill, as it can not be disposed of in that time and would simply interfere with other bills which ought first to be passed upon.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the reason why I objected to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2051) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been heretofore read in full.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 17029) authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5206) to amend that portion of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1066), relating to the reservation of an easement in lands bordering Flathead Lake, was announced as next in order, and the bill was read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see the report on this bill suggests certain amendments. Before I consent to its consideration, I want to know whether those amendments are embodied in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment is indicated in the bill, the Chair will suggest to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if there is no amendment in the bill, I ask that it go over until I have time to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5728) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 242) directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to inquire into and report to the Senate whether post-office inspectors are being sent through the country to influence postmasters to aid in the election of delegates for or against any candidate for the Presidency, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

SANATORIUM FOR CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

The bill (S. 5676) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside for sanatorium purposes not to exceed four sections of the unallotted tribal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Oklahoma was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to designate and set aside not to exceed four sections of the unallotted lands belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma for the purpose of providing land on which to build a sanatorium or sanatoria for the benefit of those tribes of Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLEMENTAL TREATY WITH CHOCTAW INDIANS.

The bill (S. 5141) to correct an error in the record of the supplemental treaty of September 28, 1830, made with the Choctaw Indians, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi if that is not substantially the same bill which passed the House of Representatives and which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as to which to-day I asked that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will state that identical bills on the subject were introduced in the Senate and in the other House. One of those bills passed the House with an amendment, and a favorable report was made on the one in the Senate with an amendment. I should like to have both bills go to the committee to which I have had referred the bill introduced in the Senate—the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me, if I may make a suggestion, that the proper way to do would be to take the House bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs to-day, substitute it for this bill, and pass it. That would conclude the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMOOT. It is for that reason that I have asked that the Senate bill go over to-day, and then it can be substituted at any time in the committee for this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over for the present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it be in order, I should like to make the motion now.

Mr. SMOOT. If we had the House bill here the motion would be in order, but that bill is not in the Senate, it having gone to the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right; then I will make that motion later; but I thought we ought to have the bill go to the committee that deals with such subjects here, inasmuch as they have made a favorable report, and that would save the committee from further work.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 5629) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, on page 5, line 11, after the word "not," to strike out "less" and insert "more"; in the same line, after the word "than," to strike out "one thousand dollars nor more than"; and in line 12, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred"; so as to read:

> The governor shall assign and set apart to each school district established and organized under the provisions of this section a sum, not more than $2,000, in proportion to the number of pupils in the district and the particular needs of the district, for the construction and equipment of a schoolhouse, which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the treasurer of the school district upon the order and voucher of the governor out of that portion of the said Alaska fund set apart for the establishment and maintenance of public schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANS OCCUPYING RAILROAD LANDS.

The bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think there is an error in line 3 of the bill. I was not present in the committee when the bill was considered, but the Secretary of the Interior has jurisdiction over Indian lands, and I suggest, therefore, that the word "Treasury," in line 3, be stricken out and that the word "Interior" be substituted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of the," it is proposed to strike out "Treasury" and insert "Interior," so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to request of the present claimant under any railroad land grant a relinquishment or reconveyance of any lands passing under the grant which are shown to have been occupied for five years or more by an Indian entitled to receive the tract in allotment under existing law but for the grant to the railroad company, and upon the execution and filing of such relinquishment or reconveyance the lands shall thereupon become available for allotment, and the company relinquishing or reconveying shall be entitled to select and have patented to it other vacant public lands of equal value in the same State, as may be agreed upon with the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4204) to provide for the final settlement with the Tillamook Tribe of Indians of Oregon for lands ceded by said Indians to the United States in a certain agreement between said parties, dated August 7, 1851, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that that bill go over and also that the six bills following it on the calendar be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Oregon Senate bills 4204, 4205, 4533, 4534, 4535, 4536, and 4537 will be passed over.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 5254) to provide for compulsory education of the children of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3316) to repeal an act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SYSTEM OF RURAL COOPERATIVE CREDITS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the operations of cooperative land-mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions in other countries was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has heretofore been read in full and certain amendments recommended by the committee have been agreed to. The Chair understands there is pending an amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend, on page 2——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that amendment has heretofore been rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. If there are no further amendments to be offered, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 284) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate in the absence of objection.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction over the certain claim of Col. Andrew H. Russell and Col. William R. Livermore on account of the alleged infringement by the United States of their patent, No. 230,823, dated August 3, 1880, for a magazine firearm, and make findings and conclusions of fact and law and report the same to the Senate in regard to the following matters, to wit:

Said court shall ascertain and determine and report whether said Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore would have any lawful claim for damages or compensation against the United States on account of any such alleged infringement if the United States were an individual or private corporation, and if so, the amount of such damages or compensation; also whether the alleged invention upon which said claim is based was known or used by others in any foreign country before the alleged invention or discovery thereof was made by either the said Andrew H. Russell or the said William R. Livermore; also whether the manufacture by the United States of a certain magazine firearm, known as the Krag-Jörgensen rifle, under a certain license from the Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni, of Christiania, Norway, was an infringement of the patent No. 230,833 for a magazine firearm granted to said Andrew H. Russell. The court is further authorized, with other testimony which may be submitted by either side, to receive and consider, subject to objections as to its competency and materiality, the testimony already taken in the certain suit brought in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts by Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore and dismissed for want of jurisdiction: Provided, That the Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni shall receive such notice of the hearing of said claim as the court shall direct, and the said Krag-Jörgensen Gewaerkompagni shall be permitted to appear at said hearing and to be represented by counsel, within such reasonable time as shall be limited by the court, and shall be allowed to submit testimony and to be heard as one of the parties to the inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand unanimous consent has not been given for the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is up in its regular order, subject to objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over on the objection of the Senator from Utah.

The bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battleship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4159) for the relief of F. M. Lyman, jr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. And that, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was adversely reported. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4230) for the relief of Robert F. Scott was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 364) for the relief of Ramney Y. Lyman was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The bill (S. 111) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Washabaugh County, in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

The bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who has charge of the bill, whether this amphitheater will have provision for the holding of funeral exercises and burial exercises that may take place at the cemetery? There is a request before the Committee on Military Affairs—a bill is pending before the committee, I believe, for that purpose—asking for the erection of a chapel. It seems to me if a building of this size is to be erected at this expense there ought to be provision in the amphitheater for such exercises.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the plans of the building do not include a chapel, but there is a room in connection with the amphitheater that could be very readily used for that purpose. It would probably need some additions in the way of furnishings.

I will say to the Senator from Kansas that this structure was practically authorized by an act of Congress in 1909, directing the preparation of plans and appropriating money for that purpose. The plans have all been prepared, and the Senator will find copies of them in the report of the committee.

The passage of the bill is strongly urged by the members of the Grand Army, and before our committee a large number of them apppeared. One of the things that appealed to all of us was the request that they all made that the amphitheater might be provided for and erected while some of them were alive. It provides a place where services can be held.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Kansas; if it is such a building that any portion of it can be used for this purpose it should be done. It is highly necessary, for it is almost a disgrace now. Funeral services are held there without proper covering, and when bodies come to the city for burial at Arlington they have to be placed in storehouses, stables, and places of that kind, and there is no proper sufficient place in which to hold services. I do not know that I have ever before had my attention called to this bill, and I do not know that it is compatible with the architect's plans, but if it could be so arranged I would prefer to let the bill go over and let the committee figure upon it, because the necessity of such a place is well known and it is important.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it better to let the bill be passed. The room I spoke of can very readily be adapted for that purpose with an additional appropriation hereafter.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Kansas, I will say that the plans are exceedingly elaborate and they contemplate a very beautiful building, permanent in character. A room such as the Senator from Kansas has suggested is very much needed. As I recall, the diagram which is on the Senator's desk and the description as given by the architect provide a place where gatherings may be held, within shelter and within doors. It is a very much needed thing, and it was pressed very urgently, as has been said by the Senator from Utah, by the members of the Grand Army and by other interests. I think that would all be encompassed.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest, in line 10, page 1, after the words "memorial amphitheater," the insertion of the words "including chapel."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee have recommended certain amendments, which will first be acted upon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not heard any statement of just what this expenditure is for or what the memorial building is for. What will the building be used for? For what purpose?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is for use for memorial services and any services that may be held at Arlington. The situation in the cemetery now is a disgrace. There is no fitting place for the holding of these memorial services, which, as the Senator knows, bring to that historic place people from all over the country. Some of the most noted and important people gather there.

The erection of this amphitheater has been in contemplation for a number of years. Some years ago Congress passed an act appropriating, I think, $5,000 for the purpose of preparing plans for the erection of the amphitheater. Those plans have now been prepared. The Senator will find upon his desk a copy of a portion of them.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Utah——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will allow me to conclude my questions. I still do not understand what memorial services are proposed. Does the Senator refer to the memorial service once a year or funeral exercises?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Funeral services and the memorial service held once a year; any gathering of that character.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Such as the services in connection with the dead from the battleship Maine?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; such memorial services as were had the other day in reference to the Maine dead.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me three-fourths of a million dollars is a very large amount of money to put into a building which is to be used only upon the rarest occasions, and I think too much of an economical administration of public funds to favor such an expenditure unless a very decided showing can be made. I do not doubt that an auditorium should be provided in this cemetery; I think there should be provided a place for meetings, but to expend $750,000 on such a building at a time when we are supposed to be contemplating economical methods strikes me as rather contradictory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a building intended not only for use but which is of a commemorative character as well. We ought not to erect in Arlington Cemetery, that historic burying ground, something that is not in keeping with it, something that is not handsome and ornate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that we ought to have a fine building there as a memorial. There is but one Arlington. But I would oppose an expenditure of this kind and a building of this kind if I did not believe it would be so built as to be adapted to the very purpose we were talking about a moment ago, of holding funeral services, and also for such vaults and crypts as may be necessary. In fact, most of the services held in Arlington are in the nature of ceremonies which occur from day to day as the bodies of officers and men of the Army and Navy are brought here from various places for interment. So, ninety-nine out of one hundred, I may say, of the ceremonies will be in the nature of funerals.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS DEATH GRATUITY.

The bill (S. 3645) to amend the law providing for the payment of the death gratuity as applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the law referred to as follows:

Strike out the words "contracted in the line of duty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not the result of his own misconduct."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS RELATING TO COTTON.

The bill (H. R. 14052) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue certain reports relating to cotton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue a report, on or about the first Mondays in August, September, and October of each year, showing the condition of the cotton crop of the United States on these respective dates.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] whether this information can be gathered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from South Carolina is not now in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator from Georgia given any attention to the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not a great deal. Perhaps it would be better to let it go over until the Senator from South Carolina can be present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill should not go over if it is possible for any of those of us here who are familiar with the cotton question to enlighten the Senator.

The purpose is to ascertain the amount of cotton of the former year unconsumed and on hand. The cotton grown during the former season and unconsumed when the new crop comes in cuts quite a figure in the amount of cotton available for manufacturers.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is a good thing to secure the information, and I have no objection to it, but section 3 of the bill, which will take the place in number of the old section 2 that it is proposed to strike out, provides:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue each year, immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau of December 1, an estimate of the total production of cotton in the United States for the current crop year.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The details of the bill were worked out by the Secretary of Agriculture, as I was informed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice there is no report from the Senator from South Carolina or the department. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he thinks this section can be carried out?—

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue each year, immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau of December 1, an estimate of the total production of cotton in the United States for the current crop year.

Let me ask the Senator if it is possible for the Secretary of Agriculture to comply with that section and issue the information immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau on December 1?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That can be fairly well ascertained and by methods entirely under his control. He can apply to the different manufacturers, whose establishments are well known to those who are familiar with the manner of carrying on that business, and ascertain it, perhaps about as accurately as any other fact of that kind can be ascertained without the power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. He can do it approximately.

That is what that phrase means. After the ginning report is published, he will ascertain what part of the crop of the former year is still on hand and unconsumed.

Mr. BACON. Without having it again repeated in the RECORD, I ask that the bill be again read. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas is mistaken.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am responding to the language read by the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will again be read.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the bill will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue a report, on or about the first Monday in July of each year, showing by States and in total the number of acres of cotton then in cultivation in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to issue each year, immediately following the publication of the ginning report of the Census Bureau of December 1, an estimate of the total production of cotton in the United States for the current crop year.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provisions be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question in my mind is whether what is required by the bill can be accomplished.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It can be accomplished, but it does not go as far as I thought it did. We had better let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a Division of Markets, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

CLAIMS OF PONCA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to give notice that on Thursday I will ask the Senate to consider, after the routine morning business, the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator will not insist that that should interfere with the unfinished business?

Mr. BORAH. I design to take up the bill between the close of the routine morning business and 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. We can not hear on this side what the Senator from Idaho is saying.

Mr. BORAH. I said that on Thursday I would seek to have House bill 9061, known as the eight-hour bill, considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean to the displacement of the unfinished business?

Mr. BORAH. I have no intention of interfering with the unfinished business. I desire to take up the bill after the routine morning business, prior to 2 o'clock, or prior to 4 o'clock, as the case may be.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Cummins	Lodge	Shively

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I again announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that my Democratic friends will pardon me if once in a while I speak especially to my Republican associates. I value very much the sympathy which I have always received when speaking upon this subject from Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, and I hope that I will continue to receive it. I am conscious, however, that the argument which I propose to make upon this subject must be addressed largely to those who, like myself, hold that it is a wise governmental policy to adequately protect the American markets against unfair competition from abroad.

I can not refrain at this moment from saying that I believe it is a Republican duty to revise at least four schedules of the tariff law before we either take a recess or adjourn, and in so far as my meager influence can prevail there will be no adjournment until the attention of the Senate has been given to these four schedules. I name them: The metal schedule, the sugar schedule, the wool schedule, and the cotton schedule. They are the four most important parts of the system that we have devised for the protection of American industry, and I think that the Senate will be faithless to its trust if it adjourns or consents to an adjournment before it has diligently attempted to relieve the American people of some of the burdens—unjust burdens—imposed upon them through the provisions of these schedules.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WORKS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. In this connection, speaking for this side of the Chamber, I wish to say to the Senator that it is our determination, so far as we can, not to permit an adjournment until the Senate has acted upon every tariff bill which has been sent or may be sent hereafter to the Senate from the House during the present session.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood that to be the position of the Senator from North Carolina, but I add one thing to his statement. If the House—if I am permitted to refer to it in this way—does not pass a revised cotton schedule, I believe it to be the duty of the Senate to add by way of amendment to some one of the schedules already sent to us by the House a proper revision and reduction of the duties in that schedule, because it is apparent to anyone who is acquainted with the subject, and especially apparent to anyone who has given even casual examination to the luminous and persuasive report made by the Tariff Board upon that schedule, that it needs revision, thorough and radical revision, quite as much as any of the schedules that have hitherto been passed by the House and transmitted to the Senate.

The reason I have made the statement which I have just made with regard to what I think to be our duty is that there seems to be an impression abroad that we can adjourn, and properly adjourn, before we have considered all these schedules. If I may be allowed to introduce a partisan reason into the discussion, I desire to say to my fellow Republicans that when we go next November to the voters of this country asking them to retain the supremacy we have and regain the supremacy we have lost we will occupy a most disadvantageous ground if we on this side of the Chamber have failed to do what we ought to have done in 1909.

I believe that the people of this country are dissatisfied with the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. I question no man's integrity of purpose, I question no man's patriotism in dealing with this matter, but the day has gone by for indulging in any illusions with regard to it. We did not do in 1909 what we ought to have done. We did not fulfill the promises that we had given the people of the United States, according to the standards which they recognize and according to the standards which they enforced in the last election.

I do not intend to harrow up the feelings of my brother Senators; that is the very furthest from my purpose; but I must deal with the subject honestly. I must speak my mind with regard to it or not speak at all. We have here four great schedules in which I believe that the duties are too high and in two of them at least the Tariff Board has declared unmistakably that they are too high. The report of the Tariff Board with respect to the wool schedule and the cotton schedule verifies every statement made by those who sought to reduce the duties of these schedules in 1909. There still remains some difference of opinion with regard to the extent of the reduction, but when we come to those schedules I will endeavor to point out that every position taken and every argument advanced by those on this side of the Chamber who sought to reduce the duties in those schedules in 1909 have been vindicated by the examination since made by the Tariff Board.

Now, I appeal to my brother Republicans that we must not make the mistake again. When we lay before the voters of this country the performances of the Senate of the United States, let those performances include at least an earnest and persistent purpose on our part to bring the duties of the tariff law to that point which in 1908 we promised they should reach. If this is done, there will then remain the old issue—I do not disparage it, I understand perfectly its gravity and its importance—as to whether duties should be levied upon imports in order to encourage and protect the industries of the United States and to safeguard the workingmen of the United States in the wages which they now receive, or whether they should be laid with no other object in view save the raising of revenue to support the institutions of the United States. Upon that issue there may be fair debate. We have won upon that issue many times in days that are gone, but we can not win upon that issue if it is accompanied with the assertion and with the proof that the duties we have laid upon these imports are higher than necessary to encourage and sustain these industries and to safeguard the working people of the country.

It seems to me that this appeal ought to sink deeply into the hearts of my brother Republicans. I do not believe in tariff duties for revenue. I may be somewhat radical, but if you will eliminate the question of protection from duties upon imports I would gather but little of the revenue which we need for the support of the Government at our customhouses. There is another way, and a more equitable way, a juster way in which to raise the greater part of the revenue that we need than by duties upon imports. I am for these duties first and foremost, because I do not want to subject American industries to the unequal competition of foreign lands. But the very moment that we levy duties that confer upon our own industries the privileges of monopoly, that moment we have not only neutralized all the benefits and advantages of our system of protection, but we have armed the selfish men of our country—and men always are selfish and always will be selfish—with an instrument that enables them to take from a defenseless people fortunes which have grown to appalling proportions, and which have imposed upon those who must build them, those who must create them, those who must pay for them, burdens which a free people and an intelligent people ought not to bear, and which they will not bear, as has been abundantly demonstrated in times past.

I come now to say that if the amendment which I have proposed to the metal schedule be adopted it will, if otherwise commerce is made free in the United States, enable the users and consumers of the various articles comprised in Schedule C to buy them for $100,000,000 per year less than they now pay. I recognize that I can not prove mathematically the statement I have just made, but I can prove it and I will prove it substantially before I have finished to the satisfaction of every impartial mind.

I mean by what I have just said that the American producers of iron and steel in all the forms enumerated in this schedule could sell what they produce to the people of the United States and to the people of other countries for $100,000,000 less than they now sell them, could still return an ample profit to the capital employed, could still sustain the wages which are now characteristic of America, and lose no man under the American sky a single day's work.

The inference from what I have just said, and I do not shrink from it at all, is that the producers of iron and steel in the United States in all the forms take every year from the American people $100,000,000 more than they ought to take, and they take it simply to swell the colossal fortunes which have characterized this industry.

More ill-gotten gain is traceable to the metal schedule or to the industries involved in the metal schedule than in any other schedule of the tariff. We have heard a great deal about Schedule K in times past, and it is one of the manifestations of recent years that Schedule K, although formerly defended everywhere, has no defender now. So fas as I know there is not a man in the Senate or in the House or anywhere else who ventures to defend the wool and the woolen schedule. Yet the woolen schedule is a decree of divine justice as compared with the metal schedule. It has not returned to those who have been interested in the subject a tithe of the profits or the fortunes that have gathered around or which have been drawn from the metal schedule.

I assume that the reason we grow indignant about the wool schedule and forget the metal schedule is that we wear clothes; they are therefore felt readily and easily by every man and every woman; and we do not wear iron and steel, not in any great quantities, and these articles seem somewhat removed from us; but we pay for them precisely as we pay for wool and woolens, and in the last analysis the high prices of iron and steel bear just as hardly upon the great mass of the people as do the high prices of woolens. The only difference between the attitude of the woolen schedule and the iron and steel schedule is this: In 1909 we did materially reduce the metal schedule—I mean, as to the heavier forms of steel. We did not reduce the more highly organized forms of steel or metal, but, on the contrary, in a great many of the paragraphs of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law we increased the duties of metal manufactures as compared with the duties of the Dingley law; but we did reduce the duties of these heavier forms of iron and steel, and those reductions have been cited as an evidence of our willingness and our desire to fulfill the platform of 1908 and to answer the demands of the people with respect to those duties.

It does no good to reduce duties if they still remain prohibitive; and while I know there have been some importations under the metal schedule, they do not make against the assertion that I have just made in the great length and breadth of the schedule. We did not reduce a single duty that would enable under any circumstances our foreign competitors to enter into rivalry with us, and we did not reduce them so as to affect in the slightest degree the prices which had theretofore prevailed in the industry. Therefore, as I have said more than once, so far as any benefit to the American people is concerned, we might just as well have done with the metal schedule in 1909 what we did with the woolen schedule—left it without any change whatsoever.

I have said that I believed that the producers of iron and steel in the United States could sell their products for $100,000,000 per year less than they now sell them without disturbing wages and without costing any man in the United States a day's work, and still retain a profit upon all the honest capital invested in the business. I say to you frankly that if it were a mere question of enriching the United States by $100,000,000 per year, I would not consume the time of the Senate in discussing the schedule. I am not one of those who believe that it ought to be the highest object of our people or of our Government to increase wealth. Wealth has, in addition to manifold responsibilities and duties, a great many deteriorating and enervating influences, and I am not here to advise a reduction of the duties in this schedule merely for the purpose of making the United States richer. It is quite otherwise. The evil, the crime—the social crime—of excessive duties lies in the fact that they are the instrumentalities of an unfair and unjust distribution of wealth. It matters a great deal less how much we are worth now than it matters how wealth is distributed. Does it pass into the hands of the men who make it and in the proportion in which they make it? I look upon that as the vital problem of the hour. It is the only menace of this time—the only real menace of this time—it is the only danger that I foresee as I look forward into the future and endeavor to cast the horoscope of free institutions. The only disaster that I can imagine is the disaster which will follow a general belief that the United States is helping the rich against the poor, helping those who already have more than they ought to have, and obstructing the pathway of those who have less than they ought to have. It is utterly impossible that this country shall prosper—shall ever fulfill the hopes, the dreams of the forefathers—unless its people believe that its laws are just and fair and that wealth is distributed according to the laws of justice and fairness.

Mark you, do not misunderstand me. I am not suggesting an even or an equal distribution of wealth. To so suggest would be contrary to my own convictions and contrary to the convictions of all those whom I address. I want wealth, however, distributed according to laws which every man in the abstract recognizes. I want commerce to be free. I want the opportunity for rivalry and for struggle to be open to all men who have the courage and the spirit to enter the field of human activity. The very moment the United States erects an obstacle or an obstruction in the way of that commerce, that moment it is diverting the wealth of the country from the hands of those who have made it and ought to take and hold it into the hands of those who, favorites of fortune as they are, are seeking an unfair and an unconscionable advantage in life.

It is the same problem that inheres in the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations. The act of taking money from the people of this country by reason of an excessive duty is in moral quality and in consequence exactly the same as taking money from the people by reason of monopoly. There is no difference whatsoever. I believe that our power to deal with this subject arises not from our power to tax or to levy import duties so much as from our power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations. I doubt exceedingly the right of the United States merely in the exercise of its taxing power to levy duties to encourage our industries and to protect American workingmen, but under our authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations we have unquestionably the power to so restrict these channels of commerce as to benefit or advantage our own people.

There is but one defense for the doctrine of protection; I think it is a sound defense; but there is but one defense, and that is, that the duty laid upon a given article that can not be produced in America without the duty will raise the price of all the unprotected articles. Unless the tariff has that effect, generally speaking, upon the industries and the commerce of the country, it is utterly indefensible. I believe it has that effect; but the very moment that you raise the duty above the point that is necessary to insure substantial equality between the domestic and the foreign manufacturer, that very moment we Republicans violate the very doctrine we advocate, and we remit the system of protection to the domain of monopoly. Therefore, I have done everything I could for now many years to reduce these duties to that point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the Senator passes from that point, I will say that I have been a good deal interested in his striking showing that the steel interests are charging $100,000,000 a year for their products more than is necessary to maintain American wages and reasonable profits. I understood that to be the statement of the Senator; am I substantially correct?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has restated my proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, can the Senator go further and state for how many years that excessive charge has been laid upon the American public?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will show presently that it has been laid upon the American public for a great many years; and, while I do not attribute to the Senator from Nebraska any political purpose in the inquiry, I can easily see that there is in his mind an idea that the Republican Party has been responsible for these excessive burdens. I want to remind him, however, that the burden was never higher, relatively speaking, than it was in the Wilson bill, adopted by our Democratic friends in a very peculiar way, I am told, and I might just as well recite it now as at any other time. I do not want to give a partisan tinge to this, and perhaps I am all wrong in thinking that the Senator from Nebraska attached any political significance to his inquiry; but the Wilson bill, when it passed the House, made some reductions in the metal schedule. It came to the Senate and was in charge of the then distinguished Senator from Maryland, now gone to his last reward. I am told that, feeling his inadequacy to deal with so complicated a matter, he passed the construction of the steel schedule over to his intimate friend, the then Senator from Pennsylvania; that the Senator from Pennsylvania wrote the steel schedule in the Wilson bill, and at the appropriate moment—this is one of the traditions of the Senate—he took it from his desk, passed it over to the Senator from Maryland, and it was then and there adopted as a part of that revision.

I only mention this to indicate that the Democratic Party is not entirely free from responsibility with regard to the burdens of the metal schedule. The metal schedule has been the favored son, if I may speak in that way of the tariff, for a long time. Pennsylvania in the House, you will remember, was for many, many years represented by a Democratic statesman who did not share with some of you the belief that duties ought to be levied for revenue alone, and he was very effective through all those years in securing the substantial and practical assent of his Democratic friends to duties upon iron and steel that were entirely indefensible. They have been indefensible for 20 years or more. I think there was a time when they may have been justified. My inquiries have not gone back so far; but I remember a time when the duty on steel rails was $28 a ton, and I believe that the duty of $28 per ton at that time could have been much more easily defended than the duty of $3.92 a ton at the present time.

So let us proceed with this discussion and this inquiry, ridding it, so far as possible, from partisan coloring.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator, I do not think my friend from Nebraska had any such design, because he had asked me the question before he had asked the Senator, and I could not give him the information. I desire to say, however, to the Senator from Iowa that whatever may be proper and just criticisms as to the past, we have to deal with the present, and if the Senator from Iowa will go as far as we on this side of the Chamber will in the reduction of the metal schedule upon this present occasion, I think he will have no reason to criticize the schedule as being one which is oppressive.

I want to say further to the Senator, with his permission—and I do this now because, as I understand, the Senator has about completed his general remarks and is going on to the discussion of this particular bill—I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am pretty nearly through with the general discussion.

Mr. BACON. I did not interrupt the Senator while he was in his general statement because he was making a very interesting and connected one, and I did not wish to do so, but as he has about, as I understand, concluded that, I want to say that I think the Senator's argument as it has progressed has been a very strong argument against the protective system, not only in part but in whole. As I understand the Senator's position, he is opposed in part to the protective system, though not altogether, but I think the logical result of his presentation is the condemnation of all of it, and, with the permission of the Senator, without interrupting him unduly, I simply want to call attention to his proposition, as I understand it to be, that a tariff which will destroy competition is infamous, but that a tariff which will only partially destroy it is to be commended. I do not believe that that proposition can be logically defended.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I misinterpreted the thought in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska, I beg his pardon; and, if I did, I will answer the question directly, that this burden has been imposed for a great many years—just how many it is impossible for me to tell, because, in order to fix the period, I would be required to examine the economic situation in each of those past years.

Replying now to the Senator from Georgia, he will remember that we have had many passages in regard to this matter in times that are gone. He misapprehends me entirely if he thinks that I believe in partial protection or believe in a part of the doctrine of the Republican Party. I believe in it wholly; I believe in it to its full extent. The point I have been endeavoring to make is that the very moment the duty passes beyond the amount necessary to enable our own producers to enter our markets upon fair terms, that moment it ceases to be protection and takes on, as I have endeavored to suggest, all the consequences and merits all the obloquy of monopoly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator for any great length of time, for I am really anxious to hear him upon the discussion of the metal schedule; but, in order that my view may be properly presented, I want to call the attention of the Senator to a further statement on his part. The Senator said—and I think correctly—that the only ground upon which the protective policy could be defended would be that in the raising of the prices of the particular articles protected there was a corresponding benefit in the raising of all other prices; and if that was not the effect of it, it could not be defended. I think I correctly understood the Senator, did I not?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator understood me correctly, except that he must use the word "generally."

Mr. BACON. Well, generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that the soundness of the doctrine can be tested by applying it to a particular article.

Mr. BACON. Unless it was a very large one.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Now, I simply want to illustrate that proposition by one industry that comes very closely home to those of us from my section. The Senator well knows that in the production of raw cotton—the agricultural product, not the manufactured product—there can be no benefit to the cotton raiser from the protective tariff, because the price of that article is a price fixed in the foreign market, which can not be influenced by the imposition of a tariff upon that article in this country; nor can there by any such corresponding benefit to those who raise it from any indirect influence as will compensate them for the burdens which they have to bear on account of the tariff. If that were a small industry the Senator might say that was a negligible quantity and not to be taken into consideration; but, according to the rule laid down by the Senator himself, if it is a very large industry and bears a very considerable proportion in its magnitude to the industries of the country, then it does invalidate his argument.

As to the extent of that industry, of course it is sufficient to say that it is an industry the value of whose product in the last year, or the year before the last—and when I say "the last year" I mean the last cotton year, which I think ended in September—the value of whose product, with its side products, of seed, cake, oil, and so forth, amounted to a thousand million dollars. It is the largest of all single exports from this country, larger than any manufactured export, larger than any other agricultural export. It is that which corresponds to the largest amount of gold that comes into this country—and I use the word "corresponds" because that which keeps gold from going out by bills of exchange is the same as that which brings gold in—and yet all of those who are engaged in that industry have to pay increased prices on every article which they use in the production of that commodity and on every article which they themselves consume; and if the rule laid down by the Senator is correct, that, it seems to me, would invalidate his argument. That is only one illustration. There are a great many other industries in this country which stand in a similar position. I think the Senator is correct in his statement that it is an absolute impossibility to defend the protective tariff, unless upon the principle that if it lays burdens its benefits are equally distributed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I were to admit the premise stated by the Senator from Georgia, his reasoning is so perfect that I would be compelled to admit also his conclusion. I do not, however, admit it. I do not believe that the price of cotton to the planter would be the same if there never had been a protective duty levied in the United States. I do not believe that the price of the cotton of the South is wholly fixed by the foreign market. I do not believe that the foreign market price is fixed without reference to the conditions in America. Everything that we do here affects the market price abroad. That was thoroughly discussed last year with reference to our other agricultural products. If we suppose now—and I want to answer the Senator thoroughly and fully, because while I believe in a very sharp reduction of these duties I believe just as firmly in the righteousness and in the efficacy of protective duties—that we had never had a protective duty in the United States; that we had never had a cotton mill in the United States; that all the cotton raised in this country had been shipped abroad to the cotton mills of other countries; that instead of a population of ninety or ninety-five millions in the United States, by reason of having been confined to agriculture we had a population of only thirty-five or forty million, it is impossible, I think, to assert, in view of all these things, which, of course, can not be demonstrated but can only be conjectured, that the billion dollars worth of cotton raised in the South, if it had been raised, could have been sold at the price at which it was sold, even though the price is fixed, as the Senator from Georgia says it is fixed, in a foreign land.

I believe that the system of protection, notwithstanding all its excesses, has tended to the general and uniform development of the United States. I believe it has added immensely to the population which is now crowded within our borders; and if I did not believe these things it would be impossible for me to stand here and defend the doctrine of taxing one man in order to enable another to do business. I am one of those who believe that, until very recently at least, the great volume of agricultural products was not directly enhanced in value by reason of the duties laid upon them, and yet I believe that the duties laid upon other products, other commodities, other articles, have afforded these agricultural producers markets for their products and thereby have tremendously increased the price of agricultural products. If I did not so believe I would not be a protectionist for a moment.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator, I am very much afraid that further investigation on his part will separate him from those with whom he is now politically affiliated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a moment. The suggestion that the price of cotton is not fixed in a world market is an absolutely new one to me. Two-thirds of the cotton crop goes abroad. I am speaking generally, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. For the year 1910 there were only 3,206,708,226 pounds of cotton exported.

Mr. BACON. Give us the bales. We can tell better by that.

Mr. SMOOT. This is in pounds. I will give you the figures in dollars and cents—$450,447,243.

Mr. BACON. When was that—what year?

Mr. SMOOT. Nineteen hundred and ten. In 1909 it was $417,390,665.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is reading, of course, from the Statistical Abstract?

Mr. SMOOT. From the Statistical Abstract.

Mr. BACON. I have not the figures before me, but I am sure of two facts. It may have been the year ending 1909 that I speak of it bringing a thousand million dollars. I am sure that is a correct statement.

Mr. SMOOT. We exported during the fiscal year 1909, stated in dollars and cents, less than we did in the fiscal year 1910.

Mr. BACON. I have forgotten which year it was. But in the record year the total crop, with its side products, speaking generally—it may have been a little more or a little less—a thousand million dollars; and I am not mistaken about the fact that, speaking generally, two-thirds of the cotton crop is exported.

Mr. SMOOT. Well——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please let me finish the sentence?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The cotton crop, speaking as a general average, in the full years is about 12,000,000 bales and about 4,000,000 bales are manufactured in the United States and about 8,000,000 bales of cotton go outside the United States.

I am sure that that statement will be corroborated by proper investigation. I can not now take the Statistical Abstract and interrupt the Senator to establish that point, but I will do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest that that is not material to the point we are discussing?

Mr. BACON. It is much the larger proportion; more than twice as much.

Mr. SMOOT. Each bale of cotton weighs 500 pounds.

Mr. BACON. That is the commercial bale.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the commercial bale. In 1910 there were 6,400,000 bales of cotton exported.

Mr. BACON. I am quite confident I am correct about it, and I will show it before the debate is through. I can not do it now. I know the fact is well established that two-thirds of the cotton crop goes to Europe. About 2,000,000 bales of it is manufactured in the North and about 2,000,000 in the South; it may be a little more than that. The remainder of the crop goes abroad. But to say that, with very much the larger proportion of that cotton going abroad, the price is not fixed abroad is to fly in the face of every principle of political economy.

Mr. CUMMINS. The price abroad is fixed partially by the supply of the United States, and that portion of the supply especially that can be exported.

Mr. BACON. I want to say one other thing to the Senator, and then I will not interrupt him further.

I want to complete this: The suggestion that the tariff affects the price of cotton is so absolutely foreign to the fact that I can not forbear to call the attention of the Senator to one thing. In the first place, the fact that cotton is manufactured in this country does not cut any figure with the question of how much cotton the world needs to consume, and if the amount required is not manufactured by this country, it will be manufactured by some other country. In the second place, even the matter of supply and demand does not always fix the price of cotton, although of course it generally does so. The cost of the production of cotton does not, I am sorry to say, fix the price of cotton. It is very frequently the case that the price of cotton is far below the cost of production. I have seen cotton selling at 4 cents a pound, where it cost 7 or 8 to make it; and if it were true, as suggested by the Senator, that the effect of the protective tariff is to control the prices of raw cotton or materially influence them, so long as the protective tariff was in vogue of course it would be a safeguard against any such disastrous consequences.

But I will not interrupt the Senator further, for of course the discussion of this question could not be settled in any short debate, and I know the Senator wants to proceed with the discussion of this schedule.

So far as concerns the question raised by the Senator from Utah, I will show I am correct before we get through this debate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should be very glad to discuss the general merits of the doctrine of protection as compared with free trade or a tariff for revenue alone. I have done it many times, sometimes to my satisfaction, sometimes otherwise. I did not intend, however, this afternoon or at any time during the progress of the consideration of this schedule to enter that general subject. What I am trying to do mainly is to convince my fellow Republican Senators, who view it from their own standpoint, that the duties attached to the articles in this schedule are altogether too high, and that they furnish the means, the instrument, for unjust exactions——

Mr. BACON. I wish the Senator very much success in that direction.

Mr. CUMMINS (continuing). Upon those who are compelled to bear this burden.

I had not quite reached the specific items when interrupted by the Senator from Utah. I want to call the attention of Senators on this side of the Chamber for a few moments to another question. When I have insisted in recent days upon a revision of the steel schedule I have been met with the reply that we ought not to revise the schedule until the Tariff Board investigates the subject and makes a report upon it.

I want your thoughtful and considerate attention to that subject: I believe it is true that a great many of the Senators on this side of the Chamber who will vote against the amendments that I have proposed—if they do vote against them—will do so upon the belief that we ought not to revise or change the duties of this schedule until the Tariff Board makes a report upon it.

I want you to consider very thoughtfully the consequence of that position taken at this time by the Republican Senate. First, you are taking that position—if you do take it—because the President of the United States has taken it. I do not want to say a word in disparagement of our Chief Executive. I do not feel any disparagement of the President, but I know that this view has acquired strength and has taken hold of the Senate, or at least this side of the Senate, because the President has announced it as a policy that there shall be no revision of any schedule of the tariff until the board has examined it and has, through him, furnished the information upon which we may proceed.

I take this opportunity of deploring such Executive interference with the legislative branch of the Government. I have heard a great deal of alarm expressed with regard to the judicial recall. I have heard great alarm voiced with respect to the review of judicial decisions through a popular vote. I am for neither one nor the other. I do not believe in the judicial recall and I do not believe in the review of judicial decisions by a popular vote. But the revolution that would be accomplished in American institutions by both these principles would be inconsequential and insignificant as compared with the revolution that has been in progress now for some years and which has firmly established a practice through which the President of the United States coerces in one way or another the action of the Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as I personally am concerned, I wish to say that the reason why I think it unwise at the present time to revise the metal schedule is not the fact that the President says that the Tariff Board should make a report, but the fact that if there is going to be a report made by the Tariff Board I believe it unwise to make a revision now. If upon a report being made we should find that there should be a revision, make it at that time.

There is nothing that hurts business so much as unsettled conditions. The tariff cut in two would not hurt as much as unsettled conditions have in the last two years. If a knew there was not going to be a Tariff Board report on this schedule, then I would try my best to meet the Senator from Iowa and see if, with the information we have, we could arrive at a rate which would at least protect the industries of this country so that they would not be destroyed. I do not want rates too high, and I certainly do not want them too low; and it is for that reason that I feel it would be unjust to go into the revision of this schedule at the present time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is the last man in the Chamber whose sincerity I would doubt, and therefore I accept what he has said as conclusive, with respect to himself; but I know as well as I can know anything that is not established by that tangible evidence which courts of law in their rigid procedure require; that the reason we can not advance immediately to a fair consideration of the metal schedule is because the policy has been proclaimed that we are to leave the tariff alone until the President's employees shall be enabled to reach the subject under consideration.

It to me is one of the distressful things that the Congress of the United States must follow a policy in legislation which has been adopted or promulgated by the Chief Executive, or be denounced throughout the country as disloyal and unfaithful to the administration. I have resented it before and I resent it again.

What has happened in the last few years in the United States has degraded Congress to that point where it must either accept these policies or be heralded everywhere as either unfaithful to the people or disloyal to the President. In looking over the field of general government, Mr. President, I still retain that very high respect and great veneration which I have always experienced in reference to our courts. I do not share in the least degree the sentiments of those who feel that our courts have invaded the domain of legislation. I believe that, on the whole, the courts of the United States and the judges of the United States and the courts of all the States and the judges of all the States have been more faithful, more loyal, more efficient in the administration of the law as well as in the administration of justice than any other department of government. The Executive of the United States is the aggressor in the governmental domain. We have gradually permitted the Executive to usurp substantially the powers and the privileges and the honors and the dignities of the legislative branch of the Government.

It is shocking to me to hear men from one end of this country to the other in discussion as to what sort of law the President wants or any former President wanted, and it will be shocking to me if the discussion continues with respect to any succeeding President. He has the right, it is his duty, it is his high privilege to recommend to the Congress any law that he believes will be for the welfare of the people of the country and bring to our attention any subject which he thinks we ought to consider, but there his interference with the legislative branch of the Government ought to cease, and it ought to be looked upon as impertinent, as inappropriate, as though he were to approach the judicial branch of the Government and ask it for a decision in accordance with a prearranged policy as to come to the legislative branch with anything more than a recommendation carrying with it the weight which its argument gives it, carrying with it the weight which the high personality of its author confers upon it; and I should like to see the Congress of the United States regain the freedom that it formerly exercised.

I should like to see it enjoy the liberty which it formerly possessed, so that each individual Member of Congress would hold himself responsible not to the President of the United States for the manner in which he performed his duties, but to the people who commissioned him to pass laws for their benefit and for their welfare. Without unduly emphasizing anything that has been done by the present Chief Executive, I thought it my duty to make this suggestion at this time, because I know it to be true that when this schedule is rejected by my Republican associates it will be rejected because it is believed by them that it is the policy of the President of the United States to enter upon no revision of the tariff until the Tariff Board has passed upon it.

My colleagues on this side of the Chamber, will you refresh your memories a moment with regard to the history of the Tariff Board? When did the Republicans of the Senate become so much attached to this board? There was a time when we who were in favor of a revision of the tariff were alone in favoring the creation of a tariff commission clothed with adequate power, independent in its operation, responsible to Congress, the only body of men under the laws and the Constitution of the United States who need the information gathered by a tariff commission. There was a time when those who were in favor of a revision insisted upon the creation of such a tariff commission in order to facilitate and to speed the revision of the tariff, in the hope that the duties might be at some time lowered to the point where they would not be a reproach upon the doctrine of protection.

If you will remember, prior to 1909 the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Iowa, my colleague, all introduced bills for the establishment of a tariff commission, not a tariff board whose duties should be to give information to the President, but for a tariff commission that would at the behest and under the command of Congress secure the information that Congress needed in order to deal successfully with such complicated and difficult matters.

What consideration did those bills receive in the Senate of the United States? None whatever, so long as they were being urged by men who wanted their help in the revision of the tariff, and so the session of Congress closed with nothing done.

Nineteen hundred and nine came along, and it was sought by the Senator from Indiana to attach to the tariff bill of that year a pargraph or a section for the establishment of a tariff commission, properly clothed with adequate power. The result of his effort was that there came into the tariff bill two or three sentences, not creating a tariff commission, but authorizing the President to employ skilled persons to enable him to apply accurately the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff law of that year; and we were compelled to accept that as a step in the right direction.

The year 1910 came, and you will all remember how earnestly some of us pleaded with you to bring on for hearing the bill that had been introduced by the Senator from Indiana and had come from the Finance Committee, changed somewhat, under the report of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. The session was drawing to a close. There were half a dozen of us, or more, who were insisting upon an opportunity to discuss this proposition and to vote upon the creation of a tariff commission; and you will not fail to remember that it was not until I incurred the displeasure of most of the Members of the Senate by refusing to consent to a time for voting upon the Lorimer case that we were able to secure any arrangement whatsoever for the consideration of the commission bill.

I want to say that my brother Republicans upon this side of the Chamber, when that time came, when the agreement was made, acted in absolute good faith and that they carried out with fidelity the arrangement into which we entered. But it was a late performance of a high and sacred duty, and we passed the bill at a time when obstacles interposed in the House prevented its passage there, inasmuch as it reached the House in the closing hours of the session.

Such is the history of the movement in the United States for a tariff commission—not a tariff board, but a tariff commission—properly endowed with power and continuous in its functions.

I think I am bound to say that a little later the most rigid of the high protectionists, the men who had theretofore obstructed the passage of the commission bill most effectually, had reached the conclusion that it was a wise addition to our governmental institutions, and it was then, or about that time, that the power of the present board was enlarged so that it could do effective work.

Let me not pass this moment in my speech without saying that I have the highest respect for the members of the board appointed by the President. I think he made wise selections. I believe each one of them is an honest man, and I believe each one of them is a faithful, intelligent, and capable man. I think their work as a whole ought to be commended, and I think it is of great value to the Congress of the United States as well as to the people of the United States. I compliment them and congratulate them upon the thoroughness of their investigation and the zeal with which they have accomplished a very difficult undertaking. They have given us very much that we had before, but they have given us some things that we had not before, and which will help us when we come to revise the wool schedule and the cotton schedule.

But, nevertheless, I am bound to say that I think the Tariff Board as it is now constituted is an impertinence. I think it is a part of that revolution which I suggested a few moments ago, and which I deplore so much, that passes all the real power of the United States into the hands of the Executive. It is for Congress to pass tariff laws. Congress is primarily responsible for the character of our tariff laws. It is not the President who is responsible for them. We want the information, and the medium through which the information is gathered ought to be a congressional instrumentality, responsible to us, and only to us.

I venture the suggestion that at the will of the President, and at his pleasure, this board can either gather the information which we desire or refuse to gather it. It can take a schedule that we think ought to be postponed to some other time or it can take one that is imminent.

Let us do what we ought to do and as soon as we can do it; and thereon I appeal to the Democrats. It is said that the Democrats here and in the House are opposed to a tariff commission. I hope they will reflect upon that subject and reconsider their determination, if that is the conclusion they have reached. It is just as important to you who propose tariff measures for the purpose of securing revenue as it is for us who propose tariff measure for the maintenance of protection. You may not devise these laws with the same object that we have in view, but you need the same general information in this great intricacy of commerce at the present time—an intricacy that has multiplied in the last few years. It used to be a plain, simple thing. Formerly it was not difficult to understand prices; formerly it was not hard to trace the movements of trade; but now, in this wonderful life, not peculiar to America, but existing everywhere throughout the world, it takes a skilled mind to understand commerce and the relations that its various parts bear to each other. I earnestly hope that Senators both on this side of the Chamber and the other will join in the effort to secure the establishment of such a valuable and helpful arm in the performance of our duties.

Now, I turn again to my Republican friends. Ought you to wait for the revision of the metal schedule until the Tariff Board, such as it is, has reported upon it? I can not believe you will. Our friends on the other side, who control the other branch of Congress, declare that they will make no appropriation for the maintenance of the Tariff Board. The Lord only knows—I do not speak it irreverently, but He only knows—how long our Democratic friends will be in control of the other branch of Congress; and are you to await that uncertainty in political life before you undertake to revise these duties, if you are convinced that they ought to be revised?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, assuming that the Tariff Board will not be continued in office; that our friends on the other side of the Capitol will insist on withholding the appropriation necessary for its continuance, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, in view of the fact that this board is in existence and that it has been hard at work and has presented its report upon two of the schedules which he thinks it is so necessary to revise, would it not be wise at least to defer the consideration of the schedules upon which they have not reported and proceed to the consideration of those upon which we already have the information necessary for their proper consideration?

I will say for myself, Mr. President, that I stand ready, without prompting from the Executive or from any other person, to consider and to assist in the enactment of any legislation looking toward a reduction upon any schedule on which we have proper information to justify a reduction; but I do say that I am not ready to take the dictum of the Representative from Alabama or the Senator from Iowa and use that as a basis for this important legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am quite aware that the dictum—although I do not just know what the Senator means by that—of the Senator from Iowa will have little or no influence with the Senator from Pennsylvania. I assure him now that during the whole course of this debate I will never in a single instance ask him to take my dictum for anything whatsoever. I will present before I have finished the result of investigations made by men quite as competent, quite as faithful, as the members of the Tariff Board.

I answer his first question: No; it is not wise to defer the revision of the metal schedule under the circumstances. If the Finance Committee had reported the wool bill before it reported the metal bill, I would have said instantly that it was our duty rather to take up the wool bill and dispose of it; but we have not the wool bill before us. We have the metal schedule before us, and inasmuch as I hope we will deal not only with wool and cotton but sugar and steel before we adjourn, I think it makes little difference in what order we discuss these several schedules.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest to the Senator that the Finance Committee acted upon the metal schedule first because the metal schedule came to the Senate first. At the time the metal schedule was taken up in the committee for hearings the wool schedule had not reached the Senate at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to answer the Senator from Pennsylvania further, and it is a part, naturally, of the discussion I was attempting to make. I have given one reason why we should proceed with the metal schedule, notwithstanding the fact that the Tariff Board has not reported upon it. I give another. It is that we know as much about the metal schedule, or a very large part of it, as we can possibly know after all the tariff commissions that may be created by law have entered into it and reported upon it. The essential facts with regard to the manufacture of iron and steel here and abroad are known. They have been collected by men who are abundantly capable of collecting them, and every Senator has access to the information. Of course, I shall not attempt to present it all to the Senate, but every Senator can know with some diligence every essential thing connected with the manufacture and sale of the heavier forms of iron and steel, and with regard to the more highly organized forms of iron and steel, if we will reduce those duties to the level of the Dingley law we will have accomplished something for the people of this country.

My amendment proposes a horizontal reduction upon these 28 paragraphs of 20 per cent. I do not believe there is a Senator here who, looking into them, will be able to convince an impartial mind that the reductions which I have proposed with regard to these smaller forms of manufacture reaches anywhere near the point that I have said the Republican Party ought to reach; and with regard to the heavier forms and those paragraphs in the schedule that I have rewritten, I intend to produce absolute proof as to their production and the cost of it, as well as the production abroad and its cost.

But there is another answer which is in my mind with regard to the delay. Suppose I prove to you that these duties are too high and that they do lay a burden upon the people of the United States, who ought to enjoy the profits or the advantage of the interim while the Tariff Board is reporting? I ask my brother Republican Senators, who laid these duties upon these industries? What did the men who laid them know with regard to the subject? How does it happen that they reached the conclusion that there should be a duty of $3.92 on steel rails or a duty of from $6 to $18 a ton upon structural iron and steel? How? They must have had some information with regard to the subject. It was alleged that they were attempting to perform or carry out the promises of the Republican platform and to fulfill the Republican standard of protection. I ask you who voted for the Payne-Aldrich Act, how did you know that these duties were required? You must have found it somehow. If you discovered it, the same information that was open to you then is open to us now. All the knowledge which the Finance Committee in 1909 had upon the subject, as well the Finance Committees of former years, we have, and not only all the knowledge that they had is in our possession, but a vast accumulation of information that has been gathered since. We know a great deal more about it now than was ever known before.

Yet I am told that the people of this country must bear this burden, if it is a burden, until the Tariff Board reports, and they must bear it because we do not know what duties ought to be laid upon these articles in order to protect American industries. That is not an answer which will be accepted by the people of the United States who are not directly interested in these industries. When it is recognized that we have this knowledge, that we have all the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of 1909, that we have 1,000 pages of hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate in 1912, that we have the long-continued examinations and investigations of the Commissioner of Corporations, of the Bureau of the Census, of the Immigration Commission, of special agents who have gone up and down Europe in order to ascertain precisely what we want to know, the plea for delay will be overruled by the great body of the voters.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator from Iowa has given a great deal of time and study to the steel industry. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes that there is anything like live or living competition in the steel industry of the United States to-day?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering that question as it relates to what I call the heavier forms of iron and steel, I say no; there is no such thing as real, substantial competition. Answering it with respect to a great many of the more finely organized forms of iron and steel, I think there is competition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that all the members of the Finance Committee who listened to the appeals of the independent manufacturers of this country was convinced beyond question that there is competition, and of the severest kind. In fact, it was the appeal of the independent manufacturers of this country that made me go into the details of the cost of production of these articles from their own books, as I have done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not had time to read the report of the Finance Committee, but upon that statement I shall take great pleasure in doing it, because if there is any real competition in the steel industry in the sense that it would transfer any of the benefits of revision to the masses of the people, I should be glad to know of it, and it would have very much to do with me when I come to cast my vote on the proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, so far as the statement of the Senator from Utah is concerned, as to the testimony of the various manufacturers who came before the Finance Committee, it is true that each of those manufacturers contended that there was competition, but I will ask the Senator if it is not also true that whenever the question was asked—and it was repeatedly asked—if there was any competition as to prices, it was found that the prices obtaining were uniform or practically uniform throughout the country; and if it was not admitted by the independents, who were claiming that they were competitors of the United States Steel Corporation, that the United States Steel Corporation fixed the price of the product, and that they invariably followed that price?

Mr. SMOOT. Answering the Senator from North Carolina, I will say that it was testified that the prices were always the same for this reason, that no matter whether the independent manufacturers advanced the price or not, all other manufacturers would have to meet it and did meet it; that in ordinary times, when there was more production than there was demand for it, the Steel Corporation made the price, but whenever there was a lack of goods manufactured, many, many times the independents made the prices and the Steel Corporation followed it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, and upon the statement made by the Senator from Utah, and the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to know whether the masses of the people are going to get any benefit out of this controversy.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that there are many rates which are proposed to be reduced that the ultimate consumer will never get one iota of benefit from. For instance, we will take fishhooks at 40 cents a gross.

Mr. BORAH. Let us take something more practical. Let us take practically everything that we eat and practically everything that we wear. Are they getting any benefit from any matter we are dealing with here?

A few years ago we put several hundred articles on the free list, and the masses of the people did not get a color of a cent's benefit from any one of them, because there was a power in the American market place which controlled the price and fixed it regardless of the question what the tariff was.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to reply to the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Utah——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina, if he desires to make a further statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah says that the independents had to follow the prices fixed by the Steel Corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. In certain cases.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true, provided the Steel Corporation reduced their price. Then the independents, of course, would have to reduce their prices in order to meet that. It is not true that where the Steel Corporation increased its price the independents were compelled also to increase theirs; but, as a matter of fact, it was testified that whenever the Steel Corporation increased their prices the independents made a like increase of prices to meet that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that was on account of the demand of the market. Of course the independents, just the same as the Steel Corporation, get all they can possibly get, because there are times when they are actually compelled to sell below cost, as they testified. That condition does not exist only in the steel industry, but it exists in every kind of business.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the Senator from Idaho suggests, that will likely continue as long as we have a combination in this country that absolutely controls the price of the product; and we will have that combination in this country unless we break it up through the courts or unless we break it up by admitting foreign competition that will force them to reduce their prices; and it is the purpose of the Democrats in proposing this reduction to break that competition by allowing foreign competition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho, but I hope that he will be brief.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from North Carolina says we are going to give the masses a benefit by permitting the foreigner to come in. Now, we tried that with reference to timber. It was said: If you import timber from Canada the home builder would get cheaper lumber. Therefore we took off about a million and a quarter dollars of revenue per year and lowered the price of lumber, and the home builder has not got the color of a cent of benefit from the transaction. That million and a quarter dollars went into somebody's pocket, but not into the home builder's pocket.

Mr. SMOOT. And also, in answer to the Senator, I will call his attention to the fact that as to many of the articles upon the free list, their prices are controlled just the same in this country as are the prices of articles that carry a duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. The only purpose——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to proceed, I think, with my argument, if Senators will allow me.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me one minute to reply to the Senator from Utah and to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I concede that when the prices in this country, fixed by combination or otherwise, exceed world prices, all that can be accomplished is to force down prices in this country, where monopoly exists, to the level of world prices through competition from abroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I find myself differing somewhat from my friends upon both sides of the Chamber. If anyone indulges in the delusion or in the hope that a modification or adjustment of the tariff law will solve all the ills or remedy all the ills of modern life, he is doomed to disappointment. It will not. The proper adjustment of tariff duties is one of the things that will tend toward the proper and wise solution of these problems. If we had in the United States free, full, and substantial compensation in every industry it would make no difference whatsoever whether the duties were high or low, for the price of every American product would soon seek and maintain an American level, but competition in many of the industries of this country has been annihilated, has been driven out, and those who are able to control or have the power to fix prices are protected against foreign competition by these duties. So long as they are protected in no more than a fair American price, I am willing to be confined to the remedy of dissolution and destruction of trusts and combinations, but so far as they are protected by the higher or the excessive duty, I want that removed in order to subject them to the danger of foreign invasion, knowing that when they apprehend importation when prices are raised above a fair point, they will not be so likely to raise them above the fair point. The only way in which they can then make undue exactions upon our commerce is to enter into combinations with the producers abroad. That may happen. It has happened in times past. Whenever it does happen, the reduction of duties upon imports is entirely futile so far as our protection is concerned. We must then turn to some other remedy. It is a great mistake to suppose that this Government of ours and this life of ours, complicated and intricate as they are, can be brought into proper relation by any one thing done by Congress. We are engaged in the greatest work of modern times. No other country in the world ever attempted so great and difficult a duty as confronts the Government of the United States. I do not believe that there is any other nation on the face of the earth that has presented to it anything like the complications and intricacies of relation between our people and the Government—the Federal Government and the State governments—and the relation between the Government and foreign countries, as present themselves to our Government at this time. We shall have to approach the problem by slow degrees; we shall have to be thoughtful about everything we do; but when we see a thing that ought to be done, to turn aside from it because we have not the benefit of some instrumentality that we should be glad to have is to abdicate our duty and is to abandon the functions which the law and the Constitution impose upon us.

Mr. President, of course I apologize for taking two hours in what might be called a preface to the address which I had expected to deliver. I have the same excuse that all of you have. Whenever you rise to address the Senate, it is to occupy only a small part of the time actually consumed. I now come to the examination of the pending schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it be agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, I will ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. CUMMINS. That will be entirely agreeable to me.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, resuming its consideration where we stopped this morning, and not retracing the numbers already passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that, beginning at the point where it was left off this morning, the calendar be taken up under Rule VIII, unobjected cases to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is done, Mr. President, I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection that order will be made. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Utah to resume the consideration of the calendar of unobjected cases? The Chair hears none; and the Secretary will state the first case on the calendar.

PROCEDURE IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "conclusive," to strike out "as its judgmnt may require" and insert "upon the merits," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no judgment shall be set aside or reversed or new trial granted by any court of the United States in any case, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless, in the opinion of the court to which application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall appear that the error complained of has injuriously affected the substantial rights of the parties. The trial judge may in any civil case tried before a jury submit to the jury in connection with the general verdict specific issues of fact arising upon the pleadings and evidence, and he and any court to which the case shall thereafter be taken on writ of error shall have the power to direct judgment to be entered either upon the verdict or upon the special findings, if conclusive, upon the merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly delay the bill, but I want to look at it somewhat before it is acted upon by the Senate. I recollect when we had the discussion of the bill before the committee that there were some features of the bill to which I very seriously objected. I can not tell, merely from the reading of the bill at the desk, whether my objections were cured by the amendments which were adopted. I recollect particularly that I was seriously concerned by what I understood to be the provision of the bill which would make the exclusion or the admission of improper evidence not a sufficient ground for the reversal of a decision if, in the opinion of the reviewing court, it would not have affected the final judgment, so far as its merits were concerned. I think that is a most dangerous proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Senator from Georgia object to having the bill now read?

Mr. BACON. Of course not. I supposed the bill had been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And considered for a few minutes? It is a very short bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the bill has been read, and is now being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I understood the bill had been read when I made the point in reference to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] desires to be present when this bill is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. I do not object to its present consideration so far as the discussion of it goes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator from Maryland asked me to object if the bill came up while he was absent, and I shall have to object.

Mr. BACON. It is a most important and far-reaching bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

WRITS OF ERROR FROM STATE COURTS.

The bill (S. 3749) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, after the word "follows," in line 7, to strike out:

SEC. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in the court of the United States. The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, at their discretion, award execution or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 237. It shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court, although the decision in such case may have been against the validity of the State statute or authority claimed to be repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, or in favor of the title, right, privilege, or immunity claimed under the Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority of the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 237 of chapter 10 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 237. It shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to the Supreme Court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court, although the decision in such case may have been against the validity of the State statute or authority claimed to be repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, or in favor of the title, right, privilege, or immunity claimed under the Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority of the United States."

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, there was a clerical error in the bill as made up. The words "so as to read as follows," on line 6, page 1, should have been "by adding thereto the following."

I now move that amendment. What is proposed is an addition to section 237. I think the committee are unanimous upon that point in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "amended," it is proposed to strike out the words "so as to read as follows" and to insert the words "by adding thereto the following"; so as to read:

That section 237 of chapter 10 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Is that the only amendment which has been offered, Mr. President?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think, if that language is changed, on page 2 of the bill the words "section 237" should also be stricken out.

Mr. ROOT. Yes; they should be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 16, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "section 237."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, to explain its effect. I do not make the request on my own account, but there are Senators who desire to hear it explained.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the original bill was framed so as to give, in cases where a right was claimed in a State court under the Constitution or laws of the United States and the decision was in favor of the right, the same right of appeal which exists under present law when the decision is against the right. The committee thought that, instead of throwing open the whole field, so that whenever there was a decision upon a claim of right under the Constitution or laws of the United States in favor of the right, the parties could always appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, it would be sufficient to accomplish the purpose to give the power to the Supreme Court to bring up such cases by certiorari. If everybody were given the right to appeal, we felt there would be a flood of cases coming up to the Supreme Court for the purpose of delay, and the Supreme Court calendar would be uselessly burdened.

The sole object of the bill, Mr. President, is to make it possible for the Supreme Court to pass upon Federal questions so as to have uniformity of law. I presume the bill arose out of the fact that there were decisions in the State of Washington and in the State of New York upon workingmen's compensation acts which were directly in opposition, the court in the State of Washington holding that such a law did not violate the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, while the court in the State of New York held that such a law did violate the fourteenth amendment. So we have in two States two different decisions regarding the effect of a provision of the Constitution of the United States.

This bill, giving the right of certiorari, will enable the Supreme Court to bring up such a question whenever it is necessary or desirable for the purpose of securing uniformity in the law; and, at the same time, it will not open the gates to a flood of appeals in cases where decisions have been rendered in favor of provisions of the Constitution or of the laws.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not yet quite understand what the present law is.

Mr. ROOT. The present law is, section 237 of the revision of the laws approved March 3, 1911, that whenever a claim of right is made in a State court under the Constitution or laws of the United States and the decision is against the claim, an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court of the United States; so that if any man in the State courts is denied a right that he claims under the Constitution or the laws of the United States he has an appeal to the Supreme Court. The law now gives that same right to a man where his claim is allowed, but, so far as the litigants themselves are concerned, there is no reason for it whatever. The only object of it was to enable the Supreme Court to secure uniformity of decision, and that, the committee thought, would be accomplished by giving the right of certiorari.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator illustrates that situation by referring to two decisions involving the same principle, in one of which it was favorable to the claimant and in another against him.

Mr. ROOT. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it seems to me that if the Supreme Court already has the power to order up one case it would also cover the other case, even though not ordered up.

Mr. ROOT. It has not, Mr. President. It does not proceed by certiorari. It depends upon whether the parties wish an appeal. The parties in the State of Washington apparently had no desire to appeal to the Supreme Court, and the parties in the State of New York could not appeal to the Supreme Court, and so there the decision stands. Under this bill as reported by the committee those parties who are dissatisfied with such a decision in the State of New York could go to the Supreme Court, and if that court thinks it desirable to secure uniformity in the decisions it brings that case up by certiorari.

Mr. BACON. If I understand correctly, Mr. President—and possibly it may elucidate the matter—as the law now stands, in case there is a claim denied where a party claims a right under the Constitution of the United States, that party can come to the Supreme Court of the United States to have that right adjudicated; but if the claim is allowed, the party on the other side, who is dissatisfied with it, under the present law would not have that privilege. This bill simply gives the opportunity for certiorari in such cases as the Supreme Court may deem sufficiently meritorious to warrant their being taken to the Supreme Court to have the matter adjudicated. That is the statement of the case as I understand it.

Mr. ROOT. Precisely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5956) to restore in part the rank of Lieuts. Thomas Marcus Molloy and Joseph Henry Crozier, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATHAN M'DANELD.

The bill (S. 4341) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nathan McDaneld was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws Nathan McDaneld, who was a private of Troop A, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said troop and regiment on the 27th day of July, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who reported the bill, is present, and I should like to ask him whether there was any evidence whatever to show that Mr. McDaneld did not desert from the Army? Is there any question as to the facts in the matter?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not recall exactly the facts in this particular case, as there have been a great many similar bills before the Committee on Military Affairs, but this is one of those cases in which the soldier, after serving, I think, in this instance, something like four years, left the service without authority or leave after the war was practically over. The committee thought that by reason of his long service, extending over a period of four years, which, as I recall, embraced service in a number of battles, and in view of the fact that he did not leave his command until after actual hostilities had ceased for a number of months, and having introduced some evidence that he was sick at the time, it would be proper to give him a pensionable status, as provided in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will refresh the Senator's memory by suggesting that the soldier served two terms of enlistment and was honorably discharged from the first one. It was in his second enlistment that he left the service, but the war was then about over.

Mr. JONES. The soldier served from October 13, 1860, until July 9, 1864, nearly four years.

Mr. LODGE. I see by reading the report that he served longer than that. He served from October, 1860, to July, 1864, and then reenlisted, and did not leave the service until the 27th of July, 1865.

Mr. WARREN. He served nearly four years in his first enlistment, when he received an honorable discharge, and then he enlisted for a second term and left the service, as many another man did, thinking the war was over. The proper proclamation to that effect had not been made, but there was no fighting after that time, and he, like many others, is marked on the records as being a deserter.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will examine the report, he will find that this man went home to visit his sick wife after he thought the war was over, when there was nothing further to do, and he did not go back to his regiment. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not have the opportunity to read the report. All I desired was to ascertain the facts in the case. On the statements which have been made I have no objection to the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, while the bill purports to give the beneficiary a pensionable status, the amendment recommended by the committee provides distinctly that he shall not have a pensionable status.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the way it is in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; it provides "that no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Nathan McDaneld."

REGULATION OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

The bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been twice read.

Mr. BACON. I should like to hear it read again, if it is not too long.

Mr. BOURNE. It is a long bill. It is a bill which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce—it is a committee bill—regulating radio telegraphy.

Mr. BACON. Wireless telegraphy?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes. It is a corollary to the treaty which the Senate ratified some two or three weeks ago. There is no objection to having the bill read if the Senator from Georgia would like to have it read.

Mr. BACON. It is a matter that has been before the Committee on Foreign Relations, so far as the treaty is concerned, and has been considerably discussed and considered in various aspects.

I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who was active in that consideration, if he is familiar with the terms of this bill, and whether he considers it in accordance with the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined the bill in detail, but it is a bill prepared by the Committee on Commerce and has their unanimous support, and is, I believe, in harmony with the provisions of the treaty which our committee reported. It is a long bill. I believe it to be entirely——

Mr. BACON. I do not request that it be read, but I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon to state the general features of the bill.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator from Georgia that this bill was referred, with other bills, to a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce. On the subcommittee were the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations; the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I.

The original bill was a departmental bill, and in the bill the provision was made for authorization of such rules and regulations as the department might wish to make in accordance with whatever the President or the Secretary of Commerce and Labor thought best. The committee thought it would be much better to have in the bill itself the exact confines of the activities of private interests. So the bill was worked out on those lines.

It specifies just exactly what private interests can and what they can not do. It fits the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations with relation to the treaty and its ratification by the Senate, and is corollary to a treaty that was passed, and it is necessary in order to carry out the treaty.

Hearings were held and all commercial interests given an opportunity to appear before the subcommittee. A day was taken therefor; the hearings are printed, and every Member of the Senate has had copies of the hearings furnished to him.

I will state the main features of the bill. The first is to secure an ascertainment, so that everybody may be cognizant of the exact number of activities that are in operation. That is provided for under the licensing features of all instruments. Second, a licensing of individual operators. It is compulsory with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that upon application these licenses shall be issued. The third is to minimize the possibility of any interference under the present state of the art of wireless telegraphy. This is minimized by the rules and regulations embodied in the bill itself.

Under the present development of the science there are some wave lengths up to 6,600 meters. These would be equivalent to some 34 telephone lines. The Government is given the right to the exclusive use of eight of these telephone lines, in effect, which would be the wave lengths from 600 meters to 1,600 meters. Amateurs are given the right to use up to 200-meter wave lengths, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor can, in his discretion, issue special permits to use other waves to amateurs or individuals who are studying along the line of wireless telegraphy.

Then a pure sound is provided in the bill, which is necessary in order to minimize the possibility of interference. To the commercial interests of the country are left the use of 26 telephone lines, using that term as a simile. So the restriction upon the commercial interests is not an unnecessary one to attain the object of the bill, the purpose being to prevent interference so far as it is possible to do so in the present development of the art.

Provision is made in the bill that as the art develops and improvements are made the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may extend the scope of the activities of commercial and private interests, but he can not limit them other than the limitations as they exist in the bill.

Then, a clause is contained in the bill which provides for the public receiving continuous service. The United States already has in existence, through the Navy and War Departments, a chain of stations from one coast around to the other, with the exception of two gaps held by private interests. There is a provision in the bill that in case the commercial interests fail to give service in those two gaps the Government may furnish the service during such period of failure, so that the public at large can have continuous service, making a charge for that of not more, as I remember, than $1.50 for a certain number of words. I think that is provided for under the treaty.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that the reason which prompted my inquiry is this: This matter has been before the Foreign Relations Committee for several years on the question whether we would recommend to the Senate the ratification of the treaty which was proposed between all of the leading nations, including the United States, with reference to this subject, and the matter was delayed for years before the Committee on Foreign Relations, because of the fact that very large interests were involved, and also because the science was in a measure undeveloped, and we thought it best to wait.

But the fact was brought to the attention of the committee, within the recent past, that there was soon to be in London a convention of the representatives of the different powers for the purpose of formulating, as I understand, regulations which would cover very much the grounds spoken of in this bill, and it was said that if we did not ratify the treaty we would not be permitted to send a delegate to that convention. That was the main consideration which induced the Committee on Foreign Relations to report the treaty to the Senate, and the Senate acted upon it, and the treaty was ratified.

Now, the question in my mind is whether or not this bill is in any manner an anticipation of the work which is to be done by that convention when it meets in London.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who belongs to each of these committees, possibly is in a position to give me the desired information somewhat more directly than one who is not upon the Foreign Relations as well as the Commerce Committee.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I would state that the ratification of the treaty contemplates our attendance at the convention to be held in London in June. The delegates have already been designated, and the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill makes an appropriation for their expenses. This bill is entirely in line with the treaty. Of course it contains additional features to make it applicable to our own situation.

There are two things, I should say, in general secured by this bill. First, the carrying out of the obligations imposed upon us by the treaty or convention; second, local regulations. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I do not think we ought to wait until after the convention in June before we pass this bill. The recent Titanic disaster emphasizes very strongly the necessity of legislation upon this subject.

In the next place, radical changes by the convention at London do not seem probable. Propositions for modifications have already been published. While I take it these do not preclude the bringing forward of other propositions at the meeting itself, so far as regards those which have been presented and published they would be quite in harmony with this bill. There might be a necessity for some amendments to the bill after the convention, but I do not anticipate that any radical changes would be required.

Mr. BACON. I will simply ask the Senator whether or not this bill covers the question of the transmission of marine messages?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BACON. I mean the transmission of messages from one ship to another.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. All those grounds are covered with considerable care.

Mr. BACON. I agree with the Senator that we should have legislation on this subject as speedily as possible, and I was only anxious to know whether our work was of such a character that it would have to be done over again as soon as the convention in London shall have acted. Of course, under the statement made by the Senator, if there should be such regulations promulgated by that convention the amendments necessary could very readily be drafted upon the law.

Mr. BURTON. I think they could readily be made, and I believe I am correct in saying that they could be quite as readily made if the groundwork afforded by this legislation should now be enacted into law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Ohio. Does the paragraph on page 6 requiring every station to designate a certain definite wave length and that the wave length shall not exceed 600 meters or shall exceed 1,600 meters comply with the terms of the convention?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes; I think so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My recollection is that that convention, which was agreed to, provided that every coastal station shall have definite'y a 300-meter wave length and a 600-meter wave length. This paragraph seems to contemplate——

Mr. BOURNE. To what paragraph is the Senator referring?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The paragraph on page 6.

Mr. BOURNE. The first paragraph?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The paragraph reads:

> First. Every station shall be required to designate a certain definite wave length as the normal sending and receiving wave length of the station. This wave length shall not exceed 600 meters or it shall exceed 1,600 meters.

Mr. BOURNE. That complies exactly with the Berlin convention.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My recollection of the terms of the convention is that every coastal station was definitely required to maintain an apparatus for two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, the evident purpose being that they should always be ready to receive messages sent by either of those wave lengths. But this paragraph seems to contemplate that any station can maintain a wave length anywhere from 100 to 1,600 meters.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will read the bill through, he will see that provision was made in the bill that amateurs may take and use up to 200 meters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That does not cover the point. I think the Senator from Oregon has not understood me. If we are under treaty obligation with these other countries to maintain regulations under which coastal stations shall always be ready to receive messages of 300 or 600 meter wave lengths, should we not provide in the bill that those coastal stations shall always be ready to receive messages of those wave lengths? Should we allow them in this bill to select any wave length they please below 600 and over 1,600 meters?

Mr. BOURNE. I am not a specialist on wireless telegraphy. My understanding from the governmental representatives, the Commissioner of Navigation, and from Lieut. Commander Todd, was to the effect that this is in actual compliance with the first regulations under the Berlin convention and that there is given to the Government the right of way between the 600-meter wave length and the 1,600-meter wave length.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true, but——

Mr. BOURNE. This provision is for that special purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator from Nebraska will remember, the treaty was to limit certain wave lengths to the use of the Government. I have sent for the treaty to see whether I am right, but my remembrance of the treaty is that all was excluded between 300 and 1,600 meters.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, it is required that the wave lengths should be of 300 or 600 meters. It is all set forth in the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. BURTON (reading):

> Two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, are authorized for general public service. Every coastal station opened to such service shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths.

The exclusion is 600 to 1,600 meters.

Mr. LODGE. I see.

Mr. BURTON. In a way I think the criticism of the Senator from Nebraksa is well taken. However, in the granting of licenses that can very readily be taken care of, and I do not see that it is necessary to insert any provision in regard to it.

It will be noticed that the provision on page 6, to which the Senator from Nebraska has called attention, refers to every station, while the treaty refers to those public stations which are used for communication with the sea.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there is still power in the authority issuing the licenses to require every coastal station to maintain apparatus for a wave length of 300 meters and also for a 600-meter wave length, then my suggestion is not of any importance, but if there is no provision for that power in the licensing authority, then I think this paragraph ought to be broadened, because we are certainly under an international obligation to constantly maintain at these coastal stations apparatus ready to receive a 300-meter wave length message and a 600-meter wave length message.

Mr. BOURNE. You would be bound by that, anyhow.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; we would be bound by it, it is true. If we are bound by it, our legislation ought to provide that the coastal station should be ready.

Mr. BOURNE. I will say, for the information of the Senator from Nebraska, that in the issuance of licenses the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will give that information, so that they will know exactly what wave lengths each instrument is using or each agency has.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the licensing power has the authority to make that condition, I think that will be sufficient.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to say, in reference to this matter, that I have received very many protests against a measure that should tend to blot out, so to speak, independent wireless telegraphy. I wish to ask the Senator who has the measure in charge whether it will prevent the independent use of wireless telegraphy?

Mr. BOURNE. I will state for the information of the Senator from New Jersey that as far as possible provisions are made in the bill to give the widest possible activity to the independent or commercial instruments. They have all had opportunities of being heard, and all their objections were taken into consideration by the committee drawing the bill. The main purpose of the bill is to minimize the possibilities of interference and increase the efficiency of the service, which is for the general benefit of everybody, the commercial interests as well as the general welfare of the public itself.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all encompassed in the bill?

Mr. BOURNE. As far as possible, up to the present development of the art of wireless telegraphy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no amendment to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think it would be advisable to have a clause added to give effect to what the Senator from Nebraska has suggested, and I was engaged in drafting one, if I can be indulged for a moment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think I can suggest phraseology. It is to add at the end of line 11:

And every coastal station opened for general public service shall have an available wave length either of 300 or 600 meters.

I do not think that is entirely necessary, but it makes it more clear that the terms of the convention are complied with.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me if the coastal station is required to have a 300-meter wave length, it should also be required to have apparatus for a 600-meter wave length.

Mr. ROOT. I will put it in this shape, and I will ask the Senator's attention to it. It is to add the words of the treaty:

Every coastal station shall be limited to two wave lengths for general public service, one of 300 and the other of 600 meters.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the words of the treaty.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, just one suggestion. It is to say "use" rather than "be limited to."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that correction is proper. It seems to me that every coastal station should be required to have apparatus for a 300 and a 600 meter wave length to comply with the treaty. Then, in addition to that, it can have anything above 1,600, but the requirement should be for 300 and for 600 meter wave lengths.

Mr. ROOT. I propose to add the very words of the treaty regulation:

Two wave lengths—one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters—are authorized for general public service. Every coastal station opened to such service shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if his proposed amendment were adopted whether it would not restrict the activity of the coastal station? They would be limited to the exclusive use, then, of those two wave lengths of 300 and 600 meters. As I understand the science as at present developed, they have 6,600-meter wave lengths, and the length of the wave is one of the important factors as to the area of the zone of activity. It seems to me that the Senator would prevent the accomplishment of what he seeks by the limitation he would place upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Oregon misunderstands the situation. The treaty requires every coastal station to be ready at all times to receive any message that is sent either on a 300-meter wave length or a 600-meter wave length. We have to carry out that treaty, and we should require all coastal stations to be equipped to do that. That will not prevent them, however, from having apparatus also capable of receiving a 400-meter or a 500-meter or a 1,700-meter wave length. It simply requires that they shall at least be ready to receive a 300 or a 600 meter wave length, so as to be able to take what may come in from the ocean.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New York send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the bill provides that this wave length shall not exceed 600 meters. It may be less—it may be 300 meters or 400 meters or 500 meters—but the provision is that it shall not exceed 600 meters or it shall exceed 1,600 meters. It seems to me it leaves the field wide open for the provision of the convention and does not interfere at all with it.

Mr. LODGE. This is to compel them to have an apparatus which shall take either a 300 or a 1,600 wave length. It will not confine them to other lengths, as I understand it.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is not a limitation; it is a requirement.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a limitation; it only requires them to have certain lengths available.

Mr. BOURNE. I understand the purpose would be to have the receiving instruments so attuned that they would receive at any time a wave length of 300 meters or a wave length of 600 meters. If the suggested amendment of the Senator from New York can be read, I am perfectly willing to accept it, if it does not militate against the purpose of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I think the amendment of the Senator from New York is in the nature of a limitation. It seems to me that what we want to do is to make sure that we shall be able to have wave lengths of 300 and 600 meters, and they may use any others that they want as the bill provides.

Mr. BURTON. I think I can suggest an amendment that will make it perfectly clear, if the Senator from New York will allow me. It is to add at the end of section 11 the following words:

Every coastal station opened to general public service shall be authorized to use two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, and all such stations shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths.

That is the language of the treaty. The objection that I find to the amendment as proposed by the Senator from New York is that it creates a restriction, which is not intended, I think, by the convention.

Mr. BACON. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio would be construed to be a restriction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio offer his amendment?

Mr. SHIVELY. It seems to me the language employed by the Senator from Ohio would not be a requirement.

Mr. BURTON. Every such station, or all such stations, shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths. That makes it compulsory. They have the option between the two.

Mr. BACON. Would not that be exclusive of anything else?

Mr. BURTON. The language I have suggested is the language of the convention.

Mr. BACON. It is not the purpose, I understand, to limit it.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think it is exclusive. I suggested a few minutes ago the words "shall be available," but I think it better to follow the exact language of the convention—"shall use."

Mr. BACON. As I understand the purpose of the treaty, it is to require them to have those two wave lengths, but not to prohibit them from having others if they wish.

Mr. ROOT. The language of the convention regulation contains a specific reservation of authority, and if we are not going to conform exactly to the general provisions as to wave lengths, we ought not to enlarge the powers of the stations that follow that reservation. The treaty regulation is first the general proposition:

Two wave lengths, one of 300 meters and the other of 600 meters, are authorized for general public service. Every coastal station opened to such service shall use one or the other of these two wave lengths. During the whole time that the station is open to service it shall be in a condition to receive calls according to its wave length, and no other wave length shall be used by it than the service of general public correspondence.

Then comes in a reservation of authority for each of the treaty powers, and that is as follows:

Each Government may, however, authorize in coastal stations the employment of other wave lengths designed to insure long-range service or any service other than for general public correspondence established in conformity with the provisions of the convention, provided such wave lengths do not exceed 600 meters or that they do exceed 1,600 meters.

I am afraid that none of the language we have suggested here quite meets that regulation.

Mr. LODGE. If I may make a suggestion as to an amendment, why is it not simple to make it read:

That all coastal stations shall be required to conform to the provisions of the Berlin convention.

Mr. BOURNE. I will accept that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have drawn an amendment which embodies that idea, which I should like to submit:

Every coastal station opened to general public service shall at all times be ready to receive messages of such wave lengths as are required by the convention.

Mr. ROOT. The convention requires us to make regulations which will exclude them from doing it. They not only must be ready to receive messages upon those wave lengths, but they are prohibited from using other wave lengths except under the specific conditions which are stated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is already provided for in section 12. That is the section which prohibits them from using anything between 600 and 1,600 meters of wave lengths and allows them to use everything below and above. So this will simply require them to conform to the terms of the convention. I send my amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. LODGE. I think that my proposition is rather a simpler one, requiring the postal stations to conform to the provisions of the Berlin convention.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the provision in the treaty read by the Senator from New York, it is simply an agreement that we may authorize the use of certain wave lengths, and that would not be covered by such a provision as the one suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. It would require something affirmative.

Mr. LODGE. Then the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] would be more complete.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask to have my amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 11, after the word "meters," insert:

Every coastal station opened to general public service shall at all times be ready to receive messages of such wave lengths as are required by the Berlin Convention.

Mr. BACON. That still does not relate to a wave length other than the two mentioned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are already provided for.

Mr. LODGE. They are already provided for in the bill.

Mr. BACON. That is, the provision in the bill authorizing above 1,600 meters?

Mr. LODGE. They are excluded between 600 and 1,600 meters by the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that it may be read again.

The Secretary again read Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before the bill is finally passed I wish to say that the statement that it comes with the unanimous recommendation of all the members of the Committee on Commerce is not altogether correct. I, as a member of the committee, reserved the right to oppose certain parts of the measure, and my opposition has been rather intensified than otherwise since then. However, I recognize that when the treaty was up I had the same argument to offer in opposition to it, and I did not succeed very well. I am not very fond of butting my head against a stone wall, so I will not urge the objections I urged then.

I only want it understood that I think this is, on the whole, an unwise piece of legislation; and that, if I had the say so, I should strenuously oppose it and vote against it, but I do not propose to urge my objection at this time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRITTENDEN STREET NW., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 6156) to direct that Crittenden Street NW., between Iowa Avenue and Seventeenth Street NW., be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETRIAL OF MILITARY ACADEMY CADETS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood that when this bill came up a certain other cadet was to be included. I have not his name at this time, and I should be glad, therefore, to have this bill go over until I can be prepared to offer the amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, this bill refers solely and only to four cadets who were tried by a certain military tribunal which was convened on the 16th day of August, 1911. The cadet to whom the Senator from Kansas refers could not be included in this bill, because he was not tried by that tribunal.

Mr. CURTIS. Do I understand that this bill does not apply to cadets who were dismissed?

Mr. DU PONT. It does not apply to the cadet to whom the Senator refers.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; I withdraw my request.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask whether any report accompanies the bill?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from New York that no formal report has been made to accompany the bill, but I stand ready to explain it if the Senator from New York or any other Senator should so desire.

Mr. ROOT. I should be very glad to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. DU PONT. This bill authorizes the court-martial which tried four cadets to reconvene for a reconsideration of the sentence. The sentence was imposed under the former regulations of the Academy, which were changed on the 15th of June last, but which had not been superseded by the new regulations, so far as their promulgation was concerned, until the 1st of September, as a certain period of time was necessary for the printing of the new regulations and forwarding them to the Academy.

The old regulations provided that any cadet who was shown to have used any alcoholic stimulant—a glass of beer, for instance—should be dismissed, no distinction being made between the case of a man who went off and became disgracefully drunk and disorderly and a man who merely drank a glass of beer; in other words, the West Point code in this respect was a Draconian law, which was also the case so far as it related to several other particulars, one of which was hazing; but Congress changed the regulations in regard to this two years ago, since which time there has been no difficulty.

In this particular case four cadets were tried on evidence which was furnished by themselves under compulsion. They were ordered to answer certain questions implicating themselves. The offenses themselves were not of a serious character. There was no drunkenness involved, no disorder, and no disgraceful conduct of any kind. It was simply and plainly a violation of the rules of the Academy as set forth in the old regulations, which would not necessarily have involved dismissal under the new and amended regulations.

When the matter was referred to the President he was satisfied that an injustice had been done, particularly so, as the members of the court, upon being appealed to, reported that they understood they were bound by the text of the former regulations.

Upon these grounds, therefore, this joint resolution has been prepared. It was drawn up by the Judge Advocate General of the Army; it is believed to be of a legal character, and calculated to render substantial justice to the parties concerned.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been listening to the statement of the chairman of the committee, and I believe that he states a case that includes the young man to whom I have referred. That being true, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill just objected to by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. That would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, would it not?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think there is any unanimous-consent agreement except to take up bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is mistaken about that. The unanimous-consent agreement was——

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to have read the terms of the agreement. I was present when it was entered into, and I did not understand that it was——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did not permit the Chair to conclude his sentence. As the Chair understands, the unanimous-consent agreement was that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. I was present when the request was made, but I did not understand it to include merely unobjected cases.

Mr. ROOT. We have been on the calendar twice to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. I was here the second time the calendar was taken up, and I think the agreement did not include the stipulation that none but unobjected bills should be considered. The request was simply that the Senate proceed to consider bills on the calendar under Rule VIII. I should like, in this connection, Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state that other bills have been passed over which Senators would have been glad to have taken up, but they were passed over because they would create discussion.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw his objection to the consideration of this bill. It is very important for these young men, if they are to go back to the academy, that action should be taken quickly. I should like to say that the department favors the bill. These young men were tried for an offense, the penalty for which at the time it was committed was expulsion; but the War Department decided that the regulations were entirely too harsh, and they were modified. If the same offense were to be committed at the academy now there would be no such penalty imposed. When the cases of these young men were tried the court-martial understood that they had no discretion except to expel the four cadets. It was so stated by the commandant at the academy. The old regulations have been modified, and all that this bill does is to reconvene the court-martial and give them the privilege of rehearing these cases, subject to the regulations that should have governed at the time of the trial. As I understand, the members of the court-martial insisted at the time of the trial that they should apply the regulations that were in force at the time the offense was committed.

Mr. BORAH. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, if they had applied the regulations existing at the time of the trial the cadets would not have been expelled.

Mr. BORAH. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

WASHINGTON IMPROVEMENT & DEVELOPMENT CO.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 142) to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting to the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MARSHAL'S DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 4461) permitting chief office deputy United States marshals to act as disbursing officers for their principals in cases of emergency was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in case of the illness or necessary absence of any United States marshal from his office his chief office deputy may, with the approval of the Attorney General first obtained, act in the marshal's place and discharge all of the duties required by law of such United States marshal in his capacity as a disbursing officer; the official bond or bonds of the marshal in such cases to cover and apply to the acts of the person so acting for him, and such person shall while so acting be subject to all the liabilities and penalties prescribed by law for the official misconduct in like cases of the United States marshals.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The bill (S. 4679) to amend section 95 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 95 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 95. The State of New Hampshire shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of New Hampshire. Terms of the district court shall be held at Portsmouth on the last Tuesday in October, at Concord on the last Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in December, and at Littleton on the third Tuesday in September.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADAM D. SHRINER.

The bill (S. 1792) to correct the military record of Adam D. Shriner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers," and insert "the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof," and in line 12, after the word "That," to strike out "other than as set forth, no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act," and insert "no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Adam D. Shriner, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 10th day of May, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION—HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah withhold the motion?

Mr. SMOOT. I withhold the motion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before the motion is put, I desire to say that before to-morrow evening, at such time as may be convenient, I hope the Senate may go into executive session, in order to consider certain nominations which have been pending for some time and upon which it is important the Senate should act.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I will modify my motion and move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah withhold his motion?

Mr. SMOOT. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I give no notice, but I hope to-morrow we shall be able to take up the calendar where we left off to-day and go through with unobjected cases, as there are some House bills and also some very important Senate bills that ought to pass and go to another place.

Mr. SMOOT. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 8, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 7, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker, who took the chair amid general applause.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, quicken, we beseech Thee, the godlike in us as individuals and as a people, and inspire us with greater zeal, greater energy, greater courage, a deeper patriotism, that the evils which doth so easily beset us may be diminished and the good accentuated; that strife may cease and harmony prevail in every home, in every State throughout our Union; that the genius of our Republic may more and more obtain. To the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

Office of the superintendent: Clerk of class 3; stenographer and typewriter, $900; chief engineer, $1,400; 5 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; electrical machinist, $1,200; captain of the watch, $1,200; 2 lieutenants of the watch, at $840 each; 40 watchmen; carpenter, $1,000; electrician, $1,200; machinist, painter, and plumber, at $1,000 each; 3 dynamo tenders, at $900 each; 7 skilled laborers or mechanics, at $840 each; messenger; foreman of laborers, $840; 10 firemen; 11 conductors of elevators, at $720 each; 17 laborers; 3 second-class firemen, at $660 each; 4 forewomen of charwomen, at $300 each; 77 charwomen; gardener, $720; in all, $105,960.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why the salary of the 40 watchmen mentioned in line 11, page 77, is not given.

Mr. BURLESON. Because the salary of watchmen being fixed by law, it is not necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Where the salary is fixed by law and no amount is mentioned, of course that refers to the statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hydrographic Office: Hydrographic engineer, $3,000; assistant, $2,200; assistant, $2,000; nautical experts—1 at $1,800; 2 at $1,600 each, 1 at $1,400, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; clerks—1 of class 2, 1 of class 1; custodian of archives, $1,200; 3 copyists—1 at $840, 2 at $720 each; compiler, $1,400; editor of Notice to Mariners, $1,600; computer, $1,400; draftsmen—3 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each; 2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each, 5 at $1,000 each, 1 at $900; 3 apprentice draftsmen, at $700 each; chief engraver, $2,000; engravers—2 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 1 at $1,400, 6 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, 1 at $720; apprentice engraver, $800; apprentice engraver, $700; plate printers—chief, $1,400, 1 at $1,200, 1 at $1,000, 2 at $900 each, 1 at $800; apprentice plate printers—1 at $700, 1 at $600; chief lithographer, $1,800; 2 lithographers, at $1,000 each; apprentice lithographer, $700; electrotyper and chart plate maker, $1,200; assistant messenger; four laborers; helpers—2 at $720 each, 2 at $660 each, 1 at $600, 1 at $500, 1 at $480; in all, $102,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 81, line 91, strike out the words "three copyists" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Copyists, three, at $900 each."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional employees, for production of charts from metallic plates by photolithographic process: Draftsmen—one at $1,800, two at $1,400 each, two at $1,200 each, five at $1,000 each; process photographer, $1,600; photographic printer, $1,200; lithographic pressman, $1,400; lithographic transferer, $1,400; two negative cutters, at $1,000 each; two feeders, at $480 each; in all, $20,560.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the occasion of these additional employees in the Hydrographic Office, at the top of page 82?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They have changed their process of producing these charts and maps, and it was necessary to give them this additional machinery and this additional force in order to perfect the work. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I visited the Hydrographic Office and went all through it——

Mr. MANN. It is always very expensive when a Member of Congress visits one of the departmental offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You know there has been quite a controversy going on as to where these maps should be made, whether they should be made by the Weather Bureau or by the Hydrographic Office, and I brought some of the charts down to the room of the Committee on Appropriations, charts covering the same thing, but the committee did not feel that it had information enough to justify it in determining the question as to where these charts ought to be made, and we simply left that matter where it was. The statement before the committee was to the effect that they have reduced the cost of producing these charts almost 90 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Instead of the fact, if it be a fact, and of course I do not doubt the gentleman's statement, you carry the same number of employees you carried before and then add on a lot of them because you say they do the work cheaper, and, as a rule, I find it very often happens that where you do the work cheaper it costs more to do it. That seems to be the case here.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, I would like to state to the gentleman from Illinois our information from the chief of that bureau is that they have on hand now approximately a million dollars of work to be done that heretofore has been done by the engraving process, and by a new method—the photolithograph process—instead of this work costing $1,000,000 it can be done for 80 or 90 per cent less, or between $100,000 and $200,000. There is where saving is effected, and this additional force which is necessary to inaugurate the new process is a mere bagatelle compared with the immense saving that is to be effected by the adoption of this process and the abandonment of the engraving of these charts, maps, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Where is the reduction in the appropriation? The gentleman talks about a saving; where is the reduction in the appropriation? Here is an addition of $20,560 in the amount of the appropriation; and where is the reduction?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we are not striving to make a mere superficial appearance of a saving, but we are struggling to bring about an actual bona fide saving, and I will again state to the gentleman that our information is that there is approximately a million dollars' worth of this engraving to be done which can be done under this new process at a saving approximating $800,000 or $900,000.

Mr. MANN. Then, if it be done under the new process by the new employees, why do you carry all the old employees to do work under the old process?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Hydrographic Office has at present a stock of foreign charts which it is necessary to reproduce.

Mr. MANN. I do not apprehend that the Hydrographic Office is behind in its work more than for years. There has been a controversy going on for years that the Hydrographic Office is doing other work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Weather Bureau has been trying to do the work of the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. MANN. I am not entering into that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to explain the purpose of this provision. This is work that must be done. To-day under the present methods it will cost about one million and a half of dollars to do the work necessary. By giving this increase of force it can be done for about 90 per cent less.

Mr. MANN. That is easy to say. The Hydrographic Office always wants a larger appropriation. Now, we have made an appropriation this year outside of the employees for a photolithographic process, larger than for the current year, and the gentleman has added two or three additional copyists.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those three additional copyists are already provided for, and were omitted from the bill in the printing of it.

Mr. MANN. That is not the record I have before me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am stating what is the fact. It is an error in the printing of the bill.

Mr. MANN. It may have been. It is all right. Then the amount is the same that it is for the current year, and on the plea that the work can be done cheaper by another process you add other employees, retaining the old process as well as using the new one. I can not understand the economy that increases the expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman believes that the committee has made a mistake in giving these additional employees or that their action is not justified, and it will not result in economy, the thing to do would be to move to strike them out. This committee has not given any additional employees any place unless an overwhelming showing is made to justify it.

Mr. MANN. It is easy to say "move to strike out." I understand very well that it would not prevail as against the committee, but the committee has up to date shown no reason for giving the old employees work under the old process and then adding new employees to work under the new process.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Hydrographic Office to-day, with its present complement, is unable to furnish the Navy with the charts necessary for navigation.

Mr. MANN. I have heard that story ever since I have been a Member of the House. So far as I know, it has been true. So far as I know, the Navy has gotten along very well with the hydrographic charts that it did obtain. The Hydrographic Office would like to make all the charts for all the nations in the world.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They would not.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe they ought to do it at our expense.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question? Will the gentleman contend that the photolithographic process is more expensive than the engraving process?

Mr. MANN. I presume it is cheaper.

Mr. BURLESON. Then, if it is cheaper, I assure the gentleman that the purpose of this item is to substitute the photolithographic process for the engraving process.

Mr. MANN. But to retain all the employees engaged on the other process and add to the employees on the photolithographic process.

Mr. GARNER. The committee contends in case they should furnish enough employees under the old process to do the work necessary now it would taken ten times as many as provided for in this new process.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I are familiar with that claim. I have heard it enunciated in the House for 15 years, and they have gotten along very well without increasing the force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Illinois contend that all the requests for additional employees for the various bureaus are so exaggerated, so lacking in real basis, that we are not justified in making this change?

Mr. MANN. I say this: If you take the new process, which is 90 per cent cheaper than the old process, and adopt the new process, the result ought to be a decrease in the expenditures. On the contrary, here is an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may say this to the gentleman from Illinois: That I had some doubts as to the propriety of this increase. The gentleman from South Carolina and myself visited the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. MANN. As I remarked before, it is very expensive to the Government for a Member of Congress who knows nothing about some expert matter to visit a department and have the expert explain to him how essential it is to do this thing or that thing, showing how much cheaper it is to do it in this way or in that way. It invariably increases the expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois is competent to testify about that.

Mr. MANN. They have tried to work it on me many times, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's scientific knowledge has frequently led him to adopt the views of many so-called experts in behalf of new devices, and it has caused him to astonish the House in regard to his extravagant action in the appropriations for the public service.

Mr. MANN. That is not the case on this occasion. It is the gentleman from New York who on this occasion is proposing to increase the expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from South Carolina and I visited this office and examined into the matter, and I was satisfied that the expenditure proposed was proper.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that I did not visit that office, but the showing that was made convinced me that the appropriation was necessary.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] lives at the Cosmos Club, and that is the next thing to visiting the establishment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional employees, for production of charts from metallic plates by photolithographic process: Draftsmen—1 at $1,800, 2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each, 5 at $1,000 each; process photographer, $1,600; photographic printer, $1,200; lithographic pressman, $1,400; lithographic transferrer, $1,400; 2 negative cutters, at $1,000 each; 2 feeders, at $480 each; in all, $20,560.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a motion?

Mr. DYER. Yes. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the work that the two feeders do and whether they are men or women. They are mentioned on line 7 of page 82.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are press feeders.

Mr. DYER. Are they men or women?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They may be men or they may be women. I did not see any women feeding the press on the day I was there.

Mr. DYER. Do they give all their time to this work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I suppose they work seven hours a day.

Mr. DYER. I think, Mr. Chairman, in that case that is not enough pay for men or women who may be the heads of families. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the words——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are getting all they asked for, so far as the committee knows.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think that is enough for them?

Mr. BURLESON. It is all the department estimated for them when the matter was brought to the attention of the department by the chief of the bureau in charge of the matter, and the department did not recommend any more in the bill.

Mr. DYER. But the gentleman knows that the committee has changed the estimates submitted by the department in a number of other matters. I ask the gentleman if he does not think the committee ought to have changed the estimate from $480 to a decent wage?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman on that is entirely out of accord with the leader of the minority side, who protested against any increase in the force. The gentleman is out of line with his leader.

Mr. DYER. I do not agree with the leader in making reductions that are not right and proper, in my judgment. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out "480" and make it "600."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The gentleman submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 82, line 7, strike out "480" and insert in lieu thereof "600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of copperplates, steel plates, chart paper, packing boxes, chart portfolios, electrotyping copperplates, cleaning copperplates; tools, instruments, power, and materials for drawing, engraving, and printing; materials for and mounting charts; reduction of charts by photography; photolithographing charts for immediate use; transfer of photolithographic and other charts to copper; care and repairs to printing presses, furniture, instruments, and tools; extra drawing and engraving; translating from foreign languages; telegrams on public business; the preparation of Pilot Charts and their supplements, and the printing and mailing of the same; purchase of data for charts and sailing directions and other nautical publications; works and periodicals relating to hydrography, marine meteorology, navigation, surveying, oceanography, and terrestrial magnetism, $7,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, from information received from my constituents, who have studied and are interested in the patent laws, I am led to the following conclusion: The recent decision of the Supreme Court over patents seems to have made it necessary for Congress to enact a law to protect the merchants and consumers against restriction of prices for certain manufactured articles. It seems that our patent laws are being stretched and extended to protect the plans of many manufacturers, who wish to overcharge the public for their product. I presume that the original purpose of our patent laws was to give the inventor of a new and original device a monopoly of the manufacture, use, and sale of that device for a certain number of years.

Under recent decision of the United States courts, the manufacturer of any patented article can incorporate in the mechanism or construction of a patented device, which is or may be neither basic nor fundamental, and thereby acquire the right to dictate the price at which the complete article can be sold to the consumer, no matter through how many hands it may pass after leaving his immediate control. With this protection he advertises his article in an extravagant manner, and by exaggerated claims creates a demand at a fictitious price. He thus induces the retail dealer to purchase and carry in stock his goods to supply the demand created. In many instances the retailer does not buy nor sell these goods because of their merit, but because of the inducement offered by the manufacturer in the form of an exorbitant profit, not subject to exposure by competition, and the public pays double and sometimes a triple price by reason thereof. It is no exaggeration to say that many of these so-called patented articles cost less to produce than the amount expended in advertising.

The most objectionable feature of the controlled-price plan is not the price the patentee manufacturer obtains as his reward or tribute for his invention, but the excessive profit of the retailer on a resale of the article, which he could not get unless he was protected by the price alone capable of being fixed by the patentee. I contend that once the patentee has made and sold his patented article it should pass from under the monopoly and sell in the open market free from restriction as to the resale price to the consumer.

If the merchant and consumer can not be protected by a law which restricts a patentee's right to a monopoly of the manufacture and sale of his patented article without control of price, once the article has been sold by him, then the law should clearly specify that the addition of a patented device to any unpatented article or an article on which the basic and fundamental patents have run out does not give the patentee any rights as to the control of the retail price of the complete article. This would remedy a large portion of the present evil, as it would prevent manufacturers who have enjoyed the profits of a patent monopoly during its legitimate term from controlling the price indefinitely by the addition of patents, added simply to give control of the selling price.

Through correspondence with Mr. Elmer Franklin Bubb, an eminent citizen of my district, I am led to the following conclusion: The law should also be sufficiently comprehensive to give inventors or others holding patents the right to secure an injunction preventing infringers from manufacturing or using parts or all claimed in the said patents, without the payment of a royalty to the parties owning the patents, if they are not manufacturing the inventions described. Injunctions should issue before United States district court. When parties can not agree on the royalty to be paid, the court will fix the royalty rate. The right to appeal to the United States Supreme Court should be reserved, but the injunction should stand until reversed by the United States Supreme Court.

Anyone should be allowed to manufacture an invention if the parties owning patent for two or more years do not make an effort to manufacture or dispose of same, providing they pay a royalty to parties owning patent, and if the manufacturers and parties owning patent can not agree on the royalty rate then the United States district court, after a full hearing on both sides, may fix the rate, subject to appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

I also desire to insert the following editorials on the subject from the Chicago Daily News of March, 1912:

"SMOTHERING" PATENTS.

According to recent dispatches from Washington there has been introduced in Congress a bill by Representative THAYER, of Massachusetts, ostensibly for the protection and benefit of the people. It purports to be legislation against what is termed the "smothering" of patents. The bill provides that except in cases of dispute—and in any event within two years—a patent shall have no force unless the article patented shall be manufactured. It is claimed that under existing patent laws the Government does not furnish adequate protection or provision for real benefit to the people.

For example, to follow Mr. THAYER'S line of argument, an inventor may be influenced to dispose of his rights on a "royalty" arrangement. Then if the manufacturer should fail to manufacture the article that patent would be "smothered." Of course it would, and that is precisely what many big concerns do to prevent independent companies from manufacturing some patented article which may be far superior to any manufactured by the big concern.

It has taken the inventors of some of the most useful inventions now in general use three to five years to interest sufficient capital to place an invention on the market. What would have been the result if only two years had been allowed? Why, the inventors would have received no benefit from their inventions.

Many manufacturing concerns have in their basements what they call "the morgue," where can be seen the "remains"—models—of hundreds of machines and devices in the way of improvements that have been acquired on the royalty plan, or more often purchased for a few hundred dollars.

Most of the improvements, especially improvements in inventions in everyday use, are made by workmen and machinists employed in manufacturing establishments. Now, a machinist employed by the National Cash Register Co. or the United States Steel Corporation, for example, who invents a new and useful improvement in some article manufactured by one of these companies and secures a patent on it ought to be in position to demand a fair price for his invention. But should the legislation referred to—which no doubt was inspired by some of the large manufacturing interests—become a law, then any such companies having a practical monopoly of manufacturing the class of goods to which the invention related would only have to refuse to buy the patent and at the end of two years could manufacture the invention without giving the inventor any compensation whatsoever.

From my point of view—and I have had considerable to do with patents—the enactment of such a law, while on its face in the interest of the people, would only inure to the benefit of the trusts and other combines among manufacturers in case a useful and valuable invention were brought out by a person financially unable to start manufacturing within the prescribed two years.

Had such a law been in force during the last century how would Mergenthaler, Westinghouse, Howe, Bell, and others have profited by their inventions?

The Americans enjoy prestige for ingenuity, but not so much because we are naturally a Nation of inventors as because we have the cheapest and most liberal patent laws of any country.

Let the patent laws alone.

TO PROTECT INVENTORS.

Permit me to join "Discouraged inventor" and others in voicing their disapproval of the Thayer bill now pending in the national legislature. The sources and purposes of such proposed legislation are not hard to find when the results are considered. Yet these results will undoubtedly be more far-reaching than may at first glance be apparent. Then, too, the question has an economic side.

I have been actively interested in patents and kindred matters for fully 50 years and have been the grantee of nearly 100 in that time. It is significant to observe that in none of these did I succeed in interesting capital in less than three years—the average would be about five—to say nothing of the additional time that elapsed before the actual manufacture was begun. Nor do I know of a single invention which has been manufactured within two, three, or even four years of the date of issuance of the grant. True, many inventions, worthless from a practical standpoint, have been financed in remarkably short periods—weeks even—with absolutely no intention of ever manufacturing the article, the invention having appealed to the "backers" solely as a stock-jobbing proposition of glaring possibilities. Here, too, the inventor as usual is the loser.

The bill in question is confiscatory in nature, and will only increase the trials of the poor inventor which have in fact become proverbial. Its sole purpose is to benefit the large manufacturer by undermining and practically destroying the object of patent legislation—protection of the inventor. It can only serve to take away from the inventor, without remuneration, what he has achieved after perhaps years of tireless and ceaseless effort and the expenditure of what is often his last penny. Hereafter no invention need be purchased or shop rights acquired by manufacturers desiring to make the subject of the invention. They will simply conspire to refrain from investing till the necessary two years shall have elapsed.

The length of time required to interest capital in an invention is never a test of its practicability or value as a sound manufacturing proposition. As a matter of fact, history shows that the more practical the invention the longer the time required to get it on a paying basis. A "wild-cat" scheme is always more easily "floated" than a legitimate venture.

We should not let our sense of justice be blinded by personal interests, and our legislators will best serve us when they consider the interests and rights of the majority calculated by numbers and not by dollar signs. It is only equitable that the products of one's mental faculties should be protected and all profits arising therefrom should inure to the benefit of the one giving them the first semblance of practical form.

INVENTORS AND A BILL.

I sincerely hope that the influence of the press will be directed against the new legislation on patents contemplated by the bill introduced in Congress by Representative THAYER. I am sure that all inventors will be antagonistic to it.

To show how utterly unfair to an inventor such legislation would be, let me cite my own experience. Some five years ago I applied for a patent for an improvement in internal-combustion engines. My claims were allowed before I had time—being a poor man—to more than build my first experimental model; that is to say, after the lapse of about a year. Then, my own funds being exhausted, it became necessary for me to interest outside parties. This finally, after much tribulation of the spirit, I succeeded in doing, and by that time another year had passed. The manufacturers whom I had interested immediately set to work to design and build a four-cylinder automobile engine embodying my ideas.

Of a complicated machine of this kind the designing alone is a matter of several months, and after that comes the building of it, and although that, with every facility at command, means at least another two or three months, it is after the completion of such first experimental machine that the true work of perfection begins.

Thus in my case it is now nearly two years since the first work on this machine was begun, and, nevertheless, it is not yet brought to the point where actual manufacture of the machine can be begun.

Under the proposed legislation, therefore, in spite of all the work done and the money expended upon this invention, my patent would be taken away from me, because time would have won the race against me.

PERVERTING THE PATENT LAWS.

Patent laws have served a useful purpose in this country in encouraging inventions. Recently, however, there has been considerable complaint of the perversion of patent laws to promote the growth and power of injurious trusts. Chief Justice White, of the United States Supreme Court, has rendered a valuable public service in directing attention to the effect of a ruling by that court relating to this subject. Justices Hughes and Lamar joined with Chief Justice White in the dissenting opinion.

The opinion of the majority of the court had the support of four of the justices. It held that the maker of a patented article had the right to require a purchaser, as a condition of securing the article, to confine his use of certain supplies not covered by patent to those sold by the maker of the patented article.

This ruling, in the opinion of the Daily News, is contrary to public policy. The minority of the court is right in saying that it is likely to promote trade monopoly, and in suggesting that if the decision is to stand Congress should enact legislation embodying the correct policy.

The maker of a patented article is entitled to a monopoly for a designated period of years of the manufacture and sale of that article. It is a perversion of the idea underlying patent legislation to say that he may use the power conferred by law to acquire monopoly control of the manufacture and sale of articles of common use which should be produced under competitive conditions.

The ruling of the Supreme Court and the protest against it by a minority of the court serve the purpose of calling the attention of the country again to the need of revising the patent laws so as to elimtnate therefrom the features that tend unduly to promote trust control of the sale of articles not covered directly by patents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No expenditure shall be incurred or authorized for personal services or otherwise under the Hydrographic Office at Washington, D. C., during the fiscal year 1913 except as herein authorized by appropriations under the Navy Department or under appropriations that may be made for printing and binding.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning on page 85, from line 5 down to line 16 on page 86, the matter relating to the Naval Observatory and the Nautical Almanac be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that that portion of the bill relating to the Naval Observatory and the Nautical Almanac be passed over without prejudice for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $12,000; First Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Assistant Secretary, $4,500; chief clerk, including $500 as superintendent of buildings, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries of the department, $4,000; assistant to the Secretary, $2,750; assistant attorney, $2,500; 2 special inspectors, whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the Department of the Interior, at $2,500 each; 6 inspectors, at $2,500 each; chief disbursing clerk, $2,250; clerk in charge of supplies, $2,250; clerk in charge of mails, files, and archives, $2,250; clerk in charge of publications, $2,250; private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 13 of class 4, 18 of class 3, 21 of class 2, 24 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each; returns office clerk, $1,600; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; 8 copyists; multigraph operator, $900; typewriter repairer, $900; switchboard telephone operator; 9 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; 21 laborers; skilled mechanics—1 at $900 and 1 at $720; 2 carpenters, at $900 each; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; laborer, $600; 6 laborers, at $480 each; packer, $660; 2 conductors of elevator, at $720 each; 8 charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,200; 30 watchmen; additional to 2 watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; 7 firemen; clerk to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him, his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $266,930.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill for information. The report shows that a reduction is made of 10 watchmen in the Interior Department.

Mr. GARNER. On what page is that?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is on page 9 of the report.

Mr. GARNER. What page of the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know on what page of the bill it is, but the report, here on page 9, shows that a reduction is made of 10 watchmen, at $840 each, in the Interior Department. Was that reduction made on the recommendation of the officials of the Interior Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The chief clerk of the department appeared before the committee and we asked him why he needed so many watchmen, and in substance he said that he did not know any reason except that they had them. That is all the information we could get.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the committee make any investigation and ascertain whether there was a real public necessity for this force of 10 watchmen that has been eliminated from the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The testimony of the officials who appeared before us left us in very grave doubt as to whether they were needed, and our own judgment confirmed that doubt.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did you have the superintendent of the building or the chief of the watch present before the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We had the superintendent of the building, who is chief clerk of the department, before us.

Mr. AUSTIN. And he could not give you any information showing the necessity for the continuation of these men?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He indicated merely what I told the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. The officials of the Interior Department, as I understand, requested and estimated for 3,260 officials. They had 3,164 during the 12 past months, and this bill provides for 3,136, so that this bill carries a reduction of 28 under the existing law and 124 less than the estimates submitted by the Interior Department. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We cut off something like 30 people of the present force, all told.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was that done upon the recommendation or against the recommendation of the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was based on our judgment after hearing the evidence.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, has the committee left a sufficient number of watchmen in that building to guard the interests of the Government and protect the valuable records stored in that department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We believe more than sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For employees, for the proper protection, heating, care, and preservation of the old Post Office Department building, occupied by the Department of the Interior, namely: Engineer and electrician, $1,600; assistant engineer, $1,000; 4 firemen; 3 watchmen, acting as lieutenants, at $840 each; 15 watchmen; conductor of elevator, $720; 14 laborers; 9 laborers, at $480 each; 3 skilled mechanics (painter, carpenter, and plumber), at $900 each; in all, $35,780.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the statement of the chairman of the committee that the only information we could get from the department was that they kept these watchmen because they had them before. As I remember the testimony, the chief clerk told us what the watchmen did, that they had a certain number at each door, and the majority of the committee inferred that they could get on with less; but my recollection does not at all accord with that of the gentleman in his statement that the chief clerk admitted that they could get on with less, or that he gave no reason. My recollection is that he told us how they were stationed, and it was from that the majority inferred that they could get on with less. I think they ought to accept the responsibility themselves for the cutting down of these watchmen, and not shift it to the statement of the chief clerk. They have cut down the force in all the departments. My opinion is that they have been too drastic and have gone too far. At any rate, I do not think the responsibility ought to be placed on the statement of the chief clerk. I certainly do not recall that in this or any other department they said that they could be reasonably safe without the watchmen.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the chief clerk stated that they had 40 watchmen in the Patent Office Building alone, that there were three reliefs and only four floors in the building, and that at night only one door was kept open; and the committee naturally concluded, and in my opinion very wisely concluded, that it was unnecessary to have 12 men on guard at one door at night.

Mr. AUSTIN. But is it not true that the Government does not carry any insurance at all on its buildings, and do they not have watchmen on all the floors of every building, and is there not a necessity for watchmen on every floor in each Government building for that reason?

Mr. FOSTER. And they will have them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There will be several watchmen on each floor of the Patent Office Building under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that practically all these watchmen are old soldiers?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. AUSTIN. And is not this bill going to legislate them out of office without making any provision for them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not understand that all of these watchmen are old soldiers.

Mr. AUSTIN. My information is they are nearly all old soldiers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is not my information.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is mistaken about that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the committee make an investigation, or is that simply the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not cut out the old soldiers. If they are cut out it will be Republican officials who remove them.

Mr. AUSTIN. That depends altogether on how many are on the roll, and how much of a cut there is, because there is a cut of 10 in one department of the Government, and if that cut continues in all the executive departments it is bound to reach some old soldiers who are filling those positions.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no danger of that.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,200 each; 3 law examiners of surveyors general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; chiefs of division—2 at $2,400 each, 10 at $2,000 each; assistant chief of division, $2,000; law examiners—13 at $2,000 each, 10 at $1,800 each, 18 at $1,600 each; clerks—27 of class 4, 51 of class 3, 74 of class 2, 77 of class 1, 65 at $1,000 each; 65 copyists; 26 copyists, at $720 each; 2 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; 6 skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; 16 laborers; laborer, $480; packer, $720; depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all $621,520.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the intention was to reduce the salary of the Chief of the Division of Surveys in the Land Office? I notice that last year we carried the Chief of the Division of Surveys in the Land Office at $2,750.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. The intimation that the committee had was that this particular clerk was doing precisely the same kind of work as the other $2,400 men.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not make any inquiry as to whether there had been any reason at some time for increasing the salary of this official, or of the place?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the information that came to the committee was that this salary had heretofore been increased on two occasions, beyond the amount originally fixed by law, and above the salaries being paid to men doing similar work, and that the considerations moving the increase of this officer's salary were purely personal. The man holding the office, so we were informed, is related to a high official formerly serving in another place in this Capitol, and your committee believed that it was only right that this officer's salary should be brought down to a parity with the salaries paid other men for performing similar services for the Government.

Mr. MANN. That may all be. I do not know the official or anything about him, but it has happened in the past—and will happen in the future—that a man holding a particular place has his salary increased because of the merits of the man, as we at times here have increased the salaries of some of the officials of the House, employees of committees, and others, while a particular place is held by a certain official who may be unusually efficient. I only ask whether the committee made any inquiry in reference to that. Apparently they did not.

Mr. BURLESON. We did, to our complete satisfaction.

Mr. MANN. What was the result of the inquiry?

Mr. GARNER. The result was that they cut the salary down.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they cut it down just "because."

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,250; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of division—1 at $2,250, 1 at $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; clerks—14 of class 4, 25 of class 3, 24 of class 2, 2 at $1,500 each, 43 of class 1, 23 at $1,000 each; stenographer, $1,000; 29 copyists; messenger; 4 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $231,710.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think we have too many Assistant Commissioners of Indian Affairs. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill in relation to this provision. I know that the Secretary of the Interior undertook to increase the force very much, and I heard his evidence before the subcommittee. I thought from what I learned that we had too many assistant commissioners. I understand the work in the Indian Office is decreasing, or ought to be decreasing, and I would like to know what the necessity is for this second assistant commissioner. I move to strike out, in lines 12 and 13, the words "second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,250."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "second assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,250."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to explain why the amendment ought not to be adopted. We have made an effort to find out what the force in the Indian Office was doing. This section of the bill that has just been read has always been provided for in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that this was a chief clerk, but he was afterwards made deputy commissioner to perform duties which the chief clerk could not perform because the commissioner and first deputy commissioner was often absent from the city, and that it was as a mere matter of convenience that he was created second assistant commissioner to sign papers?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right. I think the office is needed. They have, in addition to what we carry in this bill, a lump sum carried in the Indian appropriation bill, and we have provided here that hereafter they shall submit estimates to Congress and that the men shall be provided for. But we can not afford to strike out any man provided for in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact, according to the testimony of the Secretary of the Interior, that this second assistant commissioner is an office not authorized by law, but created by a provision in an appropriation bill some years ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe that is true.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then here is a proposition to continue an office created only three or four years ago, which is not necessary, in my judgment, and ought not to be continued. I happened to be present when the hearings were had before the subcommittee. If you strike it out you simply strike out an office that was incorporated in an appropriation bill three or four years ago and not authorized by existing law. We ought not to provide for it in the bill where it is not provided for by law, especially when it does not decrease expenditures. My motion is simply to strike out from this bill a provision not authorized by law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that during the preparation of this bill I was inclined to take the view now expressed by the gentleman from Georgia, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made a showing that at this particular time there is considerable paper work being done in the Bureau of Indian Affairs as a result of certain reorganizations taking place and certain allotments being made, and that there are a number of clerks that have been appropriated for under the Indian appropriation bill who are now carried in his bureau and are under the direct supervision and control of this assistant commissioner, and that it is absolutely necessary at this time that his services should be continued.

It is true, as said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], that this particular office was created by a provision carried in an appropriation bill, and that in fact there is no law authorizing the existence of the office, but at the same time the showing made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs so impressed the subcommittee that, whereas I was at first inclined to take the same view as expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], I finally reached the conclusion that it was necessary that it should be continued.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BURLESON. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT. Can the gentleman tell how many employees they have in Washington in the Indian Office?

Mr. BURLESON. I can not give the exact number, but there are about 200.

Mr. BARTLETT. Two hundred and thirty, and they have to look after only about 275,000 Indians, and in addition to that they have the Indian appropriation bill where provision is made for them.

Mr. BURLESON. I have heretofore stated that there are about 50 clerks carried in the Indian appropriation act that are under the direct supervision of this particular officer, and the committee was thoroughly impressed that we should continue the item providing for this officer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I heartily concur in what has been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] in regard to this particular officer. This officer is as essential as any other officer provided for in this bill. The officer mentioned performs important services in the absence of the commissioner and his deputy, who are necessarily often away from the city, and during their absence there is no other person authorized to act for the commissioner.

Mr. BARTLETT. You have one assistant commissioner. If the commissioner is absent you have this assistant commissioner and do not need this second assistant commissioner.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state that the officer in question does a great deal of field work. The commissioner is away and the deputy is away; they go out into the field where they become familiar with the work, and they render a better service to the Indians and to the country than they could by remaining in the office.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I would like to know from the gentleman if the duties of the Indian Commissioner and the assistant commissioner take them out of the city for any considerable period of time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Sometimes they are away from the city for quite a while; they have to travel long distances, and are necessarily absent a considerable time.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will pardon me, is it not a fact that they have to spend a good deal of time in making and letting contracts for supplies?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true; the commissioner has to go or send a deputy for the letting of these contracts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while the motion of the gentleman from Georgia is to strike out the second assistant commissioner of Indian affairs under that title it is in fact a striking out of the chief clerk for the Indian Office. The bill carries a chief clerk for the Indian Office called the second assistant commissioner, but who also performs the duties of chief clerk, and who receives a salary for the double duties of $2,250. In the Land Office the chief clerk performing only the duties of a chief clerk receives a salary of $2,500. In the Pension Office the chief clerk receives a salary of $2,500, and in the Patent Office the chief clerk receives a salary of $3,000. All of these bureaus are organized on the basis of supervision by a chief clerk in addition to the commissioner, and you can not manage the business, advantageously at least, without a chief clerk.

Now, because the commissioner and deputy commissioner are frequently absent from the city, either on Indian reservations or in connection with the letting of Indian contracts or other work, a few years ago Congress authorized the chief clerk to sign as deputy commissioner, and then called him a second assistant commissioner, but in fact he is a mere chief clerk of the department, who would have to be retained in any event.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SISSON). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No transfers from the Pension Office existing July 1, 1912, shall be returned to said office.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the meaning of that provision in reference to transfers from the Pension Office? What does that provision mean at the top of page 98?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That has been carried in the bill for a long time.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is new in the bill this year. What does it mean? It could not have been carried in the bill before because it relates to July 1, 1912.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I find we put it in at the request of the Commissioner of Pensions. He asked us to put it in.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it means clerks who had been transferred from the Bureau of Pensions to some other bureau should not be transferred back, but I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They have been detailed from time to time as work at that particular office grew less, and I suppose some of them are transferred now and he does not want them back.

Mr. MANN. It looks to me as if the work in the office would grow greater from now on.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think we will have to provide several hundred additional clerks, which were not contemplated when the commissioner sent in this estimate.

Mr. MANN. Then these clerks who had been in the Pension Office and understood the duties, I think of all the clerks, should be the ones to go back to the office.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When the conferees report the Sherwood bill and it is agreed to, we will take up that question of supplying the additional clerks that will be needed for the Pension Office. We may provide for it in another way and repeal this provision, but it is in there at the request of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MANN. If I were in charge of the bill I would strike it out, but I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, when absent from home and traveling on duty outside the District of Columbia, for special examiners or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said bureau, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $215,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Heretofore we have provided "and for actual and necessary expenses." Now the gentleman inserts in the bill the word "other," so that it reads "for actual and other necessary expenses." As it read before it meant both actual and necessary expenses. As it reads now it means actual and other expenses. Now, what expenses are there other than actual expenses? There must be some reason for inserting the new word in the law. Is it contemplated to pay any expenses except actual expenses? [After a pause.] Well, as I can not get an answer, I withdraw the pro forma amendment. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional force of 45 special examiners for one year, at $1,300 each, $58,500, and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they be found to be qualified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the purpose of increasing the force of field examiners?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the item?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is an increase in the force of pension examiners. What is the purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He said he needed them.

Mr. AUSTIN. For what purpose?

Mr. MANN. This is not an increase.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is the number of examiners the commissioner said he needed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education: Commissioner of Education, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; specialist in higher education, $3,000; for the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including salaries, $6,000; editor, $2,000; statistician, $1,800; specialist in charge of land-grant college statistics, $1,800; translator, $1,800; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; specialists—1 in foreign educational systems, and 1 in educational systems, at $1,800 each; clerks—2 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 4 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 7 at $1,000 each; 6 copyists; 2 copyists, at $800 each; copyist, $720; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; messenger; 1 assistant messenger; 3 laborers, at $480 each; laborer, $400; in all, $72,800.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment: On line 19, page 100, at the end of line 19, strike out the words "six thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifteen thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, line 19, strike out the amount "six thousand dollars" at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen thousand dollars."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the proposition is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SISSON). Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. No; I am ready for the Chair to rule on the point of order if it is subject to the point, though I am confident it is not. However, before the Chair rules, will my colleague reserve the point of order for a moment, that I may be heard on the merits of the proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly; if the gentleman desires to talk.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the item to which my amendment refers is "for the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene," and carries an appropriation of $6,000 to do that work. The authority for this very important investigational work was carried by the last appropriation bill. This year the Commissioner of Education estimated a total appropriation for his bureau the sum of $73,100, including this item. The committee has seen fit to allow only the amount carried in last year's appropriation bill. Mr. Chairman, I regard the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene as a matter of prime and vital importance to this country.

The system of education which touches the boy or the girl—the farm boy and farm girl—who produce the raw material, and the system which touches the boy and girl of the shop and the factory who transform this raw material into the finished products, must enlist the profoundest attention and thought of the statesmanship which looks further than into the immediate present. This Congress can well afford to stop occasionally in the hurly-burly of its great game and take count of what the future of the country must be and of the agencies which must make that future. This amendment intends to provide machinery with which to make these investigations in the various States in order that all the States may have the benefit of the best system in the country. I say that this is a matter of prime and vital importance, both to the generation now growing up and to the generation yet unborn.

I recognize, of course, that the Bureau of Education is not and should not be more than a clearing house of information. I am not willing for the Federal Government to exercise any control whatever over the educational systems of the various States beyond that of furnishing information and advice when sought, but I do believe that there is a necessity for vitalizing the Bureau of Education and making it especially subserve the purpose for which it was created, namely, to be such a clearing house of information as will be of such real value as to make it the leader in an advisory way of every great educational movement in this country. This the bureau can not do—can not perform the functions for which it was created if we are going to adopt this niggardly policy with reference to the appropriations which we make for it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to some——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that he is not discussing the point of order. The Chair will ask the gentleman from South Carolina, who has charge of the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from South Carolina reserved the point of order and I was speaking——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules on the point of order, if the Chair is going to sustain the point of order I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the point of order should be overruled and will so hold, and does not desire to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. I only wished to be heard if the Chair was going to sustain the point of order. I agree with the Chair, that the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to be heard upon his point of order, the Chair is satisfied, and will overrule the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the Chair takes that very liberal view, and, if I may be permitted, I desire to go on with my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is to provide an increase in the amount of the appropriation carried for this work which I have been describing and which I regard as of so much and such far-reaching importance to all the people. This is a new line of work, and I desire to read for the information of the committee the character of that work as furnished to me, at my request, by a gentleman in the Bureau of Education.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; though I should like to go on.

Mr. GARNER. How much of the proposed increase would be used in the way of salaries? Can the gentleman give an estimate of it?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the appropriation now, of $6,000, is spent in this way: For the employment of one expert in rural education, together with his traveling expenses, $2,775; an expert in school hygiene, at a salary of $3,000, with $825 for traveling expenses; and for industrial education they have allotted a sum of $400.

Now, then, of the two men operating under the appropriation of $6,000 carried in the last appropriation bill, one was appointed in September of last year and the other in December of last year. And already they have expended almost all of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] a question with reference to this appropriation. The gentleman says there is one expert in rural education at an annual compensation of $2,775 a year now and his expenses?

Mr. LEVER. Including his expenses?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. What is the particular qualification of an expert in rural education? What does he do?

Mr. LEVER. That is what I was about to say when your colleague from Texas [Mr. GARNER] interrupted me. I want to read in the RECORD just what these men do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to know what the expert in rural education does?

Mr. LEVER. The expert is regarded as a man who has had large experience in the matter of rural education and is regarded in the educational world as a leader in that kind of work. A line of work touching rural education has been established under which is being made as thorough a study as possible into the present status of rural education in the States in order to awaken public interest and call attention to the alarming backwardness of the rural schools as compared with city schools, and also to endeavor to devise and suggest ways and means of dealing with the problems.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not the State of South Carolina doing that work for your schools?

Mr. LEVER. The State is doing a great deal of work in that line, and doing it well, but my State is willing to accept expert information on any subject if it believes in its practicability.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] tells me that the committee has been asked to provide an expert in home making in connection with rural schools.

Mr. LEVER. If that is true, I do not know it. The other expert is from Alabama, Dr. Dressler, who is in charge of school hygiene, and whose business it is to furnish information so far as possible with reference to the best hygienic ventilating and sanitary system which the best experts can find, and to furnish also models for the best, most modern, and at the same time least expensive school buildings suited to local conditions.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state for the information of the gentleman from South Carolina that three of the experts intended to be provided for in this increase are one expert in industrial vocational education of $4,500, one specialist in agricultural educational schools at $4,000, and one specialist in education relating to home making at $3,500.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend from Texas that the proposition that he lays down is based upon the idea that the committee was to appropriate the estimates made of $73,000 and some odd.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina if it is intended to provide for these specialists, then the gentleman's amendment is wholly useless, for the reason that we allow the estimate for the particular item that the gentleman is attempting to increase.

Mr. LEVER. My understanding of it is this: I have not had the benefit, of course, of having these gentlemen before me and cross-examining them, but my information is that they desire to carry on the line of work they are now carrying on under the present appropriation, and to do so with several additional experts of the same kind, and that to do so it will be necessary to increase the appropriation $6,000 or $8,000 or $10,000 in order to furnish the number of men with which to do the work the most rapidly and at the same the most efficiently.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may use the balance of the gentleman's time, I want to say that——

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to yield to my colleague [Mr. SLAYDEN] for two minutes. I will give the gentleman from South Carolina the remainder of the five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when you take into consideration the fact that——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman from South Carolina speaking as much as he desires, but I do make the point of order now that nobody can yield time in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BARTLETT. I now move that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] be allowed five minutes in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] moves that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, when interrupted, when we take into consideration the fact that in rural districts the school population between 5 and 18 years of age is 13,422,896—a great army that must fight the social, economic, and political battles of the future—and that the enrollment in rural schools is 71.6 per cent, or 9,570,793, leaving approximately 4,000,000 of the future economic, social, and political soldiers of the country out of the schools in which they must be trained for their duties; and when we consider that the daily attendance is only 65 per cent, or 6,221,000, we are forced to conclude that here is a field for the work of the student and the statesman. The monthly salaries of rural teachers is $44.90, or $269.40 per year. To these we have intrusted our children at the most critical period in their lives, when they are most susceptible to good or bad influences, when their characters are forming—intrusted them into the hands of the most poorly paid class of people in this country, and yet a class that deserves the most profound respect and earnest support of all. No man can measure the influence upon the history of this country of the schoolteacher. No man can accurately measure the influence which the teacher of his boyhood, the person to whom he looked for guidance and wisdom, has had upon his life. Next to the man who stands in the pulpit in shaping the destiny of men and nations stands the man or the woman whose life work it is to deal with the immature and developing minds of the youth of the country. Be it said to the everlasting credit of this class of our people, they stand second to none in virtue, patriotism, and earnest devotion to duty.

More than this, the average annual session of our rural schools is 120 days. Four months out of twelve our country boy and girl have the opportunity to develop and educate and train the mind—the mind upon the training of which so much of the happiness of the boy or girl is to depend. I say, Mr. Chairman, when you take into consideration these facts and then take into consideration the further fact that the agricultural masses of this country—the people out on the farm and in the small town and village—constitute the great conservative force of the country which some of these days will save it from the red flag raised in the great cities, it seems to me this House ought to be profoundly impressed with the fact that while it is not the duty of the Federal Government to go into the States and take care of their educational systems, it is the duty of this Government to lend its aid to every effort to provide for leadership in this great undertaking and to encourage the awakening of the States to a fuller appreciation of the need of better schools in rural districts. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it contemplated that part of this increase provided for by the gentleman's amendment shall be expended by the Commissioner of Education in the line indicated by his testimony, when he made this statement:

> I am asking for funds for a group of 9 or 10 men and women, strong, earnest, well equipped, with sufficient knowledge of education and sufficient acquaintance with the country and country life to give them at least the right point of view. These men and women should investigate the rural schools of the countries in which work of special and unusual excellence has been done—the village schools of Switzerland, for example, and the schools of the open country in Denmark—find what is good in them, interpret it, adapt it to our needs, and then assist in applying it to the improvement of our rural schools in all parts of the country. There are in this country 1,500,000 miners, 750,000 of them coal miners. Most of these are foreigners, speaking foreign tongues. It is difficult to teach their children in the ordinary schools and by the ordinary methods. A careful study should be made of this problem. In this the division of rural schools in this bureau should help.

Does the gentleman propose to have the money spent along that line?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that in conversation with officials in the bureau—it happens that the commissioner himself is away on his bridal tour at this time—I do not understand it to be contemplated to use this appropriation along any other line than for investigations into rural and industrial education and school hygiene.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman does not contemplate that the amount provided for by the bill shall be used as suggested by the commissioner?

Mr. LEVER. No; that is not rural schools.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I agree with the gentleman that that is not rural schools.

Mr. LEVER. I brought this matter up in order to call it to the attention of the committee, and I did not rise to offer this amendment in any frivolous spirit. I am in dead earnest about it. I would be glad to have the support of this committee upon a proposition that I regard as perhaps more vital than any other problem we are facing in this country. It is the duty of Congress, if we are going to have a Federal bureau of education, to give it enough money to make it a vital force in carrying out the functions for which it was created, and if we are not going to do it we ought to abolish it and say that the Federal Government has no interest in a broad, national way in the solution of the great educational problems of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting certain statements and statistics in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RURAL EDUCATION.

A division of rural education has been established, which is making as thorough a study as possible into the present status of rural education in order to awaken public interest by calling attention to the alarming backwardness of the rural schools as compared with the city schools, and to devise and suggest ways and means of improvement. The inquiry is concerned with the following phases of rural education:

The quality of the teachers in service and various means of improving the quality.

The special preparation of teachers for rural work.

The contents of the school course of study and the economical arrangement of a program.

The organization of the school districts.

The supervision.

The support, including the distribution of State and county funds.

Illiteracy in the country districts.

These are the most important features of rural education on which immediate definite information is wanted. The division has well on toward completion a bulletin covering the above items, and is planning an exhaustive study of each item, the results of which will be published as soon as possible.

The division has published a bulletin on a "Course of study for rural teachers in nature study, elementary agriculture, sanitary science, and applied chemistry," and has a circular on the industrial supervision for rural schools about ready for distribution.

It has material collected for a publication on training courses for teachers for rural work, also on agricultural instruction in public high schools, both of which will be ready for publication in July or sooner.

It is having educational surveys made of several counties in various sections of the country. It has secured the services of 20 special collaborators to act as "feelers" for the office and keep it in touch with the most advanced rural school work of the country, so that information of especial value may be collected and distributed. Each of these persons is also to make a special study of some phase of rural work, the results of which, if of sufficient national value, will be published by the bureau. Such collaborators are all persons engaged in rural education connected with State departments of education, colleges, normal schools, or as county superintendents.

The division is encouraging the introduction of special courses in preparation for rural teachers in State normal schools, State colleges of agriculture, and high schools, and it is giving advice relative to such courses in many schools at the present time; it is encouraging the establishment of experimental and demonstration schools to work out and demonstrate the functions of the rural school, and it is aiding several State and county special commissions appointed to study their local rural educational problem.

For the entire country, including urban and rural.

Of the total illiteracy in cities and districts of less than 25,000, 80 per cent is in the rural country.

Illiteracy among native white children of native white parents is three and one-half times the amount of illiteracy among native white of foreign parentage, due to the fact that the foreign population is assembled in cities where good schools are provided.

No expert supervision of country schools in any States except in the New England States, Ohio, West Virginia, and Oregon but that given by a county superintendent.

The county superintendent is a political officer in 26 States.

In 11 States no educational qualifications whatever are required, and 11 other States require no experience in teaching.

SCHOOL HYGIENE.

1. This division has served as advisor in plans for school buildings, whose combined cost will approximate $6,000,000. These buildings are being erected in all parts of the country.

2. Detailed information regarding the health of school children has been forwarded to a great many people who have applied for help. Country teachers, county superintendents, city superintendents, and college professors have thus been aided.

3. The division is compiling an annotated bibliography of practically all of the worthy material bearing on the proper construction of schoolhouses and the hygienic care of school children. The most urgent need at present exists in country schools. In many parts of the country the district schools are unwholesome and insanitary, and those who are charged with securing better conditions do not know what is best to do.

4. Knockdown models of country schoolhouses are being constructed by the division, in order that these may be duplicated and sent to country-school officers, to help them to build better buildings at less expense.

This division will make a careful study of the conditions as they now exist, and issue, as soon as possible, a bulletin on country schoolhouses and school hygiene as it relates to the district schools. A large per cent of the school buildings now in use in the country are poorly lighted, badly heated and ventilated, and are equipped with desks and other necessary furniture unhygienic in the extreme. The division is in communication with school boards and district trustees from all parts of the country, and expects to be able to furnish plans and suggestions for the construction of better buildings, more sanitary toilets, and the general equipment of schoolhouses.

5. This division is serving as a clearing house for State boards of health on all questions relating to school hygiene and medical inspection of school children. The various State boards of health furnish their printed matter, and, in turn, ask for information concerning other States.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this matter. I would like to have five minutes of that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will make it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. At the last session of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania regulations regarding industrial education as well as a new school code were passed, which provided for vocational education and the medical inspection of schools and school children, thus following the example set by England, most of the European states, Japan, the Argentine Republic, and the State of Massachusetts, and recently quite a number of other States, either in compulsory or permissive form.

The English law provides for such a medical examination, at least once a year, as would decide whether each child of school age was in such a condition as to take full advantage of the school facilities provided by the State.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina not only provides for rural education and industrial education, but also investigation into the very important matter of school hygiene. The State of Pennsylvania has learned that by means of this law they can discover and eradicate obscure diseases that existed in the homes of some of those who have recently immigrated to this country. After the children have been sent out of school because they have a certain disability or disease, in indigent cases doctors and nurses are frequently provided by the local communities, and thus not only the physical but the moral and the mental tone of the families, as well as that of the State as a whole, can be greatly improved and advanced.

The increase of this appropriation will assist in extending industrial education to the rural communities. And I may say, in connection with the inclusion of the medical inspection provision in the Pennsylvania school code, that the application of the law was limited in rural communities. Hence it is of great importance that the General Government should take up this question, so that it can disseminate information as to the importance of these questions of rural education, vocational education, and, more important than all, the conservation of the health of the school children, so that thereby hereafter men and women sound in mind and body can be obtained for the advancement of the country.

I trust that the amendment will prevail, increasing the appropriation for these beneficent purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important items in this appropriation bill, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] ought to prevail.

The particular item here is in this language:

For the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including salaries, $6,000.

The amendment is to increase that amount to $15,000. If this increase is made, it will be expended in the improvement of methods of rural education. When a proposition comes before this House looking to the betterment of farming conditions, ordinarily it commands friends in its support; and no more meritorious proposition looking to that betterment has been considered in this House than the increase proposed in this amendment. Gentlemen who attempt to ridicule it, to minimize its importance, are simply not advertent to the movement in progress for the betterment of agricultural methods. It was only on yesterday that the central committee of the American Bankers' Association, meeting at some point in the State of New York, passed a resolution looking toward the stoppage of the movement for the depopulation of the farms, for the betterment of farming methods, and for an increase in agricultural production. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] referred to some of the methods of investigation proposed by the Commissioner of Education, and in that he reflected, as I understand, the wishes of the commissioner himself.

The commissioner is Dr. P. P. Claxton, an eminent successor of the worthy gentlemen who have preceded him in that high position, and in the estimates submitted to Congress it is shown here that he asks for an increase of $30,000 in this appropriation, the whole amount to be expended in additional specialists and other employees in the advancement of rural education.

Mr. Chairman, the one thought which, as I understand, is to-day dominating the minds of the best educators is to make our system of education in larger degree vocational, to make the rural schools institutions which shall not only fit the pupils for successful farm work, but teach them to understand that the vocation of farming is one of the most attractive which they could adopt. In all the States, particularly the agricultural States, men who have given the deepest study to this subject realize that if this movement of depopulating the farms is to cease we must introduce into our rural schools teaching upon the elements of agriculture, something of the problems of plant life, something of the elemental knowledge of the soil, something by which these children shall have added to their curriculum studies which will make farm life more attractive to them and which will make them more successful in their vocation.

The object of this appropriation is simply to increase the efforts of the Bureau of Education, in cooperation with the departments of education of the several States, to make the rural schools more vocational, to make them more useful in the rural life where they are established, and to help make farm life more attractive and the vocation of the farmer more profitable than it has been in the past.

Mr. Chairman, what the Department of Agriculture is doing in its line the Bureau of Education ought to be doing. It is acknowledged by all thoughtful men that the Department of Agriculture is adding millions of dollars to the productiveness of our country, and we ought to give the same encouragement and the same opportunity for increasing the usefulness of its functions to this Bureau of Education.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have watched the course of the Representative from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who offered this amendment, with a great deal of interest since I have been a Member of this House, and I want to compliment him and his constituency upon the splendid record he has been making here in the interests of the people. Then in discussing this item I wish to call the attention of this House to the splendidly equipped man who now fills the position at the head of this bureau, Prof. P. P. Claxton, a native of North Carolina, who for a number of years has been identified with the faculty of the University of Tennessee, and who was the originator and the heart and soul of the great summer school inaugurated at the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, Tenn., for the development of the educational interests of the entire South.

Of the very many excellent appointments made by President Taft, with a view to promoting the efficiency of the public service, he certainly did not err in naming Prof. Claxton. It was not a question of politics, for he is an independent Democrat, but that selection was based alone upon the ground of efficiency, and in making that appointment the President received his inspiration from the leading educational institutions scattered all over the country.

Now that this bureau has at its head a man in every way equipped for the extension and development of the educational interests of the country, we should not hamper him in not voting appropriations for active, efficient, and energetic work in the field. This Congress could not make a better investment than along the lines proposed in this amendment; and when we think of the immense amount of money we are voting out of the National Treasury, and consider the fact that for this bureau we are voting less than $75,000, I can not understand why any Member who believes in education, and especially in the need for improvement of rural educational methods, can stand in the way of the adoption of this amendment. I hope that the members of the Committee on Appropriations while they are going over the various departments with a fine-toothed comb, looking for retrenchment and reduction of public expenses, will not carry that method or policy to the extreme, but on the other hand will deal most leniently with this department, which should appeal to every Member of this House. [Applause.] If we are to make rural life desirable and keep the boys on the farms and away from the crowded cities, Congress must look to legislation that will make conditions in the rural districts more desirable for the old and young alike. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to say that I am in thorough accord and in full sympathy with everything that has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The work sought to be done by the Commissioner of Education is very desirable and is being done by the various States of the Union.

I want at this time to pay a tribute to the zeal, the earnestness, and ability of the present commissioner, Dr. P. P. Claxton. [Applause.] I will indulge in a little prophecy with reference to that officer. I confidently believe that the Bureau of Education under his administration will accomplish as much good as this bureau did under the direction and guidance of that distinguished scholar, the late Dr. William Torrey Harris. But, gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to the pending amendment, and for this reason: Unfortunately for the gentleman from South Carolina who offers this amendment, every dollar that was asked for the purpose for which he seeks to increase the appropriation by $9,000 was granted by your committee. I read from the estimates:

For the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including salaries, $6,000.

Every dollar for this purpose estimated for, your committee allowed, and is carried in this bill as an appropriation under the Bureau of Education. Dr. Claxton desired to go beyond the authorized functions now being discharged by his bureau. He wanted to employ experts, to venture into a field not authorized by law, not provided for by statute, to employ experts in vocational education, to employ specialists in home making, to employ specialists and experts in relation to secondary schools; and your committee felt that they were not authorized under the law to grant that request. If the gentleman from South Carolina had offered an amendment to provide for these specialists, there would have been some appropriateness in the amendment he offered; but he proposes to increase an item for which Dr. Claxton himself did not ask but $6,000. We did not feel authorized to go beyond the scope of the law to provide in this bill for activities not authorized by law.

The law makes no provision for the employment of experts in vocational education. The law does not authorize the employment of specialists in home making. It does authorize and there is carried an appropriation in the bill of $6,000 for the purpose urged by the gentleman from South Carolina, estimated for by the department at $6,000 and allowed by your committee at $6,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the committee, nolens volens, grant an increase of $9,000 beyond what Dr. Claxton has asked?

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Texas has seen in the consideration of appropriation bills, dozens of times, the Committee of the Whole House increase the appropriation beyond the estimate.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; but not during this Congress——

Mr. LEVER. Yes; by this Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the gentleman is mistaken, but I want to say that such action is never justified.

Mr. Chairman, we have at the head of the various bureaus of our Government—and I approve of it—enthusiasts, men who magnify, and properly so, the importance of the work that they have in hand. They always ask for every dollar that they can justify at the hands of Congress, and in this particular item Dr. Claxton did not ask one cent beyond $6,000 for this purpose, and that we allowed him. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SMALL. I want to say to the gentleman that I find in the Book of Estimates under the item of $6,000 these words:

Additional for specialists, assistants, and clerks in rural education, submitted $30,900.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make an observation in connection with this debate on the general subject of education. I am not advised as to the particular merits of the amendment now pending, but I shall vote, as I always have done, for every appropriation asked for to promote the cause of education. Therefore I shall vote for this amendment. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one observation I would like to make on the general question of education, which, it seems to me, concerns Congress as much as it does the States. Under our Constitution the States have sole and exclusive jurisdiction with respect to that subject, but there is one matter which concerns the National Legislature as much as any of the State legislatures, and that is that all of our children should be properly educated with respect to government and governmental affairs.

I take this occasion to say what I have wished to say for some time past: That our courses of study should be enlarged so as to include instruction in the science of government. At the present time our children leave school at the age of 14 and 15 years absolutely ignorant, if I may use that harsh term, with respect to our fundamental structure of government. We should remember that the safety of our institutions and of our Government rests not upon the written law, but upon the loyalty of the hearts and minds of the people; and therefore our boys should be instilled with knowledge of our Constitution and of our institutions, because upon that knowledge, in the future, depends the security of the country. [Applause.] How can our young men be expected, when they become of voting age, to vote intelligently upon propositions to change our governmental system, when as a matter of fact they lack the necessary knowledge of the fundamentals of government, of the checks and balances provided by the fathers, and of the difference between our tried system of self-government and other systems embracing untried and radical innovations? In my limited time I merely wish to call attention to this important matter, so that educators may consider it with a view to enlarging the course of study of our schools in this essential particular. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were 47 ayes and 24 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina demanded tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken; and 17 Members having arisen, tellers were refused.

Mr. BURLESON. I demand the other side, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The order to vote by tellers requires one-fifth of a quorum, and there is no other side. The yeas have it; the amendment is agreed to, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior: The following sums, which shall be so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies therein, namely: For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary of the Interior and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the Interior Department, including $7,500 for the Civil Service Commission: For furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, street car tickets not exceeding $100, expressage, wagons and harness, motor trucks, motorcycles, and bicycles, maintenance and exchange of same, food, forage, and shoeing of horses, diagrams, awnings, filing and labor-saving devices, constructing model and other cases and furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses, including fuel and lights, typewriting and adding machines and exchange of same, $122,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$122,000" and substitute in lieu thereof the figures "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 102, line 21, strike out the figures "$122,000" and insert the figures "$75,000."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph at which my amendment is directed deals with an appropriation for contingent expenses. It is very unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that the word "contingent" is so often used by legislative bodies. While I am aware of the fact that it is impossible in every case to foretell just what expenses are necessary, but wherever it is possible to itemize the various objects for an appropriation it ought to be done. This paragraph carries an appropriation of $122,000 without indicating the items which it is intended to cover. The people of the country are anxious to know how their money is spent and for what purposes. This character of appropriations gives an opportunity for a reckless, wasteful, and useless expenditure of money by those who have charge of it, and such appropriations should never be made unless it is absolutely necessary. On examining the hearings before the Appropriations Committee, on page 160, I find the following colloquy between Congressman BURLESON, of Texas, and Mr. Wilmeth:

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Wilmeth, I notice in the statement of the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department an item for one of the high officials of the Treasury Department, for expenses incurred incident to attending the American Bankers' Association in California, $403.75.

Mr. WILMETH. That refers to the treasurer.

Mr. BURLESON. Are you familiar with the necessities for that trip?

Mr. WILMETH. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. Chairman, here is an appropriation of $403.75 undoubtedly used by the Treasurer of the United States for paying his personal expenses to attend a bankers' meeting. It seems as though no one before the committee could give any reason why this money should be used in this way. Again, Mr. Chairman, I find on pages 163 and 164 of the same hearings the following colloquy between the same gentlemen:

Mr. BURLESON. While we are on that question, I notice an item here of freight on one desk from Boston, Mass., to Washington, D. C., for an official of the Treasury Department. What is that?

Mr. WILMETH. What is that, Mr. BURLESON?

Mr. BURLESON. It is a small charge; the freight on one desk; but why are you shipping desks around the country?

Mr. WILMETH. Without knowing what that specific case is, I presume possibly that was a desk for the Secretary, or one of the Assistant Secretaries, that was purchased there. That is not the usual place to purchase furniture of that kind for the department, because we usually buy it off of the regular contract; but that is unquestionably what that refers to, and that is usual, I should say, too.

Mr. BURLESON. I note an item here—an item for shipping boxes to Dublin, N. H. Why do you ship boxes to Dublin, N. H.?

Mr. WILMETH. The Secretary maintains a summer office there.

Mr. BURLESON. Right on that point, does the Government move the office of the various bureaus to the summer homes of department heads when they establish them during the summer time?

Mr. WILMETH. If the Secretary wanted a typewriter from the department sent up there for official use; yes. We would pay freight on that typewriter, too. We would not pay for anything that was not for official use, however. Now, this last summer he had two men up there with him, and I sent a typewriter from the department and we paid the express charges on it—just boxed it up over here in our storeroom and sent it to him. I think you will find those cases are more or less infrequent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find a condition existing in the Treasury Department which may well cause us to pause and hesitate when appropriations present themselves under the head of "contingent" expenses. The $403.75 was undoubtedly expended by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of paying his own personal expenses to attend a bankers' meeting on the other side of the continent.

Mr. Chairman, we should not forget that we are dealing now with the money which is collected from the common people of this country, because they are the great consuming force and, inasmuch as the greater portion of our taxes are collected at the customhouse, this great consuming force pays the greater part of these taxes. The section hand on the railroad, or the coal miner working in subterranean dusty and smutty caverns, the employee in the sweatshop factory, and the toiling producers of the soil, pay more of these taxes than the millionaires of the country, and they are the people who have a right to know just how their money is expended. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of appropriating a dollar of this money for any other purpose than that which is absolutely necessary to carry on the powers of this Government. To appropriate money for private uses, such as this $403.75 appears to be, under the head of "Contingent expenses," is an unwarranted, high-handed act and should not be sanctioned by any decent legislator. The Secretary of the Treasury will receive a salary of $12,000 anually hereafter until it is changed to a larger sum, and that is what will be done if we may judge the future action of Congress by what it has done in the past. He is plenty able to pay his own expenses anywhere, because he is a rich banker and I understand has a large income other than that of his salary. We are pledged to a system of economy, and for one I am in favor of carrying it out in good faith. I am not in harmony with that class of men who believe in fooling the people all the time, neither do I believe, as some would pretend to indicate, that the people can be fooled much longer on any of these great questions of state. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I believe in dealing with the people's money as economically and as wisely as we would our own business affairs.

Mr. Chairman, it would appear that the Secretary of the Treasury has established at Dublin, N. H., a summer home, and that he is spending at least a portion of the year up there. This is a species of aristocracy bordering on royalty, but I am not complaining because the Secretary has established a summer home, but I do seriously object to his moving the office of the Secretary of the Treasury away from the city of Washington and establishing it at other and uncertain places in the country. Our forefathers established this department at Washington, D. C., and he who accepts the position is expected to keep it in Washington. Neither am I in favor of expending the money of the people to pay freight charges on the necessary furniture and other things to be used in connection with the office at his summer home. If he is compelled to do any portion of the work at his summer resort he should provide the means to pay the expenses of shipping articles back and forth from Washington to his country seat. There is no warrant under the law to pay these expenses out of the Treasury of the United States. It looks too much like playing a game of royalty, a policy which is un-American in character, and against the spirit of the institutions of this Republic. Yet, Mr. Chairman, under the head of "Contingent expenses" appropriations are made from year to year and expended for just such illegal and unwarranted purposes as automobile hire, traveling expenses, expensive receptions, useless and expensive furniture, and a thousand other things. Just how far the Government is going to commit itself on the question of "contingent" appropriations I am not able to say, but I do want it clearly understood that I refuse to follow the leadership of any man in such an uncertain policy which breeds corruption in the expenditure of the people's money. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to change the amount proposed under this head from $122,000 to $75,000. I trust that the amendment will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor general of the Territory of Arizona, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $13,000; in all, $15,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 105, line 1, strike out the words "of the Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 105, line 1, strike out the words "of the Territory."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor general of the Territory of New Mexico, $2,500; and for clerks in his office, $15,500; in all, $18,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On line 20, page 106, I move to strike out the words "of the Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 106, line 20, strike out the words "of the Territory."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery, telephone, towels, binding, post-office box rent, books of reference for office use, and other incidental expenses, including the exchange of typewriters, $900.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 107, after line 7, by inserting:

"For surveyor general of South Dakota, $2,000; for clerks in his office, $5,000; for rent of office for the surveyor general, pay of messengers, stationery supplies, drafting instruments, fuel, ice, binding records, post-office box rent, telegrams, registration of letters, towels, furniture and typewriter repairs, books of reference for office use, and other incidental expenses, including the exchange of typewriters, $800; in all, $7,800."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the committee in the draft of the bill has dropped out the provision for the office of the surveyor general of the State of South Dakota. The amendment which I have offered restores the item to the bill in accordance with the estimates from the department published in the Book of Estimates. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his testimony was questioned as to whether this office should not with others be abandoned at this time. His testimony in answering the following questions I will read:

Mr. BURLESON. Would it not be more economical to conduct it from this end of the line?

Mr. DENNETT. I doubt it. We would have to have more clerks to do it, Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. BURLESON. Could not a number of the offices of the surveyors general be abolished?

Mr. DENNETT. Not under the present conditions; they are all doing a great deal of work.

These questions were drawn out under the preceding questions which had reference directly to this office in South Dakota. The note from the Book of Estimates on this subject is as follows:

NOTE.—No appropriation for the payment of salaries of clerks in the surveyor general's office for South Dakota was asked last year, the public surveys therein being largely completed, but a special appropriation of $50,000 for resurveys in Nebraska was made for 1912, without provision for office work upon the returns thereon, and Nebraska not being a surveying district and the General Land Office being wholly unable to handle these returns without materially increased force in the surveying division, the same will be sent to the surveyor general of South Dakota for working up, and that official will also be required to handle the returns of fractional South Dakota surveys which last year were handled with difficulty in the General Land Office because of the pressure of regular work.

Now, the truth, Mr. Chairman, is that the subdivisional surveying of South Dakota is not all completed. Work of that kind is prepared for the field this year. Then, in addition, is all this work under a special appropriation for Nebraska which is attached to this South Dakota office for the purpose of office work, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office says very frankly if this item is dropped it simply means that an additional force will have to be provided to do that work elsewhere. In addition to that it ought to be noted, something not referred to in the testimony, that South Dakota is quite an important mining State. In gold production it still ranks fourth in the Union, and all of that work of making the surveys for applications for mineral patents is done in the office of the surveyor general at Huron, and it has often happened, indeed, owing to the accumulation of other work that mining-survey work is considerably behind.

If this office is entirely dropped out and no provision whatever is made in this bill for the performance of that necessary work for the making of mineral surveys it will be still further behind. It is perfectly apparent from the testimony of the commissioner and under the estimates that so far as this coming fiscal year is concerned the retention of this office is absolutely necessary for the carrying on of the work. As one representing that State, when work of that office is completed I certainly shall not be here asking for a continuation, but the funds for the coming fiscal year are absolutely necessary, as the commissioner himself has stated.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It does not make any difference to Nebraska where this work is performed, but it is important that it be performed punctually, somewhere or other. Hitherto, since so much resurveying has had to be done in Nebraska, and the office of surveyor general for Nebraska having gone out of existence, this work has been performed in the office of the surveyor general of South Dakota—that is, making out reports on surveys made in Nebraska, or, rather, resurveys, because all of Nebraska had been resurveyed before the office of surveyor general in that State was abolished, but latterly it has become necessary to make resurveys on account of the obliteration of the very old surveys caused by sand blowing in the sandy regions and by prairie fires, and, to some extent, on account of imperfect surveys in the first instance. Now, the office in South Dakota of the surveyor general has been doing this work, is prepared to do the work, is used to doing the work, and can do the work expeditiously, because the work of that State of that character is not very large.

The work might be greatly delayed here at Washington, and the department says it is not equipped for doing the work here. I know from personal observation, and perhaps most of the Members know from personal observation, especially those from public-land States who visit the survey branch, that they have not the office room there for the help to perform this work; and, besides, I deem it a proper consideration that the necessary help, which will be temporary, more or less, can be picked up better in South Dakota than it can here at Washington. I think the help that comes here to Washington wants to be permanent, and they are apt to ask to have themselves made permanent if they come here, while it can adjust itself automatically out in South Dakota, where they can pick up the necessary help, use it as long as the employees are necessary, and dispense with clerks when they become unnecessary. And therefore I deem it very proper that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Just a minute, gentlemen; there is no reason why the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota should be adopted. The testimony of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is that the surveying work in South Dakota is practically completed, and the only way that they can possibly give that office any work to do is to send to South Dakota the survey work that is done in Nebraska.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman what his idea is as to the proper manner in which to do the mineral surveying work that is being done for South Dakota in the surveyor general's office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have simply the statement here of the commissioner. The commissioner says that in South Dakota the work is virtually completed.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is the work of the original survey. The subdivision work is still on in South Dakota, as he states in his annotation here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman will notice that they did not even submit any estimates for the current year for South Dakota. There is not a clerk employed; there is no salary being paid, unless it is the salary of the surveyor general. Now, then, they have adopted a new system for the surveying of these public lands. Instead of letting this work out by contract, which has been the work that these surveyors general have supervised—making contracts with people to survey these public lands—the Land Office is now surveying the land with Government employees. We are doing the work with our own force, and the time is rapidly approaching when there will be no governmental necessity for a surveyor general in any State in the Union. And surely the Committee of the Whole is not going to put into this bill a provision for a surveyor general in the State of South Dakota when the Commissioner of the General Land Office says that the work is practically completed, and the only way to give the office any work to do is to send it from Nebraska or some other State.

Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of janitor, stationery, plats and supplies, printing and binding, drawing tables, drafting instruments, post-office box rent, typewriters, drayage, towels, books of reference for office use, and other incidental expenses, including the exchange of typewriters, $1,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a general question as to the construction of it. The question is why the surveyors general of these various States are put into this bill rather than into the sundry civil bill; the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill containing in the main appropriations for the employees and officials at the seat of Government? There are some exceptions, I know, namely, the shipping commissioners, the steamboat inspectors, the surveyors general, and a few others.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This bill does cover the items the gentleman refers to. Most of the moneys that are used outside of the District of Columbia are appropriated for in the sundry civil bill, but we simply have followed what we found to be the precedent, appropriating for the surveyors general and their clerical help only, but not for the other work.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney General: Attorney General, $12,000; Solicitor General, $10,000; assistant to the Attorney General, $7,000; 6 Assistant Attorneys General, at $5,000 each; Assistant Attorney General of the Post Office Department, $5,000; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $5,000; Solicitor for the Department of State, $5,000; 3 attorneys, at $5,000 each, one of whom shall have charge of all condemnation proceedings in the District of Columbia and supervise the examination of titles and matters arising therefrom in which the United States shall be a party or have an interest, and no special attorney or counsel, or services of persons other than of those provided for herein, shall be employed for such purposes; attorneys—1 at $3,750, 3 at $3,500 each, 1 at $3,250; 12 at $3,000 each, 1 at $2,500; assistant attorneys—1 at $3,500, 2 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,750 each, 5 at $2,500 each, 1 at $2,400, 2 at $2,000 each; assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the buildings, $3,000; superintendent of buildings, $500; private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General, $3,000; clerk to the Attorney General, $1,600; stenographer to the Solicitor General, $1,600; law clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 2 of class 4; clerk in office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $1,800; attorney in charge of pardons, $3,000; superintendent of prisons, $4,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,000; Chief of Division of Investigation, $3,500; examiners—3 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,000 each, 3 at $1,800 each; librarian, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4, 12 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 15 of class 1, 13 at $1,000 each, 20 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; packer, $900; messenger, $960; 5 messengers; 13 assistant messengers; 7 laborers; 7 watchmen; engineer, $1,200; 2 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 firemen; 2 conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; head charwoman, $480; 22 charwomen. Division of Accounts: Chief of Division of Accounts, $2,500; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 2 at $900 each; in all, $407,610.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill the reason for reducing the force in the Department of Justice in the bureau for the examination of records and titles.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the section for three attorneys, at $5,000 each, one of whom shall have charge of the examination of titles and the condemnation of lands in which the United States is party. Is that what the gentleman refers to?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What does the gentleman wish to know about it?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to know the committee's reason for making a reduction there, because I understood the department needed these services.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have not made any reduction. We have simply provided what is in the current law. What the gentleman refers to happened in this way: We provided in this section that one of these attorneys shall represent the United States in condemnation proceedings. That is for the purpose of preventing some outside employment that has taken place, as the gentleman is aware. It happens that the gentleman who has been conducting that kind of work for the Attorney General is being paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, and that was brought to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee since this bill has been introduced. But I do not think the Attorney General will have any trouble in that regard. He can transfer this man to this particular appropriation. It seems he is especially fitted for that work; and then he can take care of one of the other men under some other appropriation.

Mr. AUSTIN. That has reference to Mr. Strickland, has it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe that is the name.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the appropriation for the Department of Justice, under whose jurisdiction come the prosecutions for the violations of the antitrust law and the interstate-commerce law.

I know that this bill does not carry the appropriations for the expenses for the Department of Justice to aid it in the prosecution of violations of the antitrust law, but that the sundry civil bill will carry them. It appears that in 1902—I think it was, Mr. Chairman—by an amendment placed upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill there was appropriated the sum of $500,000—an amendment offered by a Democrat on this side of the Chamber—for the purpose of prosecuting the violators of the antitrust law and those who might violate the interstate-commerce law. That appropriation, or whatever has been necessary of it, has been carried each year, and not until that appropriation was made had there been provided funds for the department to vigorously prosecute violations of those laws.

Now, I am one of those who believe that the antitrust law as it now exists is a good law. It may need amendment, but not such as will lessen its force and efficiency. I believe that it can be enforced. I believe that the decisions of the Supreme Court as they have pronounced upon the law are sufficient to enforce the law against its violators. I do not believe that there should be any amendment to that law which would make any distinction between "good trusts" and "bad trusts." I do not believe there are any good or benevolent trusts in this country. [Applause.]

I do not believe that this Congress ought to be called upon to pass, or should pass, any law that would exempt from the provisions of the antitrust law any corporation or anybody who would engage in monopoly or in the restriction of trade.

I desire to call attention just here to what has been recommended that Congress should do in this particular. On the 8th day of December, 1908, we had a very celebrated message sent to Congress by the President, Mr. Roosevelt, on various subjects, a message in which recommendations were made to the Congress as to what it should do with reference to enacting laws on the subject. I will read from the message sent to the House on the 8th day of December, 1908, as follows:

As regards the great corporations engaged in interstate business, and especially the railroads, I can only repeat what I have already again and again said in my messages to the Congress. I believe that under the interstate clause of the Constitution the United States has complete and paramount right to control all agencies of interstate commerce, and I believe that the National Government alone can exercise this right with wisdom and effectiveness so as both to secure justice from, and to do justice to, the great corporations which are the most important factors in modern business.

I desire specially to call attention to what I shall now read:

I believe that it is worse than folly to attempt to prohibit all combinations as is done by the Sherman antitrust law, because such a law can be enforced only imperfectly and unequally, and its enforcement works almost as much hardship as good. I strongly advocate that instead of an unwise effort to prohibit all combinations, there shall be substituted a law which shall expressly permit combinations which are in the interest of the public, but shall at the same time give to some agency of the National Government full power of control and supervision over them. One of the chief features of this control should be securing entire publicity in all matters which the public has a right to know, and furthermore, the power, not by judicial but by Executive action, to prevent or put a stop to every form of improper favoritism or other wrongdoing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for a further five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, it was stated in the press yesterday that the gentleman who wrote this message declared that the present President of the United States, who quoted it in a speech recently made, was a fit subject for admission to the Ananias Club; and I have read the identical words that the President of the United States in his speech in Maryland said, that the former President said that "it is worse than folly to undertake to prohibit all combinations, as is done by the Sherman antitrust law." I have also read his recommendations, not that the law be repealed but that some other law should be substituted for it. And how could you substitute some other law for it unless you would repeal its provisions in a very material degree?

I will read from the message of March 25, 1908:

All of these combinations, if and while existing for and engaged in the promotion of innocent and proper purposes, should be recognized as legal. As I have repeatedly pointed out, this antitrust law was a most unwisely drawn statute. It was perhaps inevitable that in feeling after the right remedy the first attempts to provide such should be crude; and it was absolutely imperative that some legislation should be passed to control, in the interest of the public, the business use of the enormous aggregations of corporate wealth that are so marked a feature of the modern industrial world. But the present antitrust law, in its construction and working, has exemplified only too well the kind of legislation which, under the guise of being thoroughgoing, is drawn up in such sweeping form as to become either ineffective or else mischievous.

In the modern industrial world combinations are absolutely necessary; they are necessary among business men, they are necessary among laboring men, they are becoming more and more necessary among farmers. Some of these combinations are among the most powerful of all instruments for wrongdoing. Others offer the only effective way of meeting actual business needs.

Then he urges this:

The interstate-commerce law should be amended so as to give railroads the right to make traffic agreements, subject to these agreements being approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and published in all of their details.

So there we have the statements made by the former President in these messages, in which the Sherman antitrust law is declared to be "ineffective" and "mischievous" and should be supplanted by another law; messages in which he said "it is worse than folly to attempt to prohibit all combinations."

And we have seen in the last few days and in the last few weeks that the "good trusts," like the Harvester Trust and the United States Steel Corporation, are furnishing the campaign funds with which to nominate the former President, and if they are successful in nominating and electing the former President who uttered these words, and you shall have a Republican Congress, you can have the Sherman antitrust law either repealed or so modified that something will be "substituted" for it, in which event the gentlemen who compose the Harvester Trust and the Steel Trust can become the controllers of the business of the country, sanctioned by the man to whom they are now furnishing money and campaign funds for the purpose of having him renominated, and if renominated I doubt not all the money and campaign funds necessary to secure his election, if that be possible.

Now that we have reached this part of the bill relating to the Department of Justice, where we provide the money for the purpose of enforcing the law and carrying out these various prosecutions, I have thought it proper to call the attention of the country to the fact that the President of the United States, in 1908, began his attack upon the Sherman antitrust law and favored the substitution of something else for it; that he was in favor of railroad pooling; and if he shall be reelected, I apprehend his accustomed consistency will induce him to take a like position.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I inquire of the gentleman the name of the President who declared that another law should be substituted for the Sherman law?

Mr. BARTLETT. I read from his messages, from the message of March 25, 1908, and the message of December 8, 1908. I did not suppose that anybody would forget who was President during those eventful years.

Mr. MANN. No Democrat can forget it.

Mr. BARTLETT. No Democrat will forget it, and there are some Republicans who would be glad to forget it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOCHT. Does not the gentleman from Georgia think that the gentleman referred to in these messages will be nominated and elected, without regard to his position on that subject?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have fears that he will be nominated—not the fear that he can not be defeated, but fear for the good of the country and the safety of its institutions if he should be elected. I believe probably he will be nominated, and he may be elected; but nothing so bad ever happened to the country as if he should be. I call attention to the fact that in place of the Sherman antitrust law he desired to have something else substituted, and he desired that the courts should not have any control over the enforcement of the law, but that the power should be granted to the President to enforce that law instead of having it enforced by judicial proceedings. This same President did undertake to decide questions which the courts should have decided, and on the 4th of November, 1907, if I recall correctly, he ruthlessly trampled the Sherman antitrust law beneath his feet and permitted the great steel corporation to take over and absorb its only competitor in this country, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. No wonder that Perkins and Morgan and Gary and McCormick, and all these men who control the great steel corporation, are flocking to his support and swelling his coffers in order to carry on a campaign of purity as exemplified in Maryland yesterday, when, as I am informed, the votes of the colored brother sold for from $10 to $75 apiece. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a communication on the subject of the conservation of moisture and rainfall in connection with scientific farming.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a communication. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication referred to is as follows:

CONSERVATION OF THE WATER SUPPLY.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1912.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN.

DEAR SIR: As the Representative of a State where the conservation and best use of its rainfall is of vital importance for the best interests of your State in its agricultural advancement, as well as of all the region of country with a somewhat limited precipitation, and as a practical means of greatly lessening floods, in answer to your inquiry I submit the following as the result of my investigations and experiments of 17 years to find a practical method of stopping the enormous waste from allowing more than one-half the rainfall to run off from the surface where it falls onto the lowlands, making them too wet for their best use, and into the streams, causing damaging floods, is something that might well command the attention of the Congress. This run-off carries with it the fertilizing material that rain water contains and that ought to be absorbed into the soil where the rain falls; carries with it much of the decaying vegetable matter from the surface that is needed there to form the humus so vitally essential to plant growth; carries with it in its wash and erosion some of the best of the soil, polluting the streams, and filling up their beds with silt. All of this waste, in addition to the loss of soil moisture on the uplands, where it is needed, and in the case of lands that are now semiarid is badly needed, can easily be stopped.

The method in agricultural operations is contour plowing and disk harrowing. This consists of plowing a backfurrow around the outside of the field, forming a ridge to hold the water from running off from the field itself; then inside of this ridge plowing backfurrows at intervals across the slope and around the knolls and hollows, guiding the plow so that the first furrow that marks the position of the backfurrow will be horizontal, curving, wherever necessary, to keep the furrow on the same water level so that the water will not run lengthwise of the furrow; make the backfurrows at intervals apportioned to the degree of slope of the surface. When all the necessary backfurrows are plowed, then plow around and around each space between the backfurrows, turning the furrow always toward the backfurrowed ridge, leaving the resulting dead furrow in the center of each space; run the disk harrow parallel to the backfurrows so as to throw more dirt onto each ridge the first time around, and do not lap the disk at any time; this will leave innumerable smaller ridges made by the disk, each little ridge horizontal, and no flow of water lengthwise of any of the ridges. There should be a backfurrow in the center of each hollow and a dead furrow on the top of each knoll, so that the tendency of each year of cultivation will be toward a general leveling. These many ridges distributed over the surface prevent any run-off whatever on any of the semiarid lands, and except in extraordinary downpours prevent it on all lands, and even in extraordinary downpours hold back so much of it that no damaging floods would ever occur where the lands generally were worked under this system. These ridges do not interfere with mowing or reaping if the mower or reaper be run up and down the slope so as to cross the ridges at right angles. The ridges once formed remain to hold the rainfall when the land is seeded down for meadow or pasture.

In forestry every necessary trail or wagon road through the forest should be an embankment to hold back the run-off, which it will do very effectually if intelligently located and short side spurs be made where needed to prevent water from running lengthwise of the trail. Every such combined ridge, spur, and trail is an effective firebreak for fire when it starts and is confined to the forest floor. As the forest floor itself is a considerable obstruction to the surface run-off of the rainfall, I have found in practice that the additional expense of combining the necessary ridges, trails, wagon roads, and firebreaks of a forest to hold the rainfall and guard against sweeping fires is not enough greater than the cost of the trails, roads, and firebreaks alone to be at all prohibitory. And as it is only necessary to have enough small dams and embankments to supplement the obstructions of the forest floor itself, our forests can easily be put in condition to hold back nearly all the surface run-off and the annual growth be doubled, as I have proved in my own forest at Hubert, Minn. This system enables each prairie farmer to grow from pine seed a timber belt windbreak for his farm that will yield him in fuel and timber as much profit as any other equal acreage on his farm. To do this he has only to plow a back-furrowed ridge on each side of the strip where he wants his windbreak, with an occasional cross ridge. If the ground slopes lengthwise of the strip, finish plowing with a dead furrow in the middle; disk harrow, broadcast the pine seed early in the spring, harrow in with a light harrow, mulch with 2 inches of straw, and nature will do the rest. The drifting of soil in prairie sections is greatly lessened by the system of ridges, and, combined with an efficient pine windbreak and the plowing under of legumes, will be eliminated. Pine trees for windbreaks can be grown from the seed anywhere in the United States under the embankment system, but it is not practicable to grow them in some sections by transplanting.

This method of conservation of the rainfall is not an untried theory of mine, but has been worked out to a practical demonstrated fact by me on my 1,500-acre tract at Hubert, Minn., and as this method puts into the soil all of the rainfall and melting snow instead of a part of it, as other dry-farming methods do, it will make every acre of dry land that has 10 inches or more of annual rainfall good farming land. It enables the farmer on semiarid land to do away with the necessity of a summer fallow, and raise instead an annual crop; it enables the efficient irrigation of a much larger acreage with the same amount of stored water; it stops soil erosion and enables the farmers of the great Northwest to prevent future damaging floods in the Mississippi River by holding the rainfall on their farms, greatly to their own benefit and profit. That farmers and owners of timberlands will do this as soon as they are shown the process and its benefits there can be no doubt. I find that even where I have in wet years 34 inches of precipitation it doubles the annual agricultural crops and more than doubles the forest growth. I have more than a million pine trees growing from seed under this system, some of which are 12 inches in diameter in 17 years from the seed, and the land upon which these trees and my crops grow and my cows and goats are pastured contributes not one drop of its rainfall and melting snow to the streams at the headwaters of the Mississippi at flood times, and with millions of farmers, cattle rangers, and timberland owners doing the same thing because it benefits them personally, floods would be easily controllable. Instead of millions of dollars annually to repair the damages from Mississippi River floods let the Government expend one-tenth of one million in establishing cooperative demonstration farms in all the region tributary to that great river and show the people how to stop this waste. Indeed, the cost of this part of this great conservation work need not exceed $5,000 a year, as I am prepared to show, while the cost of putting the Government forest reservations in a condition to hold back one-half the present surface run-off need not exceed $100,000 a year for five years, and each year's work would stop 10 per cent of the run-off and would increase the annual growth 10 per cent. I am thoroughly familiar with the topography and conditions of the forest reserves tributary to the Mississippi River, and from long practical experience as well as scientific investigation in this work I can estimate closely the cost and effect.

With great respect,

FREEMAN THORP.

HUBERT, MINN.

Ordered, That Mr. GAMBLE be excused from further service as a conferee on the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands, and Mr. CLAPP was appointed in his place.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed House concurrent resolution 46 with an amendment.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 305):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Tuesday, May 7, 1912.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 23774. An act providing an appropriation to check the inroads of the Missouri River in Dakota County, Nebr.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The administrative audit of all expenditures under the control of the Department of Justice shall hereafter be made in the Division of Accounts of that department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 117, strike out the paragraph included in lines 17, 18, and 19.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that this item in the bill with reference to the administrative audit of expenditures in the Department of Justice was covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that we adopted on Saturday last relating to all the departments of the Government. I do not know whether that is the case or not. I have conferred with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] about it, and he thinks that this does not conflict with the amendment already agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this provision was inserted in the bill before we had the Comptroller of the Treasury before the committee in regard to the other amendment which has already been adopted.

Mr. MANN. Of course this provision was in the bill as reported. The other amendment was offered from the floor and applies to all the departments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and this provision fixes the particular division that shall do this accounting in that department.

Mr. MANN. The other provision says that it shall not be done in a particular division. That is the trouble about it. The amendment which was agreed to the other day provides:

That hereafter the administrative examination of all public accounts preliminary to their audit by the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be made as contemplated by the so-called Dockery Act, approved July 31, 1894, and all vouchers and pay rolls shall be prepared and examined by and through the administrative heads of divisions and bureaus in the executive departments.

That is quite in conflict with a proposition that—

The administrative audit of all expenditures under the control of the Department of Justice shall hereafter be made in the Division of Accounts of that department.

Which does the gentleman intend—to have the accounts audited by the administrative heads in the Department of Justice or audited by the Division of Accounts?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As I stated, this clause was put in the bill before the other amendment was adopted, and if the other amendment covers it there would be no objection to this going out. The gentleman will understand that when the bill was originally prepared this clause was put in it, and subsequently we had Gen. Tracewell before us, and after conferring with him we agreed upon the amendment that has already been adopted.

Mr. MANN. Now, as I understand, when the Dockery law went into effect the result was that in the Department of Justice there was created a Division of Accounts for the purpose of passing on accounts of certain judicial officers, such as marshals, clerks, commissioners, and so forth. They, I suppose, would, under the provisions of the bill already agreed to, be audited by the Division of Accounts instead of by the disbursing officer as now provided. Of course the gentleman understands that the department itself is opposed to any change whatever. The department itself insists that, as a disbursing clerk has to pay from 50 or more appropriations and is responsible for the money he pays out, he ought to be permitted through his office to examine the accounts before he pays the money. But I take it that he is in no different position in the Department of Justice than the disbursing officer in any other department of the Government. It would seem to me that if you adopt a general rule for all departments it is not desirable to provide a special rule for one of the departments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, there is a reason in the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice has no divisions or bureaus like any other departments. The Division of Accounts was specifically created in order to meet that situation. In the Treasury Department the disbursing officer does not attempt to make the audit that is made here. He pays out from over 400 accounts, as against 50 accounts in the Department of Justice, and pays out a much larger sum of money with a much less force than does the disbursing officer in the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the amount of money paid out by a disbursing officer is not much of an indication of the amount of work that it may involve. There is not very much difficulty in paying out money in the Treasury where the sums are large and are fixed propositions. It is quite a different thing to examine the accounts of marshals, clerks, and other officials of the judicial department of the Government, where you have to examine the accounts of many different officers, and where, if you pay an account erroneously, you have to stand good for it. We have had lots of cases, since I have been in the House, coming to the Committee on Claims, involving claims of that nature, which have been allowed or disallowed in the Department of Justice, accounts in relation to marshals and accounts of clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the Treasury Department they average 11,000 to 12,000 checks a month, while in the Department of Justice they have 22,000 a year. There is just as much difficulty and trouble, just as much responsibility in the Treasury Department as in the Department of Justice, but there is this difference: The Treasury Department has its office adjusted in conformity with law. Under the Dockery Act, the provision to which the gentleman refers, it provided that certain accounts should be audited by the Attorney General before being passed to the auditor. That had not been the practice up to that time. In the law making that provision additional clerks were provided, and it specifically mentioned this audit, and in that way this Division of Accounts grew up. They audit the accounts of the marshal and other officers, while the disbursing officer audits the accounts of the judges and the departmental service. The attempt that is being made here is to make the Division of Accounts do the administrative audit for the entire department. I think it is the proper thing to do.

Mr. MANN. The Dockery Act provided:

Before transmission to the Department of the Treasury of the accounts of district attorneys, assistant attorneys, marshals, commissioners, clerks, and other officers of the courts of the United States, except consular courts, made out and approved as required by law, accounts relating to prisoners convicted and held for trial in any courts of the United States, and all other accounts relating to the business of the Department of Justice, the courts of the United States other than consular courts, shall be sent with vouchers to the Attorney General and examined under his supervision.

Now, the gentleman must remember, when computing the cost of the disbursing officer in the Attorney General's office compared with others, that the Attorney General has to pass upon these accounts and allow them or disallow them. It is not a mere audit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These accounts to which the gentleman has made reference are all audited now in the Division of Accounts, and not by the disbursing officer. Our purpose is to turn over from the disbursing officer the auditing of all other accounts to the Division of Accounts. I submit a letter from the Attorney General on this matter and my reply thereto:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1912.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (p. 117) is a provision that "The administrative audit of all expenditures under the control of the Department of Justice shall hereafter be made in the Division of Accounts of that department."

I do not know where this provision originated. It would upset the system which experience has evolved in the department. The Dockery Act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 210), contains the following provision:

"Before transmission to the Department of the Treasury, the accounts of district attorneys, assistant attorneys, marshals, commissioners, clerks, and other officers of the courts of the United States, except consular courts, made out and approved as required by law, and accounts relating to prisoners convicted or held for trial in any court of the United States, and all other accounts relating to the business of the Department of Justice, or of the courts of the United States other than consular courts, shall be sent with their vouchers to the Attorney General and examined under his supervision."

The enactment of the Dockery law necessitated the creation of the Division of Accounts of the Department of Justice, in order that the accounts of judicial officers, such as United States marshals, clerks of the United States courts, United States commissioners, wardens of penitentiaries, etc., should receive the administrative examination under the supervision of the Attorney General, as required by this act, which examination could be had in no other way.

The disbursing clerk pays from 50 appropriations accounts relating to the business of the department proper, such as salaries and traveling expenses of executive officers and employees, and purchases from the contingent fund, as well as salaries of judicial officers; and it was found for his protection that the audit of these accounts should be made in the disbursing office. A requirement by statute that this audit be made in the Division of Accounts would impair the efficiency of the audit and withdraw from the disbursing clerk the protection which has been evolved to prevent him from disbursing moneys which, on the audit of the Treasury Department or under the ruling of the comptroller, he might not be able to justify, and it would not result in any saving to the Government—in fact, if anything, it would increase the work and require a larger force and cause considerable delay in the settlement of accounts.

The Division of Accounts and the disbursing office are absolutely separate and distinct, and have no connection with each other.

For the reasons stated above, I beg that you will use your influence to have this provision stricken from the bill.

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM, Attorney General.

MAY 7, 1912.

Hon. GEO. W. WICKERSHAM, Attorney General.

DEAR SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your letter of yesterday concerning the provision in the pending legislative, etc., appropriation bill requiring the administrative audit of all accounts under the Department of Justice to be made in the Division of Accounts of the department, I beg to inform you that the same was inserted in the bill by the committee after very careful consideration.

It appears from a reading of the report of the Dockery Commission and the debates in Congress at the time of establishing the present system of accounting that the Department of Justice alone up to that time (1894) had not established and was not practicing a system of administrative audit of its accounts. Therefore in discontinuing the detailed audit of the comptroller's office and recognizing in its stead the administrative audit of the several departments, section 22 of the so-called Dockery Act (July 31, 1894) was adopted, together with section 13, which is quoted in your letter and which in terms established in your department an administrative audit of certain specified accounts "and all other accounts relating to the business of the Department of Justice or of the courts of the United States," and coincident with this legislation and in the same act provision was made for certain clerks "for examination of accounts as required by section 13."

Acting on the advice of the comptroller and other officials of the Treasury charged with the execution of the laws of accounting, as well as upon general knowledge acquired after quite an extended inquiry into the methods of administrative auditing in all of the departments, the committee are persuaded that it is fundamentally wrong to have such audit made by the same organization that is charged with the duty of disbursing in any department.

The committee are also persuaded that it was the clear intent of the accounting act of 1894, and the provision, at the same time, for the additional clerks referred to, to provide for one central auditing organization in the Department of Justice, and that it was not contemplated, at the time, or at any time since, by Congress that the disbursing clerk's office would also be an administrative auditing office.

Very respectfully,

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 24 ayes and 41 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of Commerce and Labor $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; confidential clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,100; chief clerk and superintendent, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $3,000; Chief of Appointment Division, $2,500; Chief, Division of Publications, $2,500; Chief, Division of Supplies, $2,100; clerks—10 of class 4, 11 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 11 of class 1, 10 at $1,000 each, 6 at $900 each; 2 telephone operators, at $720 each; messenger to the Secretary, $1,000; 5 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; 7 messenger boys, at $480 each; engineer, $1,000; 3 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 2 conductors of elevators, at $720 each; 2 firemen, at $660 each; 18 laborers; 5 laborers, at $480 each; cabinetmaker, $1,000; carpenter, $900; chief watchman, $900; 11 watchmen; 18 charwomen; in all, $170,300.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of commercial agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $60,000; and the results of such investigations shall be reported to Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that that is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina as to whether he contests that proposition.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that it was authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from North Carolina apprise the Chair where the law is?

Mr. SMALL. I find in the Book of Estimates under this paragraph a reference to the acts of February 14, 1903, and March 4, 1911.

Mr. BARTLETT. Those are appropriation acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Book of Estimates is not authorization, for it often carries estimates not authorized by law. The Chair will ask the gentleman what law he has to sustain the authorization.

Mr. SMALL. I know of no other authority except those. I ask the gentleman from New York to reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to have a lot of time occupied unnecessarily. If the gentleman wishes to make a statement of five minutes I will reserve it that long. I will state that such an item as he proposes has been carried in appropriation bills for several years past.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that he prefers to dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make the point of order, and the gentleman from North Carolina can speak afterwards by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist that before the Chair sustains the point of order Members may be heard. The Chair has sustained the point of order before anybody has an opportunity to argue the point of order, and has been doing that constantly, and if it continues I shall demand a quorum of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will come to order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order in lecturing the Chair at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will come to order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eight-nine gentleman are present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the roll call the Chairman said:

The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee can not rise during a roll call.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will call the roll, and those gentlemen who did not respond to their names on the first roll call will answer as their names are called.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the roll call.

The committee rose, and Mr. FITZGERALD assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union finding itself without a quorum, the Chair directed that the roll be called. Thereupon 251 gentlemen answered to their names, a quorum, and I report back the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he directed that the roll be called. Thereupon 251 gentlemen answered to their names, a quorum. He reports herewith the names of the absentees, which will be entered upon the Journal. The committee will resume its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill by unanimous consent. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that I have an amendment I wish to submit here, and also a little later another regarding the Bureau of Manufactures, but it touches one of the questions which I understood was to be put over and taken up after the undisputed parts of the bill have been read. Therefore I would like to ask the gentleman whether he would allow me to offer the amendment later or whether I shall be obliged to offer it now in its place?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think it is best to read those parts of the bill that will provoke no controversy and then take up the Bureau of Manufactures or the other parts of the bill afterwards.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I understood. Then the gentleman will give unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to ask unanimous consent of the committee to return to this point and also to the point after line 22 to offer the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that after the undisputed portions of the bill have been read we recur to this point, and also to page 120, line 22, for an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts indicate to the Chair the points in the bill to which he desires to recur?

Mr. GILLETT. It is where we are now, and also on page 120, line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the portions of the bill indicated by him may be passed without prejudice until the completion of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's request is not to pass, as I understand, any portion of the bill, but to have the right to recur to those places in the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman is to have the right to recur to those places in the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ESTOPINAL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In certifying eligibles from the civil-service registers for the purpose of appointment to positions of clerkships in the Census Office hereinbefore provided for at salaries of $1,200 or less, the Civil Service Commission shall, so far as practicable under the law of apportionment, certify those who have had at least one year's experience in census work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the item below—I thought it was in this item—is a paragraph for the purpose of closing up the work of the last census, and I notice the gentleman requires the temporary clerks to be certified for appointment from the civil-service registers. Is that more desirable than to authorize the reappointment of a clerk who has been in the Census Office and who has the knowledge and the experience and the practice of handling the machines? Would it not be better to permit reappointment of people who are experienced, rather than to require the appointment of somebody who is entirely new to the work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that these recommendations here were made by the Director of the Census and we put them in the bill just exactly as he requested—the number of clerks, how they were to be selected, the amount of money, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. The Director of the Census may be right, but, on the other hand, he might be wrong. It is perfectly patent to any gentleman that a clerk who has been in the Census Office working one of these computing machines is worth a great deal more to put back there than a new clerk from the civil-service register who never had anything to do with one of the machines. Now, these people who work these machines have to be educated to the work. They have to learn the business, and that is largely what this work is. The Director of the Census may not desire to have the odium of having appointments made through official influence, and I suppose that is the first thing that would be said. I have nobody I want to appoint, but I believe these clerks who have learned the business in the Census Office and who were let out only a short time ago will be able to do twice as much work in many places as new people unused to the work.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we have looked over the question which he is now discussing. When the Director of the Census was before the committee I asked him in regard to the employment of these clerks to complete the work of taking the census, and the question was as to whether those temporary clerks, who were employed to take the census during the decennial period, could not be employed to advantage. The director at first was inclined to think that that would be well, but after further consideration he decided that these clerks had been discharged, they had gone to their homes, and were scattered over the country, and, taking into consideration all the conditions as they existed, he asked us to put in this provision as it is.

Mr. MANN. Why should they not be employed? The gentleman will admit, I know, that a clerk who has been operating one of these computing machines will be of more value for a short period of time than some one who comes to it perfectly new.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I had that idea myself, but I am not an expert in completing the work of the census, and we followed the advice of the man in charge of the work.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, these temporary clerks were appointed from the various States. They were discharged, and some of them went home and some did not. It seems to me that as to those who went home or as to those who remain, being trained in this service, they should be preferred; and it seems to me the appropriation ought to so provide. Otherwise we will have people from the District of Columbia appointed, to the exclusion of those who have gone home.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] spoke of those who had gone home and those who remained in Washington. They have all gone back to the various States from which they came. They were all discharged prior to the 1st day of February, I believe.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken in the statement that he makes, as a matter of fact, about all having gone home. There are numbers of them here and seeking employment.

Mr. PAYNE. I think every gentleman here would testify to that. But I was going to suggest to the gentleman, if he carries out his program and has them appointed from the civil-service list, they will come here from every State in the Union; not simply from the District of Columbia, but from all over the United States, so that it will be no better in regard to calling them back from the States than it would be to call back these temporary clerks. But he will find enough of them here in the city of Washington, I think, from what I have heard about it, to fill all these places, and it seems to me it would be better to authorize the Director of the Census to employ these temporary clerks who are suitable, so far as he can, and, if necessary, to make up the balance of the list from the civil service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will understand, I suppose, that in all probability quite a number of these clerks who were temporarily employed in the Census Office have taken the civil-service examination and are on the regular eligible list, no doubt, and they can be called for.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman will find those who are on the regular civil-service list have been transferred to other offices, because they were eligible to fill positions under the civil service, and those who went out were simply put on the temporary roll from the examination made in the Census Office, and not on the civil-service list.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary clerks: In addition to the employees hereinbefore provided for, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may appoint, on the recommendation of the Director of the Census, for such time as may be necessary, but not beyond June 30, 1913, not exceeding 175 temporary clerks, to be certified for appointment from the civil-service registers, such clerks to be paid salaries not greater than $900 per annum, or to be paid on a piece-price basis, and for the payment of the compensation of said temporary clerks there is appropriated the sum of $120,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, on page 23, line 12, after the word "clerks," the words:

To be appointed from among the clerks formerly in the Census Office or——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 12, page 123, after the word "clerk," the following: "To be appointed from among the clerks formerly in the Census Office or "——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Did not the Clerk read the next paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered his amendment at the end of the paragraph. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve it until I find out what it is.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order. I just as soon have the gentleman make it. If it is subject to a point of order I do not want to detain the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that would authorize the Director of the Census for this temporary census work, not to exceed a year, as provided in the bill, to appoint these 175 temporary clerks either from among those who have been in the Census Office and dismissed by reason of reduction of the force, or those to be certified for appointment from the civil-service register.

It seems to me that with the large number of clerks who were recently dismissed from the Census Office, clerks who were familiar with the work of the office, who have learned at the expense of the Government about the work to be done, it is in the interest of economy to permit those persons, so far as they will, to go back into that office for this temporary work rather than put green hands at it for a period of one year. Some of these people have been in the office for some time, and the force has been cut down and they have been cut out. They know what this work is. They understand the working of the machines in the office, and they understand the methods of computation that are followed in the office. They know how the work is done. They have learned at the expense of the Government. Now, the proposition to put entirely new persons in there for the short period of only one year can not, I think, be justified as against giving the other people an opportunity if they will accept it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand that a point of order has been reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was reserved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is not a fact, as I understand it, that all these clerks have returned home to the States from which they were appointed. It is a lamentable fact that large numbers of them were discharged when they ought not to have been discharged.

I hold in my hand the evidence offered before the Committee on Appropriations on Decemebr 13, 1911, when the Director of the Census was applying for a deficiency, when he asked for a million dollars. In that evidence he stated that he had on hand $580,000 of the former appropriation, and that he was expending the money at the rate of $275,000 a month, so that he would have enough to enable him to conduct the operations of his bureau until the 1st of February. Congress granted to him $500,000 additional to carry the work of his office forward until the 1st of April. But because Congress did not give him the full $1,000,000 he asked for, he proceeded at once in January to decapitate large numbers of those clerks, including some who had gone home on their Christmas holidays and who returned here without any notification whatever that they were to be discharged.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman think that the director ought to be allowed to exercise his choice as to who should go back there and be allowed to select his particular favorites?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not. But this is the only way in which we can repair in part a great wrong that has been done by this director to large numbers of faithful employees. I know that with full funds in his hands to operate the bureau until the 1st of April, he filled this town on the 1st of January with hundreds and hundreds of efficient clerks, most of them women, who had come here after having undergone civil-service examinations in their respective States. He turned them loose without any means of subsistence whatever.

I know that to be a fact, as every other Member of this House knows if there were clerks in that office from their districts. The fund appropriated for the taking of the census, amounting as it did to $15,000,000, has been wasted, and I measure my words when I make that statement. It has been wasted, not by the payment of large salaries to efficient and hard-working men and women in that office, but by giving large per diem allowances to special agents to do very little except political work during the year 1910 in the various congressional districts.

Now, these men and women, these girls and young ladies, who were employed in the Census Bureau, after having undergone the civil-service examination at home, ought to have been retained until at least the 1st of April. But merely because Congress and the committee having charge of these appropriations declined in December to appropriate a full million dollars, when the Census Director had in July previously estimated that he would not require that much, simply because Congress saw fit to appropriate only $500,000, this Director of the Census in January proceeded to throw out on the street without notice hundreds of worthy and faithful employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to have two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that I have the right to discuss the merits of the question. I do not want to violate any rule.

I say this Director of the Census, having $580,000 left of the former appropriation, which would have carried the work to the 1st of March, having been given $500,000 additional, would have been able, with an expenditure at the rate of $275,000 a month, to proceed with the work until the 1st of April; and simply because he was denied this full million dollars that he asked for he proceeded, in the beginning of January, without cause, to ruthlessly and cruelly turn these employees out upon this town.

I am in favor of this amendment because it is in some measure a reparation for a wrong that has been committed. While we can not remedy the great wrong that has been done to these employees who have been faithful and efficient, we ought to at least permit them again to be employed, if we can do so. Therefore, I say, I am in favor of the amendment if it shall be held to be in order, because it is proper and wise that those people should have an opportunity to work—an opportunity of which they have been deprived without justice and without right. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I stated a moment ago, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that we had interrogated the Director of the Census upon the very question involved in this amendment. We asked him about the employment of people who had had previous experience in the taking of the census, in order to complete this work, and his answer to that question was substantially this: He said in the first place that these people—most of them—have gone away. He said, "If you put a provision in the bill directing that I should employ these people out of the 3,000 the selection would fall upon me, and I do not want to have to make it." He said further that a large number of the people who were employed in the taking of the census had stood the regular examinations and were then on the eligible list.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt my friend there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In one moment. There is a provision in this bill that in certifying eligibles the Civil Service Commission shall, so far as practicable, certify those who have had at least one year's experience in census work.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will go to either the Democratic or Republican campaign rooms, or to any of these rooms in the House and Senate Office Buildings, he will find numbers of these former employees of the Census Office working for $1.50 or $2 a day, and instead of going away from here they are undertaking to make a living the best way they can. The eligible list is crowded now, and they would only take their places amongst those who are not at the head of the list.

Mr. MANN. Can they take the examination without going home?

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the census law they have got to take it at their homes.

Mr. MANN. They have got to take it at their homes, under the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know. I am simply telling you that the Director of the Census said they had taken the examination, and that he could get them regularly from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that under the law now a person from any State taking the examination for a civil-service appointment must take that examination at home?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the law as I understand it.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the exact law providing for the taking of the census of 1910, that a person must stand the examination in the district where he resided.

Mr. MANN. We put that in the census law, but that is the general law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the general law.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe it is fair to a person who wants to be employed in the Census Office to make that person go home to Arizona, or California, or even to South Carolina, which is not so far away, or to Chicago, which is farther than South Carolina, in order to take the examination? Should not these people have just as much chance as the people who live in the District of Columbia permanently, who can take the civil-service examination here?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I presume they have stood the examination wherever the law required them to stand it. At any rate, the director says so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call the attention of the House to the inconsistency of the gentlemen who are proposing this amendment. The Committee on Appropriations reported a provision designed to effect an improvement in the civil service. It was charged with attempting to resurrect and to perpetuate the spoils system, because that provision contemplated that an employee at the end of five years should cease to be in the service and should not be reappointed unless certified as having had a record of proper efficiency.

When the act providing for the Thirteenth Census passed the Congress it provided for the appointment of the employees of the Census Office without regard to the civil-service law. That was vetoed by a former Republican President, who is at present a candidate for the renomination, because, as he said, it proposed to establish the spoils system in the Census Office and to permit wicked politicians in this House and the Senate to grab the patronage that would be created. He is now charging the present administration with using the patronage of the public service in an attempt to defeat him for the nomination and to make possible the renomination of the present President.

Mr. BARTLETT. While he is using Perkins's money to buy the nomination.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not inclined to support the representatives of the administration in this House and I am not inclined to follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia. I am not inclined to place at the disposition of the President $120,000 of patronage to use against the former President and against the Democratic Party. If gentlemen are opposed to the spoils system, if they really are sincere in their advocacy of the civil service and desire to perpetuate it, then this provision, recommended by the Director of the Census, which provides for the appointment of these clerks and officials in conformity with the civil-service law, giving preference to those who have heretofore been employed in the Census Office for positions the salaries of which are $1,200 or less, will be adopted. This will in good faith carry out the intention of the law and will keep ourselves from being subjected to the pressure and temptation to utilize these places for political purposes rather than for the public service. [Applause.]

During the present session of Congress the Director of the Census desired $500,000 to do this work. We refused to give it to him. He comes now and asks, not for $500,000, but for $120,000, to complete the work that he insisted would require half a million dollars. We probably can have it completed for that amount if these employees are appointed in accordance with the civil-service law. If they are put at the disposal of the administration, if they are to be appointed upon the recommendation of those in sympathy not only with the party in power, but with the majority faction, whichever it may happen to be, of the party in power, it probably will require the original $500,000 to do the work that it is now stated can be done for $120,000.

Now, let us see just how sincere the Republicans are in their protestations against the resurrection of the old spoils system. Here is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, to permit the employment of former employees of the Census Office regardless of whether they be on the civil-service list or not. Here is the recommendation of the committee that these employees must be taken from the civil-service list. The question can not be more fairly presented. I appeal to this side of the House to support this provision which will enable us to obtain these employees regardless of the influence and pressure that comes from political sources, and thus enable us efficiently to promote the public service.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see that my friend from New York is a new convert to the civil-service law, and I am glad to see him so enthusiastic over the terms of the law. I hope he will remember that when we come to later provisions in the bill; but he is a little overenthusiastic in trying to use that as a club with which to beat this amendment. He speaks about these people being brought here by the Republicans; they have been brought here apportioned from the districts by both Republicans and Democrats. If every man on that side who had an appointee here, who is here still and asking him to find him some work to do in Washington in some department, will vote for this amendment, the gentleman can not count a half a dozen on that side who will vote against it. I hope the amendment will be agreed to and give relief to these people, and that my enthusiastic friend from New York will relent a little bit and carry out the spirit and intent of the civil-service law in keeping good people, good clerks, in the service of the Government. I hope he will relent just that much.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This amendment is under the title "temporary clerks," is it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I call attention to lines 1 to 6, page 123, which are as follows:

> In certifying eligibles from the civil-service registers for the purpose of appointment to positions of clerkships in the Census Office hereinbefore provided for at salaries of $1,200 or less, the Civil Service Commission shall, so far as practicable under the law of apportionment, certify those who have had at least one year's experience in census work.

Now, I fancy that all of them have had one year's experience in census work. I will ask my colleague whether or not that is not sufficient to cover the temporary clerks and accomplish what he desires to do by his amendment?

Mr. MANN. In the first place, that provision does not apply to the appointment of temporary clerks. It expressly provides for the appointment of clerks in the census "hereinbefore" provided for.

Mr. CANNON. Could not the matter desired be arrived at by unanimous consent to provide for those "hereinbefore or hereinafter provided for"?

Mr. MANN. If they had desired to have it that way it would be easy to say "herein" provided for, but the committee deliberately—and, I suppose, for cause—put in the word "hereinbefore."

I will say to my colleague that, in my judgment, with the provision in the bill it practically confines these temporary appointments to people who live in the District of Columbia, with a permanent residence here. In other words, the people who are on the civil-service list—the eligible list now—who have been clerks in the Census Office in the main are people who live in Washington or people who have gone home and taken the civil-service examination. If they have gone home and taken the civil-service examination, it is unlikely that they will want to come back here for $75 a month for 12 months. But the people who are on the eligible list here are people who live permanently in Washington and who did take the civil-service examination here. A clerk from the district of my colleague could not take a civil-service examination in Washington, but he must go home to Illinois and take it. Of course, these people have all been examined for appointment to the Census Office.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. These discharged clerks that were employed there, of course, have taken a civil-service examination, and were on the register; were they not retained on that register? Is not the old register available, and if this provision should become a law, would not they be certified from the old register?

Mr. MANN. No; they are not on the eligible list. They were on the eligible list of the census register.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is exactly what these former examinations were for.

Mr. MANN. No; there is quite a distinction between the eligible list of the census register and the eligible list of the civil-service register. They are not now on that eligible list, any of them.

Mr. HAMLIN. The law that we were talking about requiring them to take the examination at home for census work does not apply to the civil-service examination to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. We put in the census law a provision which affected the civil-service examination and required this examination to be made at home.

Mr. HAMLIN. There must have been some special dispensation, then, because I remember recently there was a notification given out that these discharged employees could take the civil-service examination for general clerical work here in the District, and a number of them have taken it.

Mr. MANN. I had a case last summer where a man in Chicago, whose residence was in Honolulu, wanted to take a civil-service examination, and he had to go to Honolulu to take it under what seemed to me to be a very absurd law that we put into the census law.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, as long as we are relating experiences, I had a man in the Census Office from my district who tells me that when or before he was discharged, he took an examination for the general service here in the District and is now on the eligible list.

Mr. MANN. He might do that by declaring that he was a resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think they had a rule by which they permitted those here in the temporary service to stand an examination in the District as residents of their respective States, but I do not think that rule applied after the discharge went into effect; it applied only while they were in the temporary service.

Mr. MANN. That might have been while they were in the temporary service. Now, the gentleman from New York, feeling that he has a bad cause, attempts to interject partisan politics into this proposition. All there is in this proposition, as a matter of fact, is the employment of 175 clerks at $75 a month for a year, or for not exceeding one year's time. Nor under this provision in the bill is it required in any event that clerks shall be selected from the top of the register. It leaves to the Director of the Census, as the gentleman from New York would say, the power to select anybody they pleased from the eligible registers, just such power as they would have under the provision which I have offered. Certainly the appointments are not made under the provisions of the bill as they are made in other cases. They are made only from the civil-service registers, not made at the top of the register, nor was it so intended.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have very little time, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to ask the gentleman what he thinks of the suggestion made by his colleague [Mr. CANNON]—that, in line 3, after the word "hereinbefore," be added the words "and hereinafter"—to meet the very objection the gentleman is now making?

Mr. MANN. No. Here is the proposition: We brought a large number of clerks to Washington in the Census Office. We have educated them in census work. They have been dismissed now because the census work was decreased and the appropriation was not large enough to continue them. Now, you propose to increase the appropriation, but not give those clerks who were dismissed a chance to get back to work. If the appropriation had been available before the 1st of June, those clerks would have been kept in the service; and some of them are in Washington in the belief that in the course of time Congress would be compelled to appropriate some money to finish the work, and that they, having the experience, would be given the preference in the employment; and it seems to me they ought to be given preference in the employment, and the amendment which I have offered merely permits the Director of the Census to appoint from the list of dismissed those who were experienced, if he pleases, and I take it that the Director of the Census may not desire to assume that responsibility. But he assumed the responsibility of discharging them and selecting them to be discharged, and if he is the man I believe he is, he can take the responsibilty of reinstating those who are capable of doing the work.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question? This amendment, of course, does not contemplate any distribution of clerks according to quota of the States that might be entitled to it.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that would be impossible, but without this amendment I think no one will receive employment except residents of the District of Columbia. With it, I take it, that the Director of the Census would employ those who seek employment, and I doubt whether the number will be very large.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 56, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraph and telephone service, photographic work and supplies, transportation and preparing articles for shipment, horses, wagons, electric truck, and maintenance thereof, diagrams, maps, blue prints, awnings, shelving, filing apparatus, fuel, light, office fixtures, street-car tickets not exceeding $50, and other absolutely necessary expenses, including the purchase, rental, construction, repair, and exchange of mechanical appliances, repairs to the Census Building, and necessary expenses in connection with the prosecution of fraudulent census returns, $15,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to submit a few remarks. Mr. Chairman, the hearings upon this bill, as the hearings upon other bills making appropriations for the various departments of this Government, disclose the useless expenditures and the willful waste of the people's money. I find in reading the hearings upon this bill that of the money expended from the contingent fund by the high-protection officeholders they are displaying a peculiar friendship for the laboring man and the manufacturer of the United States—the two interests that they claim above all others to love and protect. Why, I find in the hearings here, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], a member of the Appropriations Committee, asked a question which disclosed the fact that in one of these departments they went to Persia to buy a rug of extra quality, costing $320 [applause on the Democratic side], and they went to Daghestan, or some such place—it ought to be "dadgasted" [laughter]—and bought an oriental rug costing $188; and they bought a Balkan rug costing $147. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

These are the men who propose to protect the American manufacturer by guaranteeing to him a reasonable profit, who have pledged their support and protection to the American laboring man, and yet they tax him to raise money with which to buy oriental rugs [applause] to put in the departments here at Washington, rugs that you can mire down in [laughter], not fashioned by the skilled hand of the American laborer that you deceive every two or four years by telling him that you are for him, that you give him employment, that you give him prosperity. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You do not go to the place where he labors and ask for these rugs to put in these various departments of the Government, but you go abroad and you buy them from what you term the pauper labor of Europe, and yet these prices would indicate that that labor in Europe is faring sumptuously every day at the price you paid for those rugs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but I find here that the Republicans have bought to go upon the harness of dray horses "silver-buckle hame straps." What do you think the farmer who uses iron and steel buckles, for which you tax him $10 on every $25 worth, will think of that? As he plows with plain backband and simple trace chains and cotton plow lines, what will he think when he reads that you are buying "silver-buckle hame straps" to adorn these horses pulling drays about the city of Washington? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Extravagance, willful waste of the people's money; why you have deceived them, and now when the time comes and the election of a Democratic President is staring you in the face, you are trying to get back to the old spoils system and hold up $120,000 worth of jobs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I can tell you now that after November next get ready to have a housecleaning in the city of Washington. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Make ready for it. It is coming. To-day your Republican ex-President is going over the country attacking the Republican President and accusing him of being tied up with the interests, and you have the present President telling the country how much of a demagogue and hypocrite the ex-President is. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the city of Baltimore, where this ex-President and President were both running and having political speakings day and night, the Democratic Speaker of this House polled more votes than both of them for President. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The time will not be long until the people will come into their own. It has been a genuine blessing to the people that the Democrats carried this House. We have unearthed things that the country did not know. You Republicans have been in control for 16 years and the Democratic investigation committees have gone to work and they are unearthing extravagance, waste, graft, and fearful conditions along many lines, and by the time the November election comes the people will say to you, "You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting; get out now, you unfaithful servants." [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, along this same line I want to call attention to one or two items in addition to those suggested by my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who has just taken his seat. I find in the hearings an item of $135 for the painting and repairing of an old buggy down in the Treasury Department. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asked the witness during the hearings what was the character of this buggy that cost $135 to repair and paint, and the witness replied:

This is really a small wagon; an old-timer. I expect that wagon is 50 years old.

They are evidently dealing in old and certainly expensive relics. They could have bought the buggy new, I presume, for $60 or $75, but they go and pay $135 of the people's money to repair and repaint this old antiquated vehicle. This item only serves as a sample of the practice prevalent in the departments.

I recall, also, that two years ago, when this bill was up for consideration, I took occasion to call attention of the House and country to similar items in one of the other departments, wherein they had certified that they had paid the year previous for the care and keep of four horses, a buggy, and a wagon, $3,419.37.

The people of this country are patient and long-suffering——

Mr. MANN. And so are we. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman has the privilege of retiring. [Laughter and applause.] I will say this to the gentleman, that when the people of this country find out a little more about the miserable grafting that has been going on under Republican rule you will all retire.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will be retired, you mean.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; will be retired. There is a condition existing in some of the departments to-day wherein men are carried upon the pay rolls at large salaries who render practically no service to the United States Government whatsoever. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It came to my knowledge recently, and it appears in the hearings, that there is a colored man, by name Rinkert, in the State Department assigned to the mail room and on the pay roll at $1,200 a year, and who has been there for three years, placed there by special Executive order, and who recently has been away on an ocean trip with the Secretary of State, hobnobbing with princes and potentates and playing the part of the Secretary's valet, and still drawing his $1,200 a year. The evidence also showed that there were two old Union soldiers—majors, in fact, and entitled to that designation because of its being won by bravery in the Army—assigned to that same mail room, one drawing $720 a year and the other at $1,000 a year, and the evidence shows that they are often on duty at 7 o'clock in the morning and frequently work until 7 o'clock at night. These old white soldiers worked faithfully every day, this negro whenever he felt like it, but certainly not more than one-third of the time. I asked the chief of that division why these old soldiers were worked overtime. He said the rush of business compelled it. Then I asked why he did not call upon this colored man and compel him to do his part of the work. He answered that he had absolutely no control over him. When the people of this country, and especially the comrades of these two old soldiers, find out that they are working from morning until night, one at $720 and the other at $1,000 a year, and that this negro is drawing $1,200 a year and working just when he pleases, you fellows who are responsible for this condition of affairs will all be retired. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor is abolished, to take effect July 1, 1912, and the duties required by law to be performed by that bureau are transferred to and shall after that date be performed by the Census Office; and the appropriations for contingent expenses, rent, and printing and binding for the Department of Commerce and Labor shall be available for expenditure on account of the Division of Statistics in the Census Office during the fiscal year 1913 to the same extent the same have heretofore been available for expenditure on account of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FINLEY). The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph, lines 3 to 14, both inclusive.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman insert an amendment?

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will permit, the amendment that I have offered proposes to strike out this paragraph, and I was about to explain that if it was adopted I would propose another amendment to strike out the next paragraph, and then to insert substantially the provision that exists in the present law.

However, I will be very glad to withdraw my amendment and yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who is a member of the committee and desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] withdraws his amendment, and I offer the following amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that we passed without prejudice a provision for the State Department providing for the consolidation of the Bureau of Trade Relations and of Manufactures. We have also passed over, under the Department of Commerce and Labor, the paragraph relating to the Bureau of Manufactures. We are now at the paragraph dealing with the Bureau of Statistics under the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] will desist until the amendment is reported.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have passed over the other provisions by unanimous consent. I would like to have this provision passed over also, because they are all intimately connected and will be debated together after we read the parts of the bill that are not in controversy. Then we will take up the whole question.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman expect to finish the bill this week?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We hope to pass the bill to-night.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 3 to 14, inclusive, on page 125, and insert:
"Bureau of Statistics: Chief of bureau, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,250; chief of division, $2,000. Clerks: Five of class 4, five of class 3, one at $1,500, nine of class 2, eleven of class 1, thirteen at $1,000 each, six at $900 each, one messenger, one assistant messenger, one messenger; in all, $73,650."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desires to be heard on this particular section now, and after he shall have been heard I will make the request.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it proper to have the matter go over until after he has been heard. What time does my colleague wish to get away?

Mr. CANNON. I want to get away Thursday evening.

Mr. MANN. This could be taken up the first thing if the bill went over.

Mr. BURLESON. We will agree to bring it up the first thing.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection, if the matter is taken up the first thing on Thursday morning.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It will be taken up the first thing after we finish the parts of the bill that do not provoke debate.

Mr. CANNON. That will not provoke debate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It will not probably be up to-night, but otherwise it would certainly be up the first thing Thursday.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to its going over if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] does not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this section be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CANNON. This and the next.

The CHAIRMAN. Request is made that this section and the next be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shipping service: For salaries of shipping commissioners in amounts not exceeding the following: At Baltimore, $1,200; at Boston, $3,000; at New Bedford, $1,000; at New Orleans, $1,500; at New York, $4,000; at Philadelphia, $2,400; at Portland, Me., $1,300; at Port Townsend, $3,500; at Providence, $1,700; at San Francisco, $3,600; in all, $23,200.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 127, after the words "at New Orleans, $1,500," insert the following: "Pascagoula, Miss., $300."

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, for 40 years there has been a shipping commissioner at Pascagoula, Miss. By the terms of this bill there is proposed to be stricken from the law appropriation for about seven shipping commissioners, and in that seven Pascagoula is included. The item carried in the bill heretofore for Pascagoula has been only $300.

I take it that the committee struck out the item because of economy, as they thought. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is any economy in striking out the appropriation for the shipping commissioner at Pascagoula. There may be in these other items [laughter], but at Pascagoula there is not. If the shipping commissioner is knocked out at Pascagoula, the Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Chamberlain, informs me that in all probability the collector of customs at that seaport will call for another clerk, or for some more help.

At Pascagoula now the collector of customs has only two clerks. If you knock out the shipping commissioner at $300 a year at Pascagoula, with the idea of saving that $300, you will in all probability entail an additional expense of a clerk to the collector of customs at Pascagoula, thereby costing $600, $800, or $1,000, and in that event your economy program will not work.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman tell me what shipping there is to keep two clerks busy at Pascagoula?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not know; but I do know that there has been enough shipping at Pascagoula to keep a commissioner busy there for 40 years.

There was an attempt made at the last session of Congress to strike out the Pascagoula commissionership, but the Senate put it back. I would say, too, to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that the export trade at Pascagoula has increased wonderfully within the past 10 years.

There is not a particle of testimony in the hearings had before this committee that would warrant this House in believing that anything would be saved by striking out the appropriation for the Pascagoula shipping commissioner. The question was not asked in the hearing. On the contrary the question was put to Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] himself.

I read from the hearings:

Mr. JOHNSON. Suppose we just leave one of the places out; not put it in the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The work would revert to the collector of customs. Whether that would be an economy or not would depend on whether the collector of customs would go to the Treasury Department and say: "I have all this extra work, and I will have to have an extra clerk." You might abolish a man who costs $600 or $700 and get a $900 or $1,200 clerk instead. Beyond that, in some places, there is some objection to combining the offices; an objection on the part of the business community and not on account of any officer of the Government.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this port of Pascagoula within the last 10 years has doubled itself in the amount of exports shipped from there. Necessarily the duties that are devolved upon the shipping commissioner have increased, and during all this time the salary has never been increased. The completion of the new project recently approved by the United States Board of Engineers for Pascagoula Harbor and the completion of the Panama Canal insures the continued increase in the duties that devolve upon the shipping commissioner there. The shipping commissioner at Pascagoula does not get $300 a year; he only gets $243 a year.

Now, it may be right, as I said, to strike out some of these other places that the committee contemplates, because in most of them the shipping commissioner receives $800 or $1,000 or $1,500 a year, and by striking out such places and putting in a clerk to the collector of customs at $700 or $800 a year the Government would save a few hundred dollars; but by striking out the commissioner at Pascagoula, where the Government pays only $243 a year, if it entails an additional clerk to the collector of customs there, it would certainly be no economy and no saving to the Government. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. It is true, Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], that Pascagoula has had a shipping commissioner for 40 years, and it can be said with equal truth that for about 39 years and 6 months the office has been wholly unnecessary. [Laughter.]

The Commissioner of Navigation, when he was before the subcommittee during the preparation of this bill, was asked if he had to name five or six of these offices which could be abolished, which offices he would name, and in answer he stated that Pascagoula would head the list. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Is it not a fact, I will ask the gentleman, that he and the commissioner concluded that Pascagoula should be knocked out because it was the smallest salary paid any commissioner in all the list?

Mr. BURLESON. No; that is not a fact, and that consideration did not control our action. Mr. Chairman, this is no new matter. The committee has had the abolishment of this office before it prior to this session of Congress, just as we have had before us the matter about the collectors of customs at a number of customs offices in this country, where the salaries paid are largely in excess of the amount of revenues collected.

The truth is, this is a wholly unnecessary office. In last year's bill, when it was in charge of the present minority, there was carried a provision abolishing this office at Pascagoula. It passed this House and went to the Senate, where, for some reason, it was reinserted in the bill.

I repeat that this is a wholly unnecessary office. It is true it only burdens the Government to the extent of $243, but, gentlemen, as was said by the gentleman from Mississippi, there are others like this to follow, and if this body wants to economize in the expenditure of money we could not do better than to commence by lopping off such unnecessary offices. The gentleman [Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi] says that perchance if this office of shipping commissioner is abolished at Pascagoula the collector of customs may go to the Treasury Department and ask for an additional clerk. I stand here to express my belief that when he asks for the additional clerk he will not get him, because the officer in charge of the Treasury Department at this time is just as earnest in his efforts for economy as any man on this side of the Chamber.

Now, I appeal to the members of this committee, here is an effort being made without reference to partisanship, without reference to section, with reference to personal considerations, because, if there is a man in this House who could secure the reinsertion of the item for this commissioner at Pascagoula, it is the affable, genial, and able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. We all are fond of him, but it is not a question of personal favoritism. It is a question of whether we will permit the hand of the official to be thrust into the Treasury of the United States and take therefrom $243 for a purpose wholly unnecessary. I ask the committee to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 127, line 25, after the figures "$3,600," insert the following: "At Gloucester, Mass., $600."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that pride in sustaining the committee's report will not prevent the gentleman in charge of this bill from accepting the amendment which I now offer, as my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is unable to be present to-day.

Gloucester is the most important fishing port on the Atlantic coast. There are something like 5,000 sailors who have their home port there, and innumerable vessels make it their home port. It has had a shipping commissioner for many years, whose salary has been as large as $2,000 a year. Two years ago it was reduced to $1,200 and in last year's bill it was reduced to $600.

The shipping commissioner at Gloucester not only passes on the shipping articles of some 1,200 men who are actually engaged in fishing, as sailors on schooners and vessels in the merchant service, but of more than 1,800 men who are engaged on the basis of shares; for which latter service he receives no recompense whatever.

The collector of the port at Gloucester has stated in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury that if this commissioner is not provided it will be necessary to have an additional clerk in his office, and an additional clerk will necessitate an expense of between $800 and $1,200, depending on the length of service of the clerk, so that there can be no possible saving in transferring this office from the shipping commissioner to a clerk in the customhouse.

Mr. MANN. What are the duties of the shipping commissioner?

Mr. WEEKS. The duties of the shipping commissioner are to pass on the articles of agreement between the masters of vessels and members of the crew. It has always been the policy of this country to protect seamen as far as possible in their articles of agreement, because it is presumed that they have no organization to protect themselves and that for other reasons they may be unable to do so.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that there are now pending upon the calendar various bills reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, some of which are likely to pass, that will very greatly add to the duties of shipping commissioners?

Mr. WEEKS. I have not had that called to my attention.

Mr. MANN. There are such bills.

Mr. BURLESON. They will not add to the duties of the shipping commissioner in Gloucester, though.

Mr. MANN. Apparently they will require the services of a shipping commissioner every few miles along the coast.

Mr. WEEKS. I am very greatly obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for that information.

Now, Mr Chairman, not only do the masters of vessels in Gloucester wish this commissioner retained, but the Board of Trade of Gloucester has passed resolutions to that effect, and the Secretary of the Treasury has stated in a letter that it will be necessary to employ this additional clerk in case the office of shipping commissioner at Gloucester is abolished.

I will insert in my remarks the vote of the Board of Trade of Gloucester, the resolutions of the master mariners in Gloucester, and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury sustaining that point.

There is no economy in the abolition of this office and, furthermore, it will be a great inconvenience. The office of the shipping commissioner in Gloucester is on the water front. He is personally acquainted with the men who are engaged in a seafaring life, both masters and seamen. He has held that office for many years. He was once a master himself. He knows those men so well that when the master of a vessel wants a crew, he knows where to find the men and what men are suitable for the service desired.

So that he is of great assistance to the shipping industry of that port. Outside of the economical feature, which the members of the Appropriation Committee may urge, this is a matter of accommodation to the shipping interests of that great port, but there is no economy in it. It will benefit no one; it will simply abolish an office in order to demonstrate on the face of the returns that economy has been practiced, when, as a matter of fact, at the end of the year you will find that a Treasury clerk has performed the service, not as well as the shipping commissioner and at a greater cost.

Sailors make the shipping office a rendezvous while waiting for employment. They can not go to the customhouse, removed from the water front, and use that as a place to loiter; that would not meet with the approval of those who use the customhouse for other purposes. It is impossible to replace this shipping office with a customhouse service without greatly incommoding the sailors, the masters, and the people of Gloucester as well. It will not save a dollar, and I hope that my amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

GLOUCESTER BOARD OF TRADE,
Gloucester, Mass., March 22, 1912.

Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Gloucester Board of Trade held last evening it was voted that the secretary be instructed to write to you urging you to use your influence in the retention of the shipping commissioner's office at this port.

We learn that the office may be abolished on account of lack of appropriation to continue it.

We believe that there is no need of our calling your attention to the importance of the office at this port, serving, as it does, the 5,000 seamen who sail from this port, and we trust that we shall be able to forestall the movement to abolish the office.

Yours, respectfully,

RICHARD W. FREEMAN,
Secretary Gloucester Board of Trade.

GLOUCESTER MASTER MARINERS' ASSOCIATION,
Gloucester, Mass., March 19, 1912.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Master Mariners' Association to-day expressed by vote its desire to assist in the retention of the shipping commissioner's office at this port.

I was instructed to write to you and inform you of the wishes of our members and request that you do all possible to assist.

We are informed that the office may be abolished because funds will not be appropriated to continue it. The small sum spent at this port does more good for our owners, masters, and fishermen than much greater amounts at other places.

Respectfully, J. H. STAPLETON, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Gloucester, Mass., March 15, 1912.

Hon. JAMES F. CURTIS,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In answer to your letter of February 21, 1912—

In the event of the withdrawal of the shipping commissioner at this port the work could at times be done by the present force at this office, but not as efficiently as now performed by Mr. McDonald, who now does that work.

Most of the time the present force in this office would not be available for the work.

To do the work now performed by Mr. McDonald it would necessitate the employment of at least one more clerk, but in that case the assistance to owners, masters, and seamen now given by Mr. McDonald could not be approximated, as he is familiar with the many details which make his work of value. He is acquainted with the seamen; they make his office their headquarters.

He visits the offices of the owners, and is able to advise them as to the men available and their efficiency for the particular voyage. He secures places for many seamen and assists owners in many ways that bring him no remuneration.

Respectfully, WALTER F. OSBORNE, Collector.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the cause of Gloucester appeals to me, because the gentleman who is particularly interested in it is disabled at this time and not able to be present. He was disabled in the prosecution of a worthy cause, and I wish it were so that I could yield to the amendment offered by the gentleman, his colleague [Mr WEEKS], and permit the adoption of the amendment.

But fortunately an economy will be effected if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is voted down, and an unjustifiable expenditure authorized if it is adopted. Hence I must oppose it. The gentleman speaks of the great inconvenience to which seamen will be subjected if this item is not reinserted in the bill. As a matter of fact, during the entire year there were shipped and reshipped from Gloucester less than three sailors a day, requiring the attention from the shipping commissioner of just about 15 or 20 minutes each day, and this light duty can be imposed on a clerk in the customhouse office without the slightest inconvenience to the clerk, and save $1,000 a year for the Treasury.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. There were 1,844 seaman shipped from Gloucester, from whom the commissioner received no recompense whatever.

Mr. BURLESON. If that is true the Commissioner of Navigation has been very derelict, because he reports only 1,124 shipped and reshipped during the entire year. I hold in my hand his report from which I read.

Mr. WEEKS. That is in addition to those he has mentioned.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, this is a report made under a Republican administration, and I commend it to this side as a report upon which they can place absolute reliance. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, we are not playing any favorites. Pascagoula has just been eliminated and immediately following this amendment for Gloucester will be an amendment offered to save Mobile, where there were 2,787 sailors shipped and reshipped during the last year, and I am going to insist that that amendment shall also be defeated, as I am insisting that this amendment be now voted down. The gentleman says that it is going to subject somebody to great inconvenience. In what particular? The shipping commissioner states in the hearings that if these officers are stricken out it will be no inconvenience to the public, for their duties will be imposed on the officers of the customs office at the same port and at most they will ask for an additional clerk.

Mr. Chairman, time and time again the suggestion has been made to eliminate these unnecessary officers, but for some reason or other they always find a place in the appropriation bill. I want to promise the House now that this year they are not going back into the bill; that is, they will not be reinserted in this bill at the other end of the Capitol if the House will stand by us and uphold our efforts to economize. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I have heard some such talk as that before from members of the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. BURLESON. And the gentleman will hear more of it during this session and the next session, and I hope, for the good of the country, for the next four years.

Mr. PAYNE. There is always a reconsideration afterwards.

Mr. BURLESON. But to return, who will be subjected to inconvenience? The shipping commissioner says that if this office is abolished some clerk in the customhouse will take over the work. It is true, I do not doubt, that a request will be made for an additional clerk, but I want to state, and I think I know whereof I speak, they will not get it. If you vote down the amendment it will save approximately $1,200 a year for years to come; adopt it and you continue an indefensible expenditure.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly

Mr. WEEKS. Did the Commissioner of Navigation recommend the abolition of this office?

Mr. BURLESON. No; the Commissioner of Navigation did not recommend the abolition of any of these offices, but when he was asked a question what offices he would name if six were to be dispensed with, Gloucester was about the second that he mentioned.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman know that the Commissioner of Navigation is opposed to the abolition of this office?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know it.

Mr. WEEKS. I know it.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know where the gentleman gets his information. I know that it will effect an economy to eliminate it, and that when done it will not bring about the slightest inconvenience or suffering on the part of the public service.

Mr. WEEKS. How does the gentleman figure out that it will produce an economy of $1,200 a year when the total cost of the office last year was less than $900?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman ought to keep his facts on straight. Last year the salary paid there was $1,100. I said approximately $1,200.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman is a year behind the times. Last year the salary was $600.

Mr. BURLESON. I hold in my hand the last report of the shipping commissioner, and he says that the total amount of salaries there was $1,108.35. But suppose it was only $8.35; your committee is making an effort to lop off an unnecessary office, and the question is whether the House will uphold the hands of the committee in this effort that it makes. I ask for the defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEEKS) there were—ayes 37, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the semicolon, line 25, page 127, the words "at Bath, Me., $800," and change the total from $23,200 to $24,000.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in behalf of my colleague from the second district, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, who has been called home on account of the death of his mother, and who would, if here, I am sure, urge this amendment. I offer it on behalf of the city of Bath, which has built more ships and done more to maintain the American flag on the seas than any city on either coast of America.

For a great many years the people of Bath have had this office in that city. It has been of great use to the shipmasters who go in there, and to the sailors who ship from that port. It has been said that it cost more to ship a sailor from that port than from some others, but let me say to this House that the sailors who ship from that port are American sailors, and if there is one thing that is American left in the shipping industry of this country, we should retain it. [Applause.]

I am told by the people of Bath that during the shipping season it is necessary to keep the commissioner's office open from 3.30 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night. If this work is transferred to the customhouse, that will not be done and the shipmasters will be discommoded and injured in not being able to procure crews for their ships when they are required upon short notice. If you discontinue this office, the work must be done by some extra help to be employed at the customhouse, and in the end will effect no saving to the Government. I hope, as this adds no extra expense to this important branch of the public service, that this small consideration will be extended to the city of Bath, and that this amendment to the committee bill will be adopted.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The facts with reference to Bath are simply these. They ship and reship fewer seamen from Bath than they do from Gloucester, and every reason that could be urged for the abolishment of the offices at Pascagoula and Gloucester can be urged with equal force against Bath. I regret that the gentleman from Maine, who represents the Bath district, is not present, and I regret that action must be taken during his absence; but, Mr. Chairman, I earnestly insist that the amendment be defeated. And right here I want to direct the attention of the committee to this fact: That a majority of these places stricken down are situated in districts represented by Democrats on this floor, and I repeat what I said a moment ago here—there is no sectionalism in the action we suggest, there is no partisanship in it, your committee agreed upon the proposition that these were wholly unnecessary officers, and I ask that you vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wireless communication: To enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to enforce the act approved June 24, 1910, entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio-communication on certain ocean steamers"; and to employ such persons and means as may be necessary, $7,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 25, at the end of page 128, by striking out the words "seven thousand dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "ten thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 128, line 25, strike out the figures "$7,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendments which were offered a few moments ago and so promptly voted down were all in the interest of particular localities. In this instance it is not a case of asking to save something for my own locality or to secure something for my own locality; what I am asking for here is something solely for the general good.

At present there are employed in the Department of Commerce and Labor three inspectors of wireless-communication facilities aboard vessels leaving American ports. This amendment seeks to provide for an additional inspector. It is the duty of these inspectors to go on board ships before they leave American ports and see that they have the proper wireless apparatus and that it is in proper working order. The three inspectors already provided for are distributed as follows: One in New York, covering that port and New England; one in San Francisco, covering the entire Pacific coast; and one in Baltimore, covering the entire Atlantic coast and Gulf coast from Philadelphia to Galveston. The Department of Commerce and Labor is desirous of securing an additional inspector. I refer you to the hearings and to Mr. Chamberlain's testimony in the hearings, in which he says:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We asked for $10,000 last year, and the estimate was cut down to $7,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. What do you do with that money?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have three wireless inspectors, and we desire four—one for New York, one for the Pacific coast, one for the Gulf ports, and one for the rest of the Atlantic coast, leaving out New York. As a matter of fact, we have had to make one man cover all the territory from Philadelphia to Galveston, and that is too much territory for one man to undertake to cover and really do any work.

Mr. JOHNSON. What do these inspectors do?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They usually go on the vessels immediately before they sail and see that the apparatus is in working order; that the operator is where he can be summoned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in view of the importance of wireless communication, which has been brought most forcibly to our attention by the recent Titanic disaster, that here is a good opportunity to add an extra precaution on behalf of those who travel by sea by employing an additional inspector to see that all vessels clearing our ports are properly equipped with wireless apparatus, as required by law, and that it is in proper working order. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will prevail.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reply to the gentleman that we have given the Commissioner of Navigation the same that he has this year. I am satisfied that a little later an additional sum of money may have to be appropriated for this purpose. Very active work is going on in the matter of wireless telegraphy. The catastrophe of a few days ago has given quite an impetus to it. In the Senate as well as in the House legislation is pending, but until that legislation is passed, until we can see a little further into the future and know a little more definitely how much money is needed, I think it best just to let this provision pass as it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many men are provided for by this appropriation of $7,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Three.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And their work is to inspect the vessels and see that the wireless apparatus is on board and in perfect working order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And those three men do the work for the entire coast line of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I think they do. I am satisfied, as I stated a moment ago, that a little later it will be necessary probably for us to appropriate more money, but let us get a little more light on the subject and know where it ought to be spent.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. By asking him this question: Is it not a fact that the Department of Commerce and Labor, as represented by Mr. Chamberlain, informed the committee that in order to carry on the service properly they should have four inspectors?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. And did he not make that estimate before the Titanic disaster?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think perhaps when this investigation is all over we will have to have more than four. We are willing to appropriate whatever money is needed, but we prefer to allow this legislation to take place and further investigation be had, so as to know how much is needed and to appropriate for it properly and intelligently.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will allow me to state in his time, I have just had a conversation with the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor and I asked him specifically on what part of the coast this additional inspector was needed most, and he said that at the present time the Gulf ports were the ones most neglected, on account of the inspector in charge of that division being in Baltimore. The intention, if this additional inspector is granted, is to assign at least one to the Gulf ports to cover vessels sailing from New Orleans and from other Gulf ports. It seems to me we should be derelict in our duty if we failed to have all the Government requirements carried out in regard to wireless apparatus by failing to provide for a sufficient number of inspectors to properly enforce the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I shall be glad to yield if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] will permit.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, merely to say that I hope this amendment will prevail. I happened to be on the coast not so very long ago. On the southeastern Atlantic, and also as well on the Gulf coast, we are in a very backward condition with regard to our wireless establishment. This is not a large amount. It is simply a small addition in order to make the service a little more efficient, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman, of course, is aware of the fact that the committee of the Senate which has been investigating the Titanic disaster proposes to make recommendations, including, possibly, something in regard to improving the wireless service. Now, does not the gentleman think that in view of the fact that this report is soon to be made and that some legislation will be had touching the wireless service it would be best for Congress to wait until the whole matter can be investigated and something can be done giving effective and substantial relief along the lines the gentleman suggests rather than to appropriate two or three thousand dollars more at this time and then find, after a full investigation, that the money was not wisely appropriated, but that a much larger sum is needed for the development of the service along other lines?

Mr. HOBSON. I think if it were a general proposition and taking up material changes in the wireless system and wireless installations in the country, his contention would hold, but it is merely a question of making more efficient what now exists or what ought now to exist, irrespective of any future development.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think there is a disposition which is universal in the House, as well as at the other end of the Capitol, to enact legislation which will improve this service, and I submit to the gentleman that if we at this time increase this appropriation $2,000 or $3,000, as the gentleman indicates he would like to have done, it may result in simply appropriating the money and no particular benefit be derived from it.

Mr. HOBSON. I think the gentleman will find, if he will look into it, that this is for a specific purpose, namely, merely to facilitate the inspection of wireless service, and of wireless service where it is now most in need of such inspection, namely, on the southeastern Atlantic and the Gulf coasts.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman happen to be familiar with the bill that is already on the calendar, reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to amend the act of 1910 relating to the wireless? It extends quite a good deal the scope of that act.

Mr. HOBSON. I am in favor of it. That was up when I was a member of that committee. I have not examined the details of this bill as it has come in now.

Mr. MANN. It is a new bill.

Mr. HOBSON. I am perfectly aware of the fact that we will continue to reorganize and develop this whole question of wireless, and interference, and all those matters.

Mr. MANN. This law which they seek to have the inspection under now is only two years old.

Mr. HOBSON. Only two years old.

Mr. MANN. And this bill that is reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] proposes to change the law of 1910, quite materially increasing the work.

Mr. HOBSON. I understand that perfectly; but, to be concrete, I was on the coast of North Carolina not long ago and had occasion to speak with the inspector of the life-saving service there, and he pointed out how the great weakness along there was in the wireless system, and he brought that specifically to my attention. He came to me especially to see if it would not be possible to get Congress to lend them a hand to make it more efficient. And this amendment in nowise would interfere with the continuity of the development of that system in some subsequent legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I think the committee itself will realize that an appropriation of $7,000 for the employment of inspectors to look out for the wireless telegraph equipment of vessels along the Atlantic coast line, with its 1,800 miles along the Gulf coast, the Pacific, and the Great Lakes, is insignificant and insufficient for the purpose. It seems almost ridiculous that this great service should be undertaken for any such sum. I question whether even an advance of $3,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], will enable the Department of Commerce and Labor to do much greater work than it does now. But we have reached the time in our maritime experience where it is important and almost vital that we should make every possible provision for the safety of life and property at sea. This very afternoon most of my time has been spent in endeavoring to come to terms with the Navy Department with regard to wireless to be placed upon a ship on which will shortly sail a number of young men to study navigation. We complain of the decadence of the American merchant marine. We offer very few inducements to boys to take up the occupation of a mariner. Now, in the instance of the Titanic we have before us an object lesson of the perils of the sea and of the dangers that confront even those who take cabin passage upon large and magnificent vessels. So that in the matter of a small appropriation like this it would seem we are flying in the face of the wind when we do not take advantage of every opportunity that presents itself to properly equip the vessels that carry human lives.

I hope this amendment will pass. I believe it to be insufficient as it is, but I trust the committee will see the wisdom of meeting the situation that now alarms the people of this country. Let us help to appease the excitement that has prevailed in the last few weeks. Let us give to the people the assurance that those taking passage on transoceanic vessels and those who necessarily must sail before the mast or down with the stokers are protected so far as the Congress of the United States is able to afford protection to them.

This will not interfere with the reports and recommendations that are coming in as the result of the Titanic investigation. It surely is not trespassing upon the Treasury of the United States nor upon any policy of economy to permit the passage of an amendment at this time which will place the paltry sum of $10,000 in the hands of the Department of Commerce and Labor to do the very best it can to safeguard life upon the high sea. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TILSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing investigation of the effects of electric currents upon gas and water pipes, and upon the reenforced foundations of buildings, bridges, and other structures, and for determining methods of discovering and preventing the destructive effects of such currents, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this item in reference to the investigation relating to the effect of electric currents on gas and water pipes, and so forth, reads "for completing the investigation."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What page is that on?

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of page 121. Considering that this subject has been under investigation in all the large cities of the country for a great many years, it is gratifying to think that the investigation now being made in the Bureau of Standards is about to be completed.

I can remember hearing, nearly 20 years ago, a distinguished scientist state that all the gas pipes and water pipes of Chicago would be utterly destroyed by electrolysis in 7 years from that time. It is true that the pipes are still there, and it is true that I read the other day the statement of another eminent scientist that they were now nearly destroyed and would all be gone very shortly. But if it is true that the Bureau of Standards is able to complete this investigation on this subject during the next fiscal year it is very happy news. Do they say they can complete the investigation during the next fiscal year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is so stated on page 757 of the hearings. I asked the director the question about when the work would be completed, and he said it was his plan to finish the investigation with this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of necessary quarters in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere $7,000; for necessary traveling expenses of members of the court and clerk, $330; for books, periodicals, and stationery; for pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees not otherwise specifically provided for; and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $8,000; in all, $15,330.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may hereafter return to the end of this paragraph, in order to permit the submission of an amendment. The amendment which I propose to introduce is to establish a Commerce Court.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] asks unanimous consent that the committee may return hereafter for an amendment to be offered to this paragraph. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims: Chief justice, $6,500; 4 judges, at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,500; assistant clerk, $2,500; bailiff, $1,500; clerks—1 at $1,600, 2 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; stenographer, $1,200; chief messenger, $1,000; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 2 assistant messengers; 2 laborers; 2 charwomen; in all, $56,480.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an observation with reference to the form of the bill.

Gentlemen will all notice, on examining the bill, that the sums in this bill are printed in figures. I do not know how it has occurred to other gentlemen, but I wish to compliment the Committee on Appropriations for making this experiment. While I can see that there may be a slightly greater danger of making typographical errors in formulating a bill like this when the sums are printed in figures instead of in words, yet it not only shortens the bill in length, but fixes it so that the eye catches the sums so easily that I hope the Committee on Appropriations will include this innovation in the other two bills which they have yet to report. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The pay of telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, except those employed in mints and assay offices, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each; for laborers, at the rate of $660 per annum each; assistant telephone-switchboard operators, at the rate of $600 each, and for charwomen, at the rate of $240 per annum each.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We appreciate very much what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said in regard to the manner of printing the bill. I think it is due to the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations to say that he took up this matter with the Public Printer and with some of the Treasury officials of the Government, and ascertained that the chances of making any mistakes by reason of printing the bill in figures instead of in words spelled out were so slight as to be negligible. The committee therefore adopted the suggestion of the clerk, the Public Printer, and other officials who looked into the matter, and we have here an estimate that the cost of printing this bill in figures is $1,107 less than it would have been if the amounts in the bill had been spelled out. I wanted the Committee of the Whole to know that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations deserves most of the credit. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from South Carolina will permit, there have been many occasions when the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations has more than earned his salary, and this is one of those. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say he is the most valuable man in the service of the Government. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing such service, and the heads of departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of making a brief observation and asking the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] a question.

This section just read provides that the appropriations herein made shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing such service and that the heads of departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

In the Post Office appropriation bill passed the other day provision was made whereby in the case of clerks in the Railway Mail Service who were injured they should receive full compensation for the period of one year if entirely incapacitated to perform their work, and, I believe, 50 per cent of their salary for the next year, which is the end of their pay. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee whether the Committee on Appropriations have considered any plan whereby there may be some provision to take care of people who are injured in the public service? I notice in this bill appropriations are made for firemen, watchmen, elevator men, and others who may be considered as being engaged in somewhat hazardous occupations. If anyone is injured, he can not be retained in the service at all under this bill. Where a man is injured in the line of his duty in the service of the Government, inasmuch as it is now demanded, and properly so, that employers throughout the country shall make compensation to their employees who are injured, it seems to me there ought to be some provision for Government employees who are injured. Have the committee considered that at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that that question has not been discussed by the Committee on Appropriations, but this does not prevent the payment of salaries to people who are temporarily unable to discharge the duties of their positions. If they should be permanently injured in the service, then, of course, they would have to come in under some other provision of law—which I believe exists—to secure their compensation.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will permit me, I have in mind a case where a man was permanently injured in the service. His name is H. W. Borden, a railway mail clerk. Here is his own statement:

I entered the postal service in the fall of 1901, and, with the exception of the time that I was compelled to lay off on account of injuries received in accidents while on duty, I have performed regular service.

The first serious accident that I was in occurred on February 14, 1903, at Ravensworth, Va. On account of injuries received in this accident I was compelled to lay off some five or six months. On May 30, 1910, at Sycamore, Va., I was again very seriously injured, from the effects of which I have not as yet fully recovered. In addition to many severe wounds and bruises I sustained double sacro-iliac dislocation and injured hip, which has and is still causing me to use support in the way of crutch and cane while walking or standing. About 18 months after I met with this accident I was given notice by the department I would have to return to road duty or resign, so that my place could be filled. So by not being physically able to return to road duty I was forced out of the service. I must say that rooting is rather bad when one is untrained and physically handicapped. As I was unconscious at the time, I am unable to give you any detailed description of the accident or wrecked car. The car must have been of an inferior type, for all of the 10 clerks on duty were more or less injured, and I am told that the car was completely demolished.

Next to the importance of legislation to prevent as far as possible such disastrous accidents and resultant injuries, the question to provide at least partial relief for those who may suffer a similar fate in the future is decidedly important.

His case would not come under this provision, because he was injured in the Railway Mail Service. He is a helpless, hopeless cripple, injured at his post in the performance of his duty. There ought to be some relief for cases of this kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This law would not apply to him, because he is not provided for in this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that perfectly well. But suppose one of these firemen should be injured. That is a hazardous employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If he were temporarily injured he could be carried under this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Does that rest in the discretion of the head of the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman is a lawyer, and a good lawyer, and can construe the language as well as I can.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And he knows the difference between a temporary and a permanent disability.

Mr. WILLIS. I am simply calling attention to it as a suggestion. I am not offering an amendment. It seems to me there ought to be some provision in the Federal statutes for cases of that kind.

Mr. MANN. I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the last word. This section has a somewhat interesting history, which it may be worth while to refer to.

A good many years ago what they call superannuation became what was then called prevalent in the Government service. Congress, endeavoring to do something, asked the departments how many persons they had in the service over a certain age, and the various departments reported the number of persons over 70 years of age. Every year the heads of departments would report, urging a civil pension or retirement list, each saying that his department had in it a great number of clerks or employees who were incapacitated from the full performance of their work by reason of age. They would make this straight and plain assertion.

Congress finally called the bluff by inserting this provision, directing the heads of departments to enforce the rule that if a person was incapacitated otherwise than temporarily he could not draw the salary of his position. These complaints ceased at once, and from that time to this nobody has been able to find the head of any department who will publicly say that he has in his service any person incapacitated for any reason whatever. That is the only effect that it has. It prevents the heads of departments from shying bricks at Congress. It never has effected the discharge of anybody. It never has effected the promotion of anybody. It never has had any effect whatever upon the service, except to prevent the Secretaries in the Cabinet scolding Congress because it does not provide for these incapacitated persons; and it only has a limited effect in that direction, because while they will not say now that their employees are any of them incapacitated, they still say that they must have a retirement list.

Mr. GILLETT. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that we have now reached a point in the bill where all the other sections are contested. Would it not be well now for the committee to rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I intended to make that motion. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill H. R. 17681, an act making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes. The committee have disagreed to all the Senate amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference thereon. (H. Rept. 669).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments on House bill 17681, the District appropriation bill, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I want to look over the amendments, and for the present I object.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I have just discovered that the bill H. R. 22143 has been placed by mistake on the Union Calendar. It ought to be on the House Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that the change may be made.

Mr. MANN. What bill is it?

Mr. JONES. It is what is known as the bill for Philippine independence.

Mr. MANN. I think it is properly on the Union Calendar.

Mr. JONES. For what reason?

Mr. MANN. Any bill that provides for a disposition of a part of the United States ought to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. JONES. I do not know of any rule of the House that applies to the disposition of territory, but this bill does not appropriate any money, and it seems to me that under the rules of the House it clearly ought to be on the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. If it was a bill disposing of a part of the public domain it should go to the Union Calendar, and when the gentleman proposes to give it away by wholesale it seems to me that the same rule ought to apply. But what difference does it make?

Mr. JONES. So far as I am concerned it makes no difference at all, except that I am anxious that the bill shall be on the proper calendar. If the bill ever comes up in the House, I do not want the question raised. If the Speaker thinks that it is now on the proper calendar, and so rules, that will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not sufficiently familiar with the provisions of that bill to know whether it falls under the rule or not. There are two provisions of the rules that affect the matter. The first is the second subdivision of Rule XIII, which reads as follows:

A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

The second is subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII, which reads as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of the bill has commenced.

It seems to the Chair that if this bill provides for the release of the Philippine Islands, then it would fall under that rule and go to the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Virginia expect to call that bill up to-morrow?

Mr. JONES. I can not say at this time.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS IN THE MISSISSIPPI AND OHIO VALLEYS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the resolution, with Senate amendments, making appropriations for the relief of the flood sufferers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House House joint resolution 312, making appropriations for the relief of sufferers of the floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendments. I wish to say that as this resolution passed the House it carried $277,000 for the Quartermaster's Department and $420,000 for the Commissary General's Department; in all, $697,000. When the resolution was prepared the information was before the Committee on Appropriations that additional money would be required, but the estimates had not at that time been prepared and submitted. The estimates reached Congress before the Senate considered the resolution, and the Senate has amended the resolution so as to insert the amounts that will be required.

One other matter I wish to refer to——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman goes away from that, am I correct in the assumption that after the bill passed the House, in fact only yesterday, the Chief of Engineers received word from points throughout the country that are affected by this proposition upon which he made a new estimate to cover this additional amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The Quartermaster General at the time stated that he knew that he would require $125,000 additional, but the estimate had not been submitted. The Commissary General was not certain as to the amount he would require, and it may be that additional money to that carried here will be required.

Mr. MANN. Is it a fact that yesterday they received telegrams from the flood points throughout the country, upon which they based the estimate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are estimates obtained since the bill passed the House. When the resolution passed the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] made a statement as to the conditions under which the appropriation had been made, and inadvertently I think, put the Committee on Appropriations in a position that might be construed as somewhat hostile, or reluctant, to making the appropriation. The fact is that on April 4 the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] introduced resolutions to appropriate $250,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers. No definite information having been received upon which to base any appropriation, a number of the members of the Committee on Appropriations had a conference, and I conferred with the President of the United States, and there was an understanding that it would be advisable for the President to utilize the supplies and appropriations available for the Army, so as to take care of the immediate necessities until we could ascertain as definitely as possible what would be required to meet the situation. The President on the 5th of April, the day following the conversation, sent a letter to me, and so that there may be a record of what happened, I ask unanimous consent to insert that letter in the RECORD as it explains exactly the relations of the committee and the President to the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 5, 1912.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: As I told you yesterday, by direction of the Secretary of War two officers of the Quartermaster Department have been sent to that part of the Mississippi Valley where floods are reported. We have had telegraphic communication from them, but they have not yet succeeded in reaching Hickman and New Madrid, though they have opened communication with the mayor of the latter town. This is owing to interruption in the railroad traffic and the necessity for proceeding part way by boat.

I write to say that I do not think it wise to make any appropriation for the purpose of buying food and other supplies until these officers reach the ground and give us some idea of the amount needed and the extent of the suffering and destitution.

Meantime, before any appropriation is made, the Secretary of War will not hesitate to use, of the Army supplies, whatever is immediately needed, and I have no doubt that he has near at hand a sufficient amount to relieve such suffering as can be relieved in that way. I shall advise you to-morrow of any further information that we have received.

I inclose a copy of a telegram from Capt. Hegeman for your information.

Sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to disclaim any purpose to either reflect upon the Committee on Appropriations or to fail to give them due credit for what they have done. My only object has been to obtain prompt relief for my distressed constituents. I stated in my remarks on last Saturday when this resolution was passed by the House that when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and I introduced our bills, asking for relief for the flood sufferers, that we followed them to the Committee on Appropriations and made arguments in support of the bills, and further stated that the committee gave us a very courteous hearing. I then stated that this method seemed too slow to meet the emergencies of the occasion and that we went to the President, and he promptly ordered the relief to go to the stricken districts, saying that he would trust Congress to protect him. Now, in stating that I simply meant to say that the necessary and legitimate delays by the Appropriations Committee and Congress in passing the bills and affording relief would be such that great distress would be experienced by the people in my district, many of whom were then suffering and starving, and that I felt that a more prompt remedy was necessary. I did not then know that there had been any correspondence between the Committee on Appropriations and the President upon the subject. I had no thought and no intention of reflecting upon the committee nor any member of it, and I want to state now that the committee has treated us very courteously and very kindly in the consideration of all of our bills for the relief of flood sufferers, for which they have my thanks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I understood that was the gentleman's position. I thought what was done was inadvertent, and I made this statement for two reasons: First, so there would not be any misunderstanding of the committee's position, and, second, to forestall any criticism of the President. The President, after conferring with many interested, acted as he did, and it was understood that in acting as he did he was acting without authority; but after a conference there was an understanding that, in view of the emergency, that nobody would criticize his action, but that legislation would follow as speedily as necessary to supply the funds that would be used.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? This is one of those cases where the gentleman advised the President to do an illegal act, and everybody agreed that it was the duty of the President to do that act which probably was illegal, certainly without authority.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think it is only fair to say that the committee informally, without coming to an actual vote, came to a conclusion in regard to the matter, and as a result of that conclusion the chairman not only saw the President, but I myself, knowing somewhat of the situation in the Ohio and Mississippi country, saw the President, and it was as a result of that complete understanding between the legislative branch and the Executive that this money was paid out as the demands required.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the committee had no authority——

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably not.

Mr. MANN. It was a question where everybody agreed the law did not provide for it——

Mr. SHERLEY. And the fact is, as practical men we dealt with a practical situation.

Mr. MANN. And properly.

Mr. SHERLEY. And properly so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there is no desire to leave the record so that it might justify an unfair criticism of the President. It is one of those occasions where everybody, the executive department and the legislative department, were in accord.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, when I read what the gentleman had done in connection with what the President was going to do, I said to myself, both gentlemen are acting wisely, as usual. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request to concur in the Senate amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks on the provision in the bill relating to the audit in the Department of Justice a letter which I received from the Attorney General, and the reply which I have sent him to-day, throwing some light upon the purpose of the provision.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks leave to print in the RECORD the letters indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 2) requesting that the Sixty-second Congress of the United States submit to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that whenever two-thirds of both Houses of Congress shall deem it necessary Congress shall propose amendments to the Constitution, or, on application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments; and

Whereas the legislatures of 29 States have applied to the Congress of the United States for the submission to the States of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That the Sixty-second Congress of the United States is requested, and by this resolution application is made, by the Legislature of the State of Arizona to the Congress of the United States in its Sixty-second session to submit to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be certified by the chief clerk of the house and the secretary of the senate to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States.

M. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.
SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

We, B. F. Thum, chief clerk of the House of Representatives, and J. M. McCollum, secretary of the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, now in session, do hereby, severally, certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of senate joint resolution No. 2, and of the whole thereof, as adopted by the Legislature of said State of Arizona.

Witness our hands this 2d day of May, 1912.

B. F. THUM,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.
J. M. MCCOLLUM,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present a protest from certain citizens of my State against the immigration bill recently passed. I wish to call attention to one statement:

The Dillingham bill, in addition to a literacy test, provides in section 18 thereof that all immigrants be required to carry with them a certificate of identity.

I merely desire to say that that is not the case. No such requirement is made by the proposed law. Section 18 requires for statistical purposes that certain statements be taken from the immigrant. He is furnished with a duplicate of that in case he wishes to leave the country and return. There is no requirement of a certificate of identification in it.

As the protest is printed, I thought this error might be repeated in other protests, and I wished therefore to call attention to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of George C. Evan, of Jefferson, N. H., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, yesterday I presented certain telegrams and letters in favor of the Owen medical bill. I asked that certain of those telegrams be printed in the RECORD. There was evidently a misunderstanding about it, and they were not printed in the RECORD. So I will ask that the telegrams be procured which were signed by Mrs. O. G. Ellis, chairman food sanitation committee, Washington State Federated Clubs of Olympia; E. F. Chase, secretary Yakima County Medical Society, of North Yakima; R. W. PISEK, N. DAK., May 7, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The passing of the Bourne parcel-post bill or any such measure I most emphatically protest. The pay roll of additional employees thereby created will form a deficit beyond comprehension, and so will be transportation on the parcel. The whole public will have to bear this incomprehensible deficit, while the benefit will not be general. I implore your best ability to oppose the passage of this bill.

A. ARUMRICH.

NORTHWOOD, N. DAK., May 7, 1912.

Senator GRONNA, Washington, D. C.:

As a retail dealer I most emphatically protest against the passage of the Bourne parcel-post bill, and against any parcel-post legislation until Congress has given the matter thorough investigation as to how it would affect our business conditions. I believe it would prove a great handicap to retailers.

MINOT, N. DAK., May 7, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senator A. J. GRONNA,

WAHPETON, N. DAK., May 7, 1912.

Senator A. J. GRONNA, Washington, D. C.:

No doubt you realize the importance of the Bourne general parcel-post bill. We sincerely ask that you consider carefully the danger which would arise, should this bill be passed, and will use your influence in opposition to it. It will create an enormous deficit and horde of additional employees.

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., May 6, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA, Washington, D. C.:

PEARCE, ARIZ., May 3, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to call your attention to the fact that the Owen bill, establishing a public health bureau, will work to the advantage of all the people and not as Senator WORKS and other opponents claim—that it favors any certain cult or ism of medical science. It will not in any way interfere with the various State laws regulating the practice of medicine, so all the arguments of its opponents fall flat.

I trust you may give the bill your hearty support. I am,

Yours, very truly,

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 23, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,

Can you see your way clear to oppose the enactment into law of the proposed Owen public health service bill? This bill is but an entering wedge for medical legislation that would eventually rob the people of individual rights, and it should be defeated in infancy. A referendum vote would kill it.

TUCSON, ARIZ., May 3, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Will highly appreciate your best efforts to protect Christian Science practice against Owen medical bill. It is un-American to legislate against our religious freedom, and it should be our privilege as individuals to seek relief from our ills by choosing either him who prescribes pills the size of horse beans or the one who issues them the size of pearl sago, dissolved in a gallon of water, or, as Christian Scientist, be permitted to seek relief through Him with whom all things are possible, in accordance with our religious belief.

BISBEE, ARIZ., May 2, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,

EMERGENCY CROPS ON OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. BURNHAM. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 6658) to provide for emergency crops on overflowed lands in the south Mississippi Valley, and I submit a report (No. 707) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] to the bill.

Mr. THORNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty"; in line 6, before the word "Mississippi," to strike out "south"; in the same line, after the word "Valley," to strike out the words "by extending the farmers' cooperative demonstration work of the Bureau of Plant Industry, the purchase and distribution of suitable seed, and all other necessary expenses," and insert "to be expended by the Department of Agriculture"; in line 9, before the word "employment" to insert the word "temporary"; and in line 10, after the word "assistants," at the end of the bill and before the period, to insert a comma and the words "and for the payment of all other necessary expenses during the present emergency," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to meet the crop emergency in the overflowed lands of the Mississippi Valley, to be expended by the Department of Agriculture for the temporary employment of local agents, experts, and assistants, and for the payment of all other necessary expenses during the present emergency.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for emergency crops on overflowed lands in the Mississippi Valley."

JOHN W. MORSE.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 2356) for the relief of John W. Morse, and I submit a report (No. 708) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the report be read.

Mr. LODGE. The report is very long, because it contains all the items. I can state it in a moment.

Nearly two years ago Senators may remember that a pay clerk named Lee robbed the safe of a paymaster on one of our ships in Cuba, I think at Guantanamo or Habana. The amount taken was over $50,000. A court of inquiry exonerated the paymaster and held that he had taken every possible precaution and the loss was in nowise due to him.

The bill was introduced more than a year ago. Since that time Lee has been arrested and $26,000 has been recovered, but $17,000 still stands on the books of the Treasury debited to the paymaster. Of course, he can not receive his pay unless that debit is changed on the books. It has always been done in similar cases. The bill is recommended by the department.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. LODGE. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if these disbursing officers give any bond or security of any kind?

Mr. LODGE. The paymaster gives a bond.

Mr. BRISTOW. But does the clerk who handles the money?

Mr. LODGE. The clerk has the paymaster's responsibility.

Mr. BRISTOW. Did he take a bond from the clerk?

Mr. LODGE. I think not. He had no bond from the clerk at all. There is no possibility whatever of his recovering the money from the clerk.

Mr. BRISTOW. Are clerks of paymasters under bond in any way?

Mr. LODGE. Not to my knowledge. They do not handle the money. All the money is in the hands of the paymaster. This man broke the safe and took the money out of the safe during the absence of the paymaster. The court of inquiry investigated it very thoroughly and exonerated the paymaster entirely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-six" and insert "seventeen"; in line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "eight"; in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ninety-one" and insert "thirty-eight"; and in line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "twenty-eight," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Paymaster John W. Morse, United States Navy, the sum of $17,838.28, being the amount stolen from United States funds by Pay Clerk Edward V. Lee, United States Navy, and charged against the accounts of the said John W. Morse, paymaster, on the books of the Treasury Department.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the report may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the RECORD?

Mr. LODGE. I think it had better be printed as a report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not in the RECORD?

Mr. LODGE. Not in the RECORD, but as a report. It may be necessary for reference in the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed under the rule.

RELIEF OF ENLISTED MEN OF U. S. S. "GEORGIA."

Mr. CLAPP. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5362) to reimburse the enlisted men of the U. S. S. Georgia who suffered loss through the defalcation of Paymaster's Clerk Edward V. Lee (S. Rept. 709), and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the several enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps then attached to the U. S. S. Georgia the respective sums of money placed by said enlisted men on deposit for safe-keeping with the pay officer of said ship, as permitted by article 1331 of the Navy Regulations, which said sums were stolen on February 10 or 11, 1911, by one Edward V. Lee, clerk to said pay officer; and the sum of $4,300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to make an inquiry about the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. It involves the same case as the bill which was just passed. These seamen had a certain sum, amounting, in the aggregate, to a little over $4,000, in the safe which was broken into. The object of the bill is to reimburse them.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should the Government repay them? It was their money.

Mr. CLAPP. I think it is a most meritorious bill. The Government encourages on the part of these sailors the habit of depositing their money, and in this particular instance the safe was burglarized. It is a small amount, comparatively. I think it would be very unfortunate if these sailors should lose it.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is unfortunate for any man to be robbed, but I do not think the Government ought to reimburse every man whose pocket happens to be picked or safe happens to be burglarized.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think so either, but here is a class of men the Government is particularly anxious to encourage in the habit of keeping their savings and making their deposits on shipboard.

Mr. LODGE. There are regulations and provisions, I think, by the Government for taking care of the seamen's money.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM (S. DOC. NO. 651).

Mr. OWEN. I present a memorial by C. F. Taylor, editor of the Equity Series, on the initiative and referendum and the fundamental error in the reasoning set forth in the argument found in certain Senate documents. I ask that the memorial be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO ARBITRATION TREATIES (S. DOC. NO. 654).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an article which appeared in the North American Review for the current month of May by the senior Senator from Georgia, Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, on the subject of the Senate amendments to the arbitration treaties. I will submit the article later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be entered as requested.

BILLS OF LADING (S. DOC. NO. 650).

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, United States Senate, Sixty-second Congress, on the bill (S. 4713) relating to bills of lading in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and the bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading, being parts 1, 2, and 3, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 5602. An act authorizing the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the corporation on lots Nos. 3 and 4, block No. 114, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE BIG SANDY RIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6167) to authorize the Williamson & Pond Creek Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, Mingo County, W. Va., which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "railroad"; and on page 1, line 8, after "at," to insert "a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections when we shall have a report on the Lorimer case?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope by the end of this week the report will be completed. It is in a good state of progress. We have devoted a great deal of time to it in order to condense the information and get it in presentable form. I expect we shall be able to complete the report during the present week.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the inquiry because it has been now three months to-day, if I remember rightly, since the hearings closed, or since the case was closed. Senators have had the abstract of evidence for many weeks. The session is approaching summer, and I do not think the Senate should adjourn without action on this case. It seems to me—a year practically has now passed since the case was referred to the committee—that we should have had a report sooner, and I had in mind a motion asking the committee to make a report not later than Monday next. I believe I will make that motion. I move that the Senate request the Committee on Privileges and Elections to file its report in the Lorimer case not later than Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be requested to make the report in the Lorimer case on or before Monday next.

Mr. CULBERSON. We have been unable on this side of the Chamber to hear the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I should like to ask him to repeat substantially his statement, if he will do so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have no apologies whatever to make for any delay there has been in filing the report in the Lorimer case. True it is, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has said, that case was referred to our committee nearly a year ago. The committee has substantially devoted five months—of course, with interruptions—to the investigation. One hundred and two full working days were given to public hearings in that case and over 180 different witnesses were summoned and examined before the committee. In addition to that, a large volume of documentary evidence was received. That evidence was printed and it has been presented to the Senate in eight volumes, containing nearly 9,000 pages of testimony. After the hearings closed, time was given to counsel to file briefs in the case, first, with respect to the law, and, secondly, with respect to the facts. Those briefs were filed probably six weeks ago, more or less; I do not know. I did not attempt to take up the work of drawing a report until the briefs were filed. Then I was called away from the city twice, once on public business and once for the same reason that almost every Senator has left the Chamber and has left the city during the present session. Other members of the committee have been out of the city. It has been almost impossible to bring them together for a consideration of certain questions that needed to be considered. I have devoted more work to the affairs of the Senate this winter than I ever did in any previous winter in my experience here. I have worked evenings as well as days.

As I said when I began, I have no apologies to offer for any delay there has been in making the report. The report has been enormously expensive to the Government; it has been made upon newly discovered evidence, so called; it has required a great deal of time to go through these volumes, to harmonize the testimony of different witnesses, to eliminate that which seemed to be false, to reach the kernel of the truth, and try to present it to the Senate.

I do not relish the criticism that came from the Senator from Kansas; I do not accept it as rebuke. I read in the Chicago Tribune of the 30th of April that some movement of this kind was to be taken; I have been expecting it since that time. I say now that the work of drawing the report is well advanced. The majority of the committee are holding meetings twice and three times a week, and last night were together until nearly midnight in connection with this work. If it has come to that in this Senate, that men who like to stand for character in a matter of this importance are to be criticized for delay, I must submit; but I want to say for the committee that has been back of me—if I do not say it for myself—that I have never heard a suggestion of delay. I do not think that the thought has ever entered the mind of any member of the committee that there has ever been any purpose to delay its report beyond a point where it was necessary to go in order to present an intelligent report to this body. The charge that there is an intention of throwing the matter over until next winter is false. The Senate can do what they please about this motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I beg pardon of the Senator from Texas. I said in opening—and I forgot to repeat it in answer to his inquiry—that the report is so far advanced that I expected it would be completed during the present week.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas was not directed to the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as I understand; but I want to say on behalf of the minority that their report is ready. There are, however, no rules of the Senate, as I understand, by which a minority report can be filed.

Without any spirit of criticism of the record in this case, the dates would seem to indicate that a report ought soon to be filed. The investigation was ordered on June 7, 1911; hearings were commenced on June 20, 1911, and were closed on February 9, 1912; briefs on the law were to be filed by March 1; briefs on the facts by March 15; and the last brief was filed on March 17. It is, therefore, three months since the testimony closed and 52 days since the last brief was filed. It would seem that some time ought to be fixed for a report—not any immediate time, if more time is necessary—but simply that some time ought to be fixed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Under what rule of this body does the document denominated a "minority report" come?

Mr. KENYON. I understand that it is merely a presentation of the views of the minority.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not provided for by any rule of this body, nor is it recognized otherwise, and it should not be. The majority of a committee is the committee. I merely make that suggestion. I hope the time is close at hand when these documents called "minority reports" will pass out of existence.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think they will pass out in the Senator's time or mine.

Mr. HEYBURN. They may.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] seemed to exhibit some warmth in replying to a suggestion that I had made. I do not care to criticize the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I do feel that there should be action in this case. It has been pending for practically a year. The taking of evidence was closed three months since, and we are advised now that the minority of the committee, who hold different views from the majority, are ready to submit their views. So it seems to me that the Senate is entitled to have the views of the majority as well.

The action I took this morning was taken because I believed the report ought to be made; but upon the statement made by the Senator from Vermont that probably his report will be filed during the week, I will withdraw the motion and not press it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his motion.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a resolution which I desire to offer. I will simply suggest that, in my individual opinion, the time has come when the Senate ought to meet at 12 o'clock and diligently work with a view to final adjournment at some reasonable time during the year. I offer the resolution that I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the Senate shall be 12 o'clock noon.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

RETRIAL OF MILITARY ACADEMY CADETS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, yesterday I objected to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 99 because it did not cover the case of a Kansas cadet, whose name I was informed would be included. Since that time I have carefully looked into the case, and while I find that the cadets included by the joint resolution were dismissed for committing the same offense as the cadet I had in mind, they were tried at a different time, and the bill would not assist the cadet living in the State of Kansas. I therefore withdraw my objection and hope the Senate will give unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which, on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before action is taken on the joint resolution I should like the Senator having it in charge to tell just what offense these young men committed. I recall the fact that, perhaps, two or three years ago we restored some young men, I think, to the Naval Academy, by act of Congress, and there was very severe criticism of that action; in fact, it was stated to me by some of the officers of that academy that it greatly demoralized the academy and was a great detriment to the service. I have not had time to look at the report in this case, if there is any, but I should like a brief statement made as to the real offense or offenses committed by these young men.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before the statement is made by the chairman of the committee, I desire to explain to the Senate why I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The joint resolution was taken up yesterday, and would have passed but for the objection which I made. I made the objection because the joint resolution did not include a cadet who had been dismissed from the academy, and who lived in the State of Kansas, whom I had expected would be included in the provisions of the joint resolution. After looking up the case, I have found that it would do no good to include him in this joint resolution, because no relief could be given; and I thought it only proper, therefore, to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, inasmuch as it had gone over yesterday upon my objection.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the old regulations of the Military Academy, among other things, provided as follows:

No cadet shall drink any spirituous or intoxicating liquor, or bring or cause the same to be brought within the cadet limits, or have the same in his room, tent, or otherwise in his possession, upon pain of being dismissed the service.

It will be observed that this is a very stringent regulation and that it goes very far. The new regulations which were approved by the Secretary of War on the 15th of June last, and as such have the force of law, provide as follows:

Cadets who shall drink or be found under the influence of intoxicating liquor, or bring or cause the same to be brought within the cadet limits, or have the same in their rooms, tents, or otherwise in their possession, shall be dismissed the service or otherwise less severely punished.

The idea of the new regulations was to discriminate between a man who might have taken a glass of beer, for example, without affecting him in any respect, and a man who might have taken liquor to such an extent as to be disorderly or otherwise misconduct or disgrace himself.

As to the facts in connection with these four cadets, it appears that the Corps of Cadets was on a practice march; that is to say, they marched a number of miles into the country, went into camp, and the following day marched back to the academy. This was in the line of their military instruction. It appears that after having marched away from West Point and had gone into camp, several of the cadets walked about in the neighborhood.

The cases of three of those mentioned in the joint resolution are very fresh in my recollection. They stopped at a country store and asked for a soft drink of some kind, ginger ale or other nonalcoholic beverage, and that not being procurable, they drank a glass or two of blackberry wine. That was their offense. The fourth had a phial of some sort of intoxicating liquor in his coat pocket, which he had not tasted. It was a very small quantity, a quarter of a pint or something of that kind, and he had not himself tasted any of the liquor.

Now, in addition to that I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire these four cadets were not detected in their violations of the regulations. They were known to have been walking out beyond the limits of the camp, and they were asked the question whether they had seen any cadets drink or have intoxicating liquor in their possession. They declined to answer the question on the ground that it would incriminate them. Two who had been together, each seeing the other take a glass of wine, declined to answer the question on the ground that it would incriminate them, but being ordered by the superintendent, Gen. Barry, to answer the question, each then stated under protest that he had seen his companion take a glass of wine. On this evidence they were ordered before the court-martial and dismissed the service, on the ground that the court could not impose any other punishment under the regulation which I have read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me see the new regulation.

Mr. DU PONT. The law has been changed.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator tell us the date when the law was changed?

Mr. DU PONT. I will with great pleasure. The old regulations were changed on the 15th of June last, and the new regulations were promulgated to the Corps of Cadets on the 1st of September. The cadets were tried before the promulgation of the new regulations.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question that these young men did violate the existing regulation?

Mr. DU PONT. There is no question as to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in the habit of following committees; that is my usual custom; and inasmuch as these new regulations have been agreed to since that time and a less severe punishment may be inflicted upon violators of the law or the regulation, I am not going to insist upon any objection.

I will go only to this extent: I want the privilege of voting against the bill, because I believe it is bad legislation.

Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice the regulations were approved June 15 and were not shipped by the Public Printer to the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point until the 29th of August.

Mr. DU PONT. That is the case as I have stated it.

Mr. BACON. This is a discussion in which we are all interested, but of the conversation among the group of Senators who have lately been speaking we have not heard any part.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to know of the Senator whether it is to be the policy of the Military Committee to authorize a rehearing in cases of dismissal for offenses of this character.

The reason I ask the question is that some two years ago a widow's son from my State, a cadet at Annapolis, took a drink of liquor once and once only and was dismissed from the academy. Every effort was made to have the circumstance overlooked, and it was appealed to the President of the United States, but failure was the result, and if this is to be the policy that is to be adopted I think a case of that kind ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. SWANSON. The distinction between that case and this is that the young men were tried in August. They had not then promulgated this order imposing a less penalty than dismissal. If the court-martial had known that, they would not have recommended dismissal. The question is whether they should not have been tried under the new rule.

Mr. LODGE. When was the offense committed?

Mr. DU PONT. I have charge of the bill, and I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts. The trial took place on the 16th day of August.

Mr. LODGE. I know that. What I want to get at is the date of the offense.

Mr. DU PONT. The date of the offense was about the 1st of August.

Mr. LODGE. The 1st of August?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. At the time the new regulation had been approved and was in force.

Mr. SMOOT. But the cadets did not know that.

Mr. LODGE. It did not make any difference whether the cadets knew it or not.

Mr. DU PONT. It was actually the law, but it had not been promulgated, but when Gen. Barry convened the general court-martial he was aware of it, inasmuch as he had prepared the new regulations, and he knew that they had been approved by the Secretary of War, but he did not inform the president of the general court-martial to that effect, and allowed these men to act without knowledge of the change in law, and then approved the dismissal of the cadets.

Mr. LODGE. The court-martial, then, acted under the belief that they were required by the regulations to impose a sentence of dismissal?

Mr. DU PONT. It did.

Mr. LODGE. Whereas, as a matter of fact, if they had known that they had power to impose a less sentence, they would have done it.

Mr. DU PONT. A very large proportion of the court recommended them to clemency, and that the sentence be modified, as it was shown that the offense was not serious.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the report of the commandant of West Point, Gen. Barry, on this matter?

Mr. DU PONT. Gen. Barry approved of their being dismissed, and said it was necessary to enforce the regulations of the academy in the interest of discipline.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DU PONT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, that I declined to join in the report in favor of this bill. I do not think it is policy to relinquish the discipline. The cadets knew they were violating the laws of the academy, and I do not think any relinquishment of discipline that would tend young Army officers from indulging in intoxicating liquors should be recognized by the American Congress. An Army officer should not be addicted to the habit of using intoxicants; his responsibilities are too great; and I do not want to cast my vote in behalf of this measure influenced by sympathy for the relatives of these young men; and I take this opportunity to express my views, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I cordially concur with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] in thinking that nothing should be done to put the stamp of approval by Congress of intemperance or of the undue use of intoxicating liquors, but the mere fact that a cadet has been shown to drink a glass of beer I do not think warrants his being dismissed from the academy and have the stigma of drunkenness put upon him and his family and his whole military career ruined by a small offense of this kind. In all such serious matters every enlightened code of justice discriminates between offenses of greater or less gravity.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DU PONT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Delaware will permit me to make a short statement.

Mr. President, I have an interest in this matter, because one of these young men comes from my State. I have been unable to hear the presentation which has been made by the Senator from Delaware, and therefore if I repeat anything he said I may be excused. I want to make a short statement of the case as I know it.

The offense of these two young men—and I want to ask the Senator from Kansas to hear what I am saying now—was a very minor offense. If they had been guilty of drinking liquor to excess, or even if they had been drinking any strong liquor, it would be a different case from what it is. The fact is on a walk these young men at a wayside inn took a little domestic wine—homemade wine—and after they had gotten that wine they were joined or came into contact in some way with some officers who had arrested some other young men who had been guilty of an infraction of the rules in regard to the same matter.

They were not intoxicated in the least, and there was no suspicion, even on the part of the officers, that they had taken a drink, and it was only the fact that they were interrogated about these others—I think it was anyhow some side issue—that they themselves inquired of as to whether or not they had taken a drink stated that they had. They were in the company of officers immediately after, and the officers never suspected it, and it was not anything like intoxication. There was no drinking of whisky or any distilled liquor. There was no drinking of wine of any strength. There was some little domestic wine gotten at the wayside house.

I state that fact to differentiate it from the case the Senator from Kansas has in his mind when he speaks of officers or cadets who have been guilty of violating the rules in regard to drinking intoxicating liquors. It is not of that class.

Now, the particular point I want to call attention to is this: Without repeating what I heard the Senator from Delaware state, these officers who sat upon the court were not informed of this fact of the change in the rule.

But I am not going into that because it has been fully stated, and I heard that much about it. But there is another fact, and I do not know whether it was stated by the Senator from Delaware, which is this: We, of course, have had this matter under consideration and have been in consultation with officers of the department and with the President for some time, and it was finally determined that the department should communicate with the officers who sat upon the trial of the case to ascertain whether or not they would have acted otherwise than they did if they had known of this new regulation. I do not think I am violating confidence when I say that before that reference to these officers was made the statement was made to us that if the officers still said that if they had known the regulations they would have imposed the same sentence, that that would be the end of it. The department communicated with these officers, and the information which the War Department secured from these officers was to the effect that had that change of regulation been known their action would have been different.

It is upon that basis that this bill has been introduced, not with reference to what they have done, not to set aside what they have done, but to reconvene the same court, the same officers, and have them under the law as it then existed, but of which they were then in ignorance, but with their present knowledge of the law again pass upon the case.

It does not reverse what they have done. It does not set aside what they have done. It just puts it in their possession to again hear the case with full knowledge of the law. That is all. And if they after hearing it say that these young men shall not be returned that is the end of the matter. That is all there is to it.

Mr. ROOT. May I inquire whether there is any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. DU PONT. There has been no report made for the reason that it was believed that the joint resolution set forth the facts in sufficient detail.

Mr. BACON. I do not think it is improper to state that a conference was had between Senators representing the four States from which the cadets came, and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War.

The statement was made by Senators that unless it was a matter which would be in entire harmony with the views of the Secretary of War we would not press it. It was finally suggested that that course should be taken and that the matter should, by the Secretary of War, again be brought to the attention of the officers composing this court, and the result is such as I have stated.

I repeat, the joint resolution does not set aside the finding of that court. It does not commit it to another court. In view of the fact that the officers who composed that court were not then apprised of the new order, it simply provides that they shall again hear the case with a knowledge of the law as it exists, and with full right and power to determine what shall be done, as much so as if it had been the original trial.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DU PONT. I will yield to the Senator from New York in one moment. I should like to say that I agree absolutely with the Senator from Georgia in his conclusion, but I think one statement he made was not quite accurate. The joint resolution provides that the court is to reconvene not to reconsider the case, but to reconsider the sentence and simply take the sentence into consideration, not to hear testimony again.

Mr. BACON. That is rather a distinction without a difference.

Mr. DU PONT. In my judgment there is a difference between that and the reopening the whole of the findings. The court-martial is only to reconsider the sentence.

Mr. BACON. I did not intend by what I said to indicate other than what the Senator now says.

Mr. DU PONT. That is what I supposed. I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I am not so much concerned with the question of the sentence upon these particular individuals as I am for the discipline of the Military Academy. Nothing can be worse than for Congress to interfere with discipline in the Military and Naval Academies. I think if we are going to act here—and I am willing to vote for the joint resolution on the statements which have been made—we ought to have those statements in such form that it will remain of record and be a part of the precedent which is established, so that this may never be perverted to a precedent for an interference in the discipline of the academy. Without a record, without a report which gives the evidence that the court was misled by their ignorance of the law, this would stand upon our record as being merely an attempt on the part of Congress to bring about an amelioration of the action of the authorities charged with maintaining discipline. I am not willing to vote for any action which may seem to set such a precedent.

I can well remember being in conversation with a gentleman in charge of one of the institutions in Europe corresponding to West Point, and being told, "Ah, we can not maintain discipline as you can, because whenever a young man is involved in charges of infractions of discipline some powerful influence comes in to prevent his being dealt with as is necessary for the discipline of the institution." For more than a hundred years we have kept these institutions free from any interference, either of politics or of personal influence, and if we are to interfere now and provide for a new trial or the opportunity for a new sentence for these young men, let us have a record which makes it clear that we are not establishing a precedent of congressional interference with the action of the regularly constituted authorities of the academy.

Mr. BACON and Mr. SWANSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware still holds the floor. Does the Senator from Delaware yield, and to whom?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Virginia if he desires to go on.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I entirely agree with what is said by the Senator from New York as to the importance of doing nothing which will impair the efficiency of discipline at the Military Academy. If this were a bill to set aside the finding of the court, I myself would vote against it, because of the fact that I think it would be better that an injustice should be done to some one than that the utter discipline of the academy should be destroyed. I recognize the fact that if Congress by legislation interferes to the effect of setting aside the judgments of courts-martial as to matters concerning the cadets it would absolutely destroy discipline. But there is nothing here which looks in that direction at all.

The only suggestion I would make to the Senator from New York is somewhat twofold. One is that the debates we have had set out the facts, and the other is that if it is insisted upon I have no doubt the Senator from Delaware will file a report which will set out the facts. But I do not think that that should necessarily interfere with the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Delaware will permit me, I suggest to him that he ask leave to file a report in this case. I think that important.

Mr. DU PONT. I was just about to make such a request on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, that it be permitted to file a supplemental report upon the joint resolution. Then the report will be on the files of the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware has yielded to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know that the Senator from Delaware can parcel out the time in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can not parcel out the time, but he still has the floor, and he can yield the floor to any Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield to the Senator from Virginia. Having addressed the Chair first, it is for me to yield; it is not for the Senator from Delaware.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from Delaware still has the floor, and he has yielded. No objection has been made to that course.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait until the Senator from Delaware yields the floor.

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Virginia, who has been waiting for some time to be heard.

Mr. SWANSON. I thank the Senator from Delaware.

It seems to me this case presents an absolute act of justice. Here were young men who committed an offense which at that time did not make them liable absolutely to expulsion. They were tried by a court-martial in August, when the court had a right to consider whether they should be expelled or not. It seems to me there is involved in this case an absolute act of justice that Congress ought willingly to concede to these young men. It is not impairing the discipline, it is enforcing the discipline and law prevailing at West Point. If the law at that time, as applied to West Point, was that the court-martial could either expel or reprimand for the offense, and if that fact was not considered by the court-martial, and they thought they were able to do nothing except to expel, discipline and law at West Point were not enforced. All that the joint resolution does is to give the court-martial an opportunity to administer the law and regulations that existed at West Point at the time the offenses were committed and at the time they were tried.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kansas, who is now asking recognition?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia, by permission of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DU PONT. Very well; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia if these cadets did not know that they were violating the regulations of the academy when they committed the offense?

Mr. SWANSON. I will answer that I have no doubt they knew it, but whether it was known or unknown they are liable to the regulations fixed under the law for the government of the academy. The authorities at the academy tried them under a law and regulation which did not exist; that had been changed. It was changed on the 15th of June and they were tried in August. Congress is asked to provide that justice shall be administered to them according to the discipline and the rules and regulations that were existing at that time. That is all that is asked in the joint resolution. We are not reinstating the cadets. We are simply carrying out the rules and regulations and letting the court-martial consider the regulations that existed at the time of the trial.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why has there not been a request for a recommendation from the Secretary of War in regard to this measure, as is the usual custom?

Mr. DU PONT. This matter was taken up by the Senators from the four States. It so happened that the four cadets who were tried came from four separate States. The Senators from those States went to the President and sought an interview with him, as he was the person directly concerned, it being an Executive act. The Secretary of War had nothing to do with it. The interview with the President was largely verbal and the statements were verbal, after which the joint resolution was introduced, and I think I am violating no confidence in saying the President of the United States had informed us that he doubted whether substantial justice had been done, and that he would authorize the Secretary of War to communicate with the members of the court-martial and to ascertain whether at the time they imposed the sentence they knew or believed they had a right to impose a lesser penalty under the regulations. We were verbally informed, not as members of any Senate committee, but as independent Senators, that the members of the court-martial had informed the Secretary of War that they were ignorant of such fact, whereupon the President repeated the statement as to his doubts whether substantial justice had been done in the cases of these cadets, and informed us that the matter could only be remedied by Congress. Now we have come to Congress to this end, with the joint resolution which was prepared by the Judge Advocate of the Army, introduced in the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, who directed that it be reported back favorably.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.
